CONCLUSION: [Click&type]

Fair Credit Reporting Act[1]

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA)[2] became effective on April 25, 1971. The FCRA is a part of a group of acts contained in the Federal Consumer Credit Protection Act[3] such as the Truth in Lending Act and the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act.

Congress substantively amended the FCRA upon the passage of the Fair and Accurate Credit Transactions Act of 2003 (FACT Act).[4] The FACT Act created many new responsibilities for consumer reporting agencies and users of consumer reports. It contained many new consumer disclosure requirements as well as provisions to address identity theft. In addition, it provided free annual consumer report rights for consumers and improved access to consumer report information to help increase the accuracy of data in the consumer reporting system.

In 2010, Congress passed the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (Dodd-Frank Act), which granted rule-making authority under FCRA (except for Section 615(e) (red flag guidelines and regulation) and Section 628 (disposal of records)) to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB). The Dodd-Frank Act also amended two provisions of the FCRA to require the disclosure of a credit score and related information when a credit score is used in taking an adverse action or in risk-based pricing.[5] [6]

On December 21, 2011, the CFPB restated FCRA regulations under its authority at 12 CFR Part 1022 (76 Fed. Reg. 79308).

[5] Section 1029 of the Dodd-Frank Act generally excludes from this transfer of authority, subject to certain exceptions, any rulemaking authority over a motor vehicle dealer that is predominantly engage in the sale and servicing of motor vehicles, the leasing and servicing of motor vehicles, or both.

[6] The agency responsible for supervising and enforcing compliance with the provisions of the FCRA and the implementing regulations will depend on the person subject to the FCRA (e.g., for financial institutions, jurisdiction will depend on the size and charter of the institution).

The FCRA contains responsibilities both for entities that are consumer reporting agencies and for persons that operate in any of the following capacities:

1. Procurers and users of information (for example, as credit grantors, purchasers of dealer paper, or when opening deposit accounts);
2. Furnishers and transmitters of information (by reporting information to consumer reporting agencies, other third parties, or to affiliates);
3. Marketers of credit or insurance products; and
4. Employers.

Structure and Overview of Examination Modules

The examination procedures are structured as a series of modules, grouping similar requirements together.[7] The modules contain general information about each of the requirements:

Module 1	Obtaining Consumer Reports
Module 2	Obtaining Information and Sharing Among Affiliates
Module 3	Disclosures to Consumers and Miscellaneous Requirements
Module 4	Furnishers of Information
Module 5	Consumer Alerts and Identity Theft Protections

Financial institutions and other persons are subject to a number of different requirements under the FCRA; some are contained directly in the statute, while others are in 12 CFR 1022.

Key Definitions

The FCRA uses a number of definitions. Key definitions include the following:

Adverse Action. With regard to credit transactions, the term "adverse action" has the same meaning as used in Section 701(d)(6) [15 U.S.C. 1691(d)(6)] of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA), Regulation B, and the official staff commentary. Under the ECOA, it means a denial or revocation of credit, a change in the terms of an existing credit arrangement, or a refusal to grant credit in substantially the same amount or on terms substantially similar to those requested. Under the ECOA, the term does not include a refusal to extend additional credit under an existing credit arrangement where the applicant is delinquent or otherwise in default, or where such additional credit would exceed a previously established credit limit.

[7] The examination procedures do not currently contain a module on the requirements for consumer reporting agencies.

For non-credit transactions, the term has the following additional meanings for purposes of the FCRA:

1. a denial or cancellation of, an increase in any charge for, or a reduction or other adverse or unfavorable change in the terms of coverage or amount of, any insurance, existing or applied for, in connection with the underwriting of insurance;
2. a denial of employment or any other decision for employment purposes that adversely affects any current or prospective employee;
3. a denial or cancellation of, an increase in any charge for, or any other adverse or unfavorable change in the terms of, any license or benefit described in Section 604(a)(3)(D) (15 U.S.C. 1681b(a)(3)(D)); and
4. an action taken or determination that is:
   a. Made in connection with an application made by, or transaction initiated by, any consumer or in connection with a review of an account to determine whether the consumer continues to meet the terms of the account.
   b. Adverse to the interests of the consumer.

Consumer. A “consumer” is defined as an individual.

Consumer Report. A “consumer report” is any written, oral, or other communication of any information by a consumer reporting agency that bears on a consumer’s creditworthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living that is used or expected to be used or collected, in whole or in part, for the purpose of serving as a factor in establishing the consumer’s eligibility for any of the following:

1. credit or insurance to be used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes;
2. employment purposes; or
3. any other purpose authorized under Section 604 (15 U.S.C. 1681b).

The term “consumer report” does not include any of the following:

1. any report containing information solely about transactions or experiences between the consumer and the person making the report;
2. any communication of that transaction or experience information among entities related by common ownership or affiliated by corporate control (for example, different institutions that are members of the same holding company, or subsidiary companies of an insured institution);

3. communication of other information among persons related by common ownership or affiliated by corporate control if:

    a. it is clearly and conspicuously disclosed to the consumer that the information may be communicated among such persons; and

    b. the consumer is given the opportunity, before the time that the information is communicated, to direct that the information not be communicated among such persons;

4. any authorization or approval of a specific extension of credit directly or indirectly by the issuer of a credit card or similar device;

5. any report in which a person who has been requested by a third party to make a specific extension of credit directly or indirectly to a consumer, such as a lender who has received a request from a broker, conveys his or her decision with respect to such request, if the third party advises the consumer of the name and address of the person to whom the request was made, and such person makes the disclosures to the consumer required under Section 615 (15 U.S.C. 1681m), Requirements on Users of Consumer Reports; or

6. a communication described in subsection (o) or (y) of Section 603 (15 U.S.C. 1681a (o) or (y)) (which relates to certain investigative reports and certain reports to prospective employers).

Consumer Reporting Agency. The term "consumer reporting agency" means any person who, for monetary fees, dues, or on a cooperative nonprofit basis, regularly engages in whole or in part in the practice of assembling or evaluating consumer credit information or other information on consumers for the purpose of furnishing consumer reports to third parties, and who uses any means or facility of interstate commerce for the purpose of preparing or furnishing consumer reports.

Credit Score. The term "credit score" means a numerical value or a categorization derived from a statistical tool or modeling system used by a person who makes or arranges a loan to predict the likelihood of certain credit behaviors, including default (and the numerical value or the categorization derived from such analysis may also be referred to as a "risk predictor" or "risk score"). The term does not include any mortgage score or rating of an automated underwriting system that considers one or more factors in addition to credit information, including the loan to value ratio, the amount of down payment, or the financial assets of a consumer; or any other elements of the underwriting process or underwriting decision.

Creditor. Generally in FCRA, the terms "credit" and "creditor" have the same meanings as in section 702 of ECOA (15 U.S.C. 1691a).

Employment Purposes. The term "employment purposes" when used in connection with a consumer report means a report used for the purpose of evaluating a consumer for employment, promotion, reassignment or retention as an employee.

Investigative Consumer Report. An “investigative consumer report” means a consumer report or portion thereof in which information on a consumer’s character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living is obtained through personal interviews with neighbors, friends, or associates of the consumer reported on or with others with whom he is acquainted or who may have knowledge concerning any such items of information. However, such information does not include specific factual information on a consumer’s credit record obtained directly from a creditor of the consumer or from a consumer reporting agency when such information was obtained directly from a creditor of the consumer or from the consumer.

Person. A “person” means any individual, partnership, corporation, trust, estate, cooperative, association, government or governmental subdivision or agency, or other entity.

Module 1 – Obtaining Consumer Reports

Overview

Consumer reporting agencies have a significant amount of personal information about consumers. This information is invaluable in assessing a consumer's creditworthiness for a variety of products and services, including loan and deposit accounts, insurance, and utility services, among others. The FCRA governs access to this information to ensure that a prospective user of the information obtains it for permissible purposes and does not exploit it for illegitimate purposes.

The FCRA requires any prospective user of a consumer report, for example, a lender, insurer, landlord, or employer, among others, to have a legally permissible purpose to obtain a report.

Permissible Purposes of Consumer Reports – Section 604; 15 U.S.C. 1681b Investigative Consumer Reports – Section 606; 15 U.S.C. 1681d

Legally Permissible Purposes. The FCRA allows a consumer reporting agency to furnish a consumer report for the following circumstances and no other:

1. In response to a court order or Federal Grand Jury subpoena.
2. In accordance with the written instructions of the consumer.
3. To a person, including a financial institution, that the agency has reason to believe intends to use the report as information for any of the following reasons:
   a. In connection with a credit transaction involving the consumer (includes extending, reviewing, and collecting credit);
   b. For employment purposes;[8]
   c. In connection with the underwriting of insurance involving the consumer;
   d. In connection with a determination of the consumer's eligibility for a license or other benefit granted by a governmental instrumentality that is required by law to consider an applicant's financial responsibility;
   e. As a potential investor or servicer, or current insurer, in connection with a valuation of, or an assessment of the credit or prepayment risks associated with, an existing credit obligation;

[8] Use of consumer reports for employment purposes requires specific advanced authorization, disclosure notices, and, if applicable, adverse action notices. These issues are contained in Module 3 of the examination procedures.

f. Otherwise has a legitimate business need for the information:

   i. In connection with a business transaction that the consumer initiates; or

   ii. To review an account to determine whether the consumer continues to meet the terms of the account.

   iii. In response to a request by the head of a State or local child support enforcement agency (or authorized appointee) if the person certifies various information to the consumer reporting agency regarding the need to obtain the report. (Generally, this particular purpose does not impact a person, such as a financial institution, that is not a consumer reporting agency.)

Prescreened Consumer Reports. Users of consumer reports, such as financial institutions, may obtain prescreened consumer reports to make firm offers of credit or insurance to consumers, unless the consumers elected to opt out of being included on prescreened lists. The FCRA contains many requirements, including an opt-out notice requirement when prescreened consumer reports are used. In addition to defining prescreened consumer reports, Module 3 covers these requirements.

Investigative Consumer Reports. Section 606 contains specific requirements for use of an investigative consumer report. This type of consumer report contains information about a consumer's character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living obtained in whole or in part through personal interviews with neighbors, friends, or associates of the consumer. If a user, such as a financial institution, procures an investigative consumer report, or causes the preparation of one, the user institution must meet the following requirements:

4. The user clearly and accurately discloses to the consumer that it may obtain an investigative consumer report.
5. The disclosure contains a statement of the consumer's right to request other information about the report and a summary of the consumer's rights under the FCRA.
6. The disclosure is in writing and is mailed or otherwise delivered to the consumer not later than three business days after the date on which the report was first requested.
7. The user procuring the report certifies to the consumer reporting agency that it has complied with the disclosure requirements and will comply in the event that the consumer requests additional disclosures about the report.

Procedures. Given the preponderance of electronically available information and the growth of identity theft, a user should manage the risks associated with obtaining and using consumer reports. Users should employ procedures, controls, or other safeguards to ensure that they obtain and use consumer reports only in situations for which there are permissible purposes.

Module 2 – Obtaining Information and Sharing Among Affiliates

Overview

The FCRA contains many substantive compliance requirements for consumer reporting agencies designed to help ensure the accuracy and integrity of the consumer reporting system. As noted in the definitions section, a consumer reporting agency is a person that generally furnishes consumer reports to third parties. By their very nature, such third parties as banks, credit unions, and other financial institutions have a significant amount of consumer information that could constitute a consumer report, and thus communication of this information could cause the institution to become a consumer reporting agency. The FCRA contains several exceptions that enable parties, such as a financial institution, to communicate this type of information, within strict guidelines, without becoming a consumer reporting agency.

Rather than containing strict information-sharing prohibitions, the FCRA creates a business disincentive such that if an entity shares consumer report information outside of the exceptions, then the institution is a consumer reporting agency and will be subject to the significant, substantive requirements of the FCRA applicable to those entities. Typically, an entity such as a financial institution will structure its information sharing practices within the exceptions to avoid becoming a consumer reporting agency. This examination module generally covers the various information-sharing practices within these exceptions.

Section 603(d) defines a consumer report to include information about a consumer such as that which bears on a consumer’s creditworthiness, character, and capacity among other factors. Communication of this information may cause a person, including a financial institution, to become a consumer reporting agency. The statutory definition contains key exceptions to this definition that enable persons to share this type of information under certain circumstances, without becoming consumer reporting agencies. Specifically, the term “consumer report” does not include:

1. A report containing information solely as to transactions or experiences between the consumer and the person making the report. A person, including a financial institution, may share information strictly related to its own transactions or experiences with a consumer (such as the consumer’s payment history, or an account with the institution) with any third party, without regard to affiliation, without becoming a consumer reporting agency. The Privacy of Consumer Financial Information regulations that implement the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA) may restrict this type of information sharing because it meets the definition of nonpublic personal information under the Privacy regulations. Therefore, sharing it with nonaffiliated third parties may be subject to an opt-out notice under the privacy regulations. In turn, the FCRA may also restrict activities that the GLBA permits. For example, the GLBA permits a financial institution to share a list of its customers and information such as their credit scores with another financial institution to jointly market or sponsor other financial products or services. This communication may be a consumer report under the FCRA and could potentially cause the sharing financial institution to become a consumer reporting agency.

2. Communication of such transaction or experience information among persons, including financial institutions related by common ownership or affiliated by corporate control.

3. Communication of other information (for example, other than transaction or experience information) among persons related by common ownership or affiliated by corporate control, if it is clearly and conspicuously disclosed to the consumer that the information will be communicated among such entities, and before the information is initially communicated, the consumer is given the opportunity to opt out of the communication. This allows a person, such as a financial institution, to share other information (that is, information other than its own transaction and experience information) that could otherwise be a consumer report, without becoming a consumer reporting agency under both of the following circumstances:

   a. The sharing of the "other" information is done with affiliates.

   b. Consumers are provided with the notice and an opportunity to opt out of this sharing before the information is first communicated among affiliates.

   For example, "other" information can include information a consumer provides on an application form concerning accounts with other financial institutions. It can also include information a financial institution obtains from a consumer reporting agency, such as the consumer's credit score. If a financial institution shares other information with affiliates without providing a notice and an opportunity to opt out, the financial institution may become a consumer reporting agency subject to all of the other requirements of the FCRA.

   The opt-out right required by this section must be contained in a person's, such as a financial institution's, Privacy Notice as required by GLBA and its implementing regulations.

Other Exceptions

Specific Extensions of Credit. In addition, the term consumer report does not include the communication of a specific extension of credit directly or indirectly by the issuer of a credit card or similar device. For example, this exception allows a lender to communicate an authorization through the credit card network to a retailer, to enable a consumer to complete a purchase using a credit card.

Credit Decision to Third Party (for example, auto dealer). The term consumer report also does not include any report in which a person, including a financial institution, who has been requested by a third party to make a specific extension of credit directly or indirectly to a consumer, conveys the decision with respect to the request. The third party must advise the consumer of the name and address of the person, such as a financial institution, to which the request was made, and such person makes the adverse action disclosures required by Section 615 of the FCRA. For example, this exception allows a lender to communicate a credit decision to an automobile dealer who is arranging financing for a consumer purchasing an automobile and who requires a loan to finance the transaction.

“Joint User” Rule. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) staff commentary discusses another exception known as the “Joint User Rule.” Under this exception, users of consumer reports, including financial institutions, may share information if they are jointly involved in the decision to approve a consumer’s request for a product or service, provided that each has a permissible purpose to obtain a consumer report on the individual. For example, a consumer applies for a mortgage loan that will have a high loan-to-value ratio, and thus the lender will require private mortgage insurance (PMI) in order to approve the application. An outside company provides the PMI. The lender and the PMI company can share consumer report information about the consumer because both entities have permissible purposes to obtain the information and both are jointly involved in the decision to grant the products to the consumer. This exception applies to entities that are affiliated or nonaffiliated third parties. It is important to note that the GLBA will still apply to the sharing of nonpublic, personal information with nonaffiliated third parties; therefore, a person, such as a financial institution, should be aware the GLBA may still limit or prohibit sharing allowed under the FCRA joint user rule.

Section 604(g) generally prohibits creditors from obtaining and using medical information in connection with any determination of the consumer’s eligibility, or continued eligibility, for credit. The statute contains no prohibition on creditors obtaining or using medical information for other purposes that are not in connection with a determination of the consumer’s eligibility, or continued eligibility for credit.

Section 604(g)(5)(A) requires the federal banking agencies and NCUA to prescribe regulations that permit transactions that are determined to be necessary and appropriate to protect legitimate operational, transactional, risk, consumer, and other needs (including administrative verification purposes), consistent with the Congressional intent to restrict the use of medical information for inappropriate purposes. On November 22, 2005, the FFIEC Agencies published final rules in the Federal Register (70 FR 70664). The rules contain the general prohibition on obtaining or using medical information, and provide exceptions for the limited circumstances when medical information may be used. The rules define “credit” and “creditor” as having the same meanings as in Section 702 of the ECOA (15 U.S.C. 1691a). On December 21, 2011, the CFPB restated the implementing regulation at 12 CFR Part 1022 (76 Fed. Reg. 79308).

Obtaining and Using Unsolicited Medical Information (12 CFR 1022.30(c)). A creditor does not violate the prohibition on obtaining medical information if it receives the medical information pertaining to a consumer in connection with any determination of the consumer’s eligibility, or continued eligibility, for credit without specifically requesting medical information. However, the creditor may only use this medical information in connection with a determination of the consumer's eligibility, or continued eligibility, for credit in accordance with either the financial information exception or one of the specific other exceptions provided in the rules. We discuss these exceptions below.

Financial Information Exception (12 CFR 1022.30(d)). The rules allow a creditor to obtain and use medical information pertaining to a consumer in connection with any determination of the consumer's eligibility or continued eligibility for credit, so long as:

1. The information is the type of information routinely used in making credit eligibility determinations, such as information relating to debts, expenses, income, benefits, assets, collateral, or the purpose of the loan, including the use of the loan proceeds.
2. The creditor uses the medical information in a manner and to an extent that is no less favorable than it would use comparable information that is not medical information in a credit transaction.
3. The creditor does not take the consumer's physical, mental, or behavioral health, condition or history, type of treatment, or prognosis into account as part of any such determination.

The financial information exception is designed in part to allow creditors to consider a consumer's medical debts and expenses in the assessment of that consumer's ability to repay the loan according to the loan terms. In addition, the financial information exception also allows a creditor to consider the dollar amount and continued eligibility for disability income, worker's compensation income, or other benefits related to health or a medical condition that is relied on as a source of repayment.

The creditor may use the medical information in a manner and to an extent that is no less favorable than it would use comparable, nonmedical information. For example, a consumer includes on an application for credit information about two $20,000 debts. One debt is to a hospital; the other is to a retailer. The creditor may use and consider the debt to the hospital in the same manner in which it considers the debt to the retailer, such as including the debts in the calculation of the consumer's proposed debt-to-income ratio. In addition, the consumer's payment history of the debt to the hospital may be considered in the same manner as the debt to the retailer. For example, if the creditor does not grant loans to applicants who have debts that are 90-days past due, the creditor could consider the past-due status of a debt to the hospital, in the same manner as the past-due status of a debt to the retailer.

A creditor may use medical information in a manner that is more favorable to the consumer, according to its regular policies and procedures. For example, if a creditor has a routine policy of declining consumers who have a 90-day past due installment loan to a retailer, but does not decline consumers who have a 90-day past due debt to a hospital, the financial information exception would allow a creditor to continue this policy without violating the rules because in these cases, the creditor's treatment of the debt to the hospital is more favorable to the consumer.

A creditor may not take the consumer's physical, mental, or behavioral health, condition or history, type of treatment, or prognosis into account as part of any determination regarding the consumer's eligibility, or continued eligibility for credit. The creditor may only consider the financial implications as discussed above, such as the status of a debt to a hospital, continued eligibility for disability income, etc.

Specific Exceptions for Obtaining and Using Medical Information (12 CFR 1022.30(e)). In addition to the financial information exception, the rules also provide for the following nine specific exceptions under which a creditor can obtain and use medical information in its determination of the consumer's eligibility, or continued eligibility for credit:

1. To determine whether the use of a power of attorney or legal representative that is triggered by a medical condition or event is necessary and appropriate, or whether the consumer has the legal capacity to contract when a person seeks to exercise a power of attorney or act as a legal representative for a consumer based on an asserted medical condition or event. For example, if Person A is attempting to act on behalf of Person B under a Power of Attorney that is invoked based on a medical event, a creditor is allowed to obtain and use medical information to verify that Person B has experienced a medical condition or event such that Person A is allowed to act under the Power of Attorney.

2. To comply with applicable requirements of local, state, or Federal laws.

3. To determine, at the consumer's request, whether the consumer qualifies for a legally permissible special credit program or credit-related assistance program that is:

    a. Designed to meet the special needs of consumers with medical conditions and

    b. Established and administered pursuant to a written plan that:

        i. Identifies the class of persons that the program is designed to benefit; and

        ii. Sets forth the procedures and standards for extending credit or providing other credit-related assistance under the program.

4. To the extent necessary for purposes of fraud prevention or detection.

5. In the case of credit for the purpose of financing medical products or services, to determine and verify the medical purpose of the loan and the use of the proceeds.

6. Consistent with safe and sound banking practices, if the consumer or the consumer's legal representative requests that the creditor use medical information in determining the consumer's eligibility, or continued eligibility, for credit, to accommodate the consumer's particular circumstances, and such request is documented by the creditor. For example, at the consumer's request, a creditor may grant an exception to its ordinary policy to accommodate a medical condition that the consumer has experienced. This exception allows a creditor to consider medical information in this context, but it does not require a creditor to make such an accommodation nor does it require a creditor to grant a loan that is unsafe or unsound.

7. Consistent with safe and sound practices, to determine whether the provisions of a forbearance practice or program that is triggered by a medical condition or event apply to a consumer. For example, if a creditor has a policy of delaying foreclosure in cases where a consumer is experiencing a medical hardship, this exception allows the creditor to use medical information to determine if the policy would apply to the consumer. Like the exception listed in the bullet above, this exception does not require a creditor to grant forbearance, it merely provides an exception so that a creditor may consider medical information in these instances.

8. To determine the consumer's eligibility for the triggering of, or the reactivation of a debt cancellation contract or debt suspension agreement, if a medical condition or event is a triggering event for the provision of benefits under the contract or agreement.

9. To determine the consumer's eligibility for the triggering of, or the reactivation of a credit insurance product, if a medical condition or event is a triggering event for the provision of benefits under the product.

Limits on redisclosure of information (12 CFR 1022.31(b)). If a creditor subject to the medical information rules receives medical information about a consumer from a consumer reporting agency or its affiliate, the creditor must not disclose that information to any other person, except as necessary to carry out the purpose for which the information was initially disclosed, or as otherwise permitted by statute, regulation, or order.

Sharing medical information with affiliates (12 CFR 1022.32(b)). In general, the exclusions from the definition of "consumer report" in Section 603(d)(2) of the FCRA allow the sharing of non-medical information among affiliates. With regard to medical information, Section 603(d) (3) of the FCRA provides that the exclusions in Section 603(d)(2) do not apply when a person subject to the medical information rules shares any of the following information with an affiliate:

1. Medical information.

2. An individualized list or description based on the payment transactions of the consumer for medical products or services.

3. An aggregate list of identified consumers based on payment transactions for medical products or services.

If a person who is subject to the medical rules shares with an affiliate the type of information discussed above, the exclusions from the definition of "consumer report" do not apply. Effectively, this means that if a person shares medical information, that person becomes a consumer reporting agency, subject to all of the other substantive requirements of the FCRA.

The rules provide exceptions to these limitations on sharing medical information with affiliates (12 CFR 1022.32(c)). A person, such as a bank, thrift, or credit union, may share medical information with its affiliates without becoming a consumer reporting agency under any of the following circumstances:

1. In connection with the business of insurance or annuities (including the activities described in Section 18B of the model Privacy of Consumer Financial and Health Information Regulation issued by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, as in effect on January 1, 2003).
2. For any purpose permitted without authorization under the regulations promulgated by the Department of Health and Human Services pursuant to the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA).
3. For any purpose referred to in Section 1179 of HIPAA.
4. For any purpose described in Section 502(e) of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act.
5. In connection with a determination of the consumer's eligibility, or continued eligibility, for credit consistent with the financial information exceptions or specific exceptions.
6. As otherwise permitted by order of the CFPB.

Affiliate Marketing Opt-Out Requirement – Section 624; 15 U.S.C. 1681s-3; 12 CFR 1022, Subpart C

Section 624 gives a consumer the right to restrict an entity, with which it does not have a pre-existing business relationship, from using certain information obtained from an affiliate to make solicitations to that consumer. This provision is distinct from Section 603(d)(2)(A)(iii) that gives a consumer the right to restrict the sharing of certain consumer information among affiliates.[9]

Under Section 624, an entity may not use information received from an affiliate to market its products or services to a consumer, unless the consumer is given notice and a reasonable opportunity and a reasonable and simple method to opt out of the making of such solicitations. The affiliate marketing opt-out requirement applies to both transaction or experience information and "other" information, such as information from credit reports and credit applications. On November 7, 2007, the federal financial institution regulators published final regulations in the [9] See Module 2, Section 603(d) Consumer Report and Information Sharing, for provisions pertaining to the sharing of consumer information. Under Section 603(d)(2)(A)(iii) of the FCRA, entities are responsible for complying with the affiliate sharing notice and opt-out requirement, where applicable. Thus, under the FCRA, certain consumer information will be subject to two opt-out notices, a sharing opt-out notice (Section 603(d)) and a marketing use opt-out notice (Section 624). These two opt-out notices may be consolidated.

Federal Register to implement this section (72 FR 62910). On December 21, 2011, the CFPB restated the implementing regulation at 12 CFR Part 1022 (76 Fed. Reg. 79308). [10]

Exceptions to the notice and opt-out requirements apply when an entity uses eligibility information in certain ways, as described later in these procedures.

Key Definitions – 12 CFR 1022.20[11]

Eligibility information (12 CFR 1022.20(b)(3)) includes not only transaction and experience information, but also the type of information found in consumer reports, such as information from third-party sources and credit scores. Eligibility information does not include aggregate or blind data that does not contain personal identifiers such as account numbers, names, or addresses.[12]

Pre-existing business relationship (12 CFR 1022.20(b)(4))[13] means a relationship between a person, such as a financial institution (or a person's licensed agent), and a consumer based on:

1. A financial contract between the person and the consumer that is in force on the date on which the consumer is sent a solicitation covered by the affiliate marketing regulation;
2. The purchase, rental, or lease by the consumer of the person's goods or services, or a financial transaction (including holding an active account or a policy in force, or having another continuing relationship) between the consumer and the person, during the 18-month period immediately preceding the date on which the consumer is sent a solicitation covered by the affiliate marketing regulation; or
3. An inquiry or application by the consumer regarding a product or service offered by that person during the three-month period immediately preceding the date on which the consumer is sent a solicitation covered by the affiliate marketing regulation.

[10] See 12 CFR 1022.20(a) for the scope of entities covered by Subpart C of 12 CFR 1022.

[11] See 12 CFR 1022.20 for other definitions.

[12] Specifically, "eligibility information" is defined in the affiliate marketing regulation as "any information the communication of which would be a consumer report if the exclusions from the definition of "consumer report" in Section 603(d)(2)(A) of the [Fair Credit Reporting] Act did not apply."

[13] See 12 CFR 1022.20(b)(4)(ii) and (iii) for examples of pre-existing business relationships and situations where no pre-existing business relationship exists.

Solicitation (12 CFR 1022.20(b)(5)) means the marketing of a product or service initiated by a person, such as a financial institution, to a particular consumer that is:

1. Based on eligibility information communicated to that person by its affiliate; and
2. Intended to encourage the consumer to purchase or obtain such product or service.

Examples of a solicitation include a telemarketing call, direct mail, email, or other form of marketing communication directed to a particular consumer that is based on eligibility information received from an affiliate. A solicitation does not include marketing communications that are directed at the general public (e.g., television, general circulation magazine, and billboard advertisements).

Initial Notice and Opt-Out Requirement – 12 CFR 1022.21(a), 1022.24, and 1022.25

A person, such as a financial institution, and its subsidiaries generally may not use eligibility information about a consumer that it receives from an affiliate to make a solicitation for marketing purposes to the consumer, unless:

1. It is clearly and conspicuously disclosed to the consumer in writing or, if the consumer agrees, electronically, in a concise notice that the person may use eligibility information about that consumer that it received from an affiliate to make solicitations for marketing purposes to the consumer;
2. The consumer is provided a reasonable opportunity and a reasonable and simple method to "opt out" (that is, the consumer prohibits the person from using eligibility information to make solicitations for marketing purposes to the consumer);14 and
3. The consumer has not opted out.

For example, a consumer has a homeowner's insurance policy with an insurance company. The insurance company shares eligibility information about the consumer with its affiliated depository institution. Based on that eligibility information, the depository institution wants to make a solicitation to the consumer about its home equity loan products. The depository institution does not have a pre-existing business relationship with the consumer and none of the other exceptions apply. The depository institution may not use eligibility information it received from its insurance affiliate to make solicitations to the consumer about its home equity loan products unless the insurance company gave the consumer a notice and opportunity to opt out and the consumer does not opt out.

[14] See 12 CFR 1022.24 and 1022.25 for examples of "a reasonable opportunity to opt out" and "reasonable and simple methods for opting out."

Making Solicitations – 12 CFR 1022.21(b)[15]

A person, such as a financial institution, (or a service provider acting on behalf of the person) makes a solicitation for marketing purposes if:

1. The person receives eligibility information from an affiliate, including when the affiliate places that information into a common database that the person may access;
2. The person uses that eligibility information to do one or more of the following:
   a. Identify the consumer or type of consumer to receive a solicitation;
   b. Establish criteria used to select the consumer to receive a solicitation; or
   c. Decide which of the person's products or services to market to the consumer or tailor the financial institution's solicitation to that consumer; and
3. As a result of the person's, such as a financial institution's, use of the eligibility information, the consumer is provided a solicitation.

A person, such as a financial institution, does not make a solicitation for marketing purposes (and therefore the affiliate marketing regulation, with its notice and opt-out requirements, does not apply) in the situations listed below, commonly referred to as "constructive sharing." Constructive sharing occurs when a person, such as a financial institution, provides criteria to an affiliate to use in marketing the financial institution's product and the affiliate uses the criteria to send marketing materials to the affiliate's own customers that meet the criteria. In this situation, the financial institution is not using shared eligibility information to make solicitations.

1. The person provides criteria for consumers to whom it would like its affiliate to market the person's products. Then, based on this criteria, the affiliate uses eligibility information that the affiliate obtained in connection with its own pre-existing business relationship with the consumer to market the person's products or services (or directs its service provider to use the eligibility information in the same manner and the person does not communicate with the service provider regarding that use).
2. A service provider, applying the person's criteria, uses information from an affiliate, such as that in a shared database, to market the person's products or services to the consumer, so long as it meets certain requirements, including all of the following.
   a. The affiliate controls access to and use of its eligibility information by the service provider under a written agreement between the affiliate and the service provider.

[15] See 12 CFR 1022.21(b)(6) for examples of making solicitations.

b. The affiliate establishes, in writing, specific terms and conditions under which the service provider may access and use the affiliate's eligibility information to market the person's products and services (or those of affiliates generally) to the consumer.

c. The affiliate requires the service provider, under a written agreement, to implement reasonable policies and procedures designed to ensure that the service provider uses the affiliate's eligibility information in accordance with the terms and conditions established by the affiliate relating to the marketing of the person's products or services.

d. The affiliate is identified on or with the marketing materials provided to the consumer.

e. The person does not directly use its affiliate's eligibility information in the manner described above under "Making Solicitations (12 CFR 1022.21(b))," item 2.

Exceptions to Initial Notice and Opt-Out Requirements – 12 CFR 1022.21(c)[16]

The initial notice and opt-out requirements do not apply to a person, such as a financial institution, if it uses eligibility information that it receives from an affiliate:

1. To make a solicitation for marketing purposes to a consumer with whom the person has a pre-existing business relationship;

2. To facilitate communications to an individual for whose benefit the person provides employee benefit or other services pursuant to a contract with an employer;

3. To perform services on behalf of an affiliate (but this would not allow solicitation where the consumer has opted out);

4. In response to a communication about the person's products or services initiated by the consumer;

5. In response to a consumer's authorization or request to receive solicitations; or

6. If the person's compliance with the affiliate marketing regulation would prevent it from complying with State insurance laws pertaining to unfair discrimination in any state in which the person is lawfully doing business.

[16] See 12 CFR 1022.21(d) for examples of exceptions to the initial notice and opt-out requirement.

Contents of Opt-Out Notice – 12 CFR 1022.23

A person, such as a financial institution, must provide to the consumer a reasonable and simple method for the consumer to opt out. The opt-out notice must be clear, conspicuous, and concise, and must accurately disclose specific information outlined in 12 CFR 1022.23(a), including that the consumer may elect to limit the use of eligibility information to make solicitations to the consumer. See Appendix C to the regulation for the model notices contained in the affiliate marketing regulation.

Alternative contents. An affiliate that provides a consumer a broader right to opt out than that required by the affiliate marketing regulation may satisfy the regulatory requirements by providing the consumer with a clear, conspicuous, and concise notice that accurately discloses the consumer's opt-out rights.

Coordinated, consolidated, and equivalent notices. Opt-out and renewal notices may be coordinated and consolidated with any other notice or disclosure required under any other provision of law, such as the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA), 15 U.S.C. 6801 et seq. Renewal notices, which have additional required content (12 CFR 1022.27), may be consolidated with the annual GLBA privacy notices.

Delivery of the Opt-Out Notice – 12 CFR 1022.21(a)(3) and 1022.26[17]

An affiliate that has or previously had a pre-existing business relationship with the consumer must provide the notice either individually or as part of a joint notice from two or more members of an affiliated group of companies. The opt-out notice must be provided so that each consumer can reasonably be expected to receive actual notice. A consumer may not reasonably be expected to receive actual notice if, for example, the affiliate providing the notice sends the notice via email to a consumer who has not agreed to receive electronic disclosures by email from the affiliate providing the notice.[18]

Scope of Opt-Out – 12 CFR 1022.22(a) and 1022.23(a)(2)[19]

As a general rule, the consumer's election to opt out prohibits any affiliate covered by the opt-out notice from using eligibility information received from another affiliate, described in the notice, to make solicitations to the consumer. If two or more consumers jointly obtain a product or service, any of the joint consumers may exercise the right to opt out. It is impermissible to require all joint consumers to opt out before implementing any opt-out direction.

[17] See 12 CFR 1022.26(b) and (c) for examples of "reasonable expectation of actual notice" and "no reasonable expectation of actual notice."

[18] For opt-out notices provided electronically, the notice may be provided in compliance with either the electronic disclosure provisions of 12 CFR 1022.24(b)(2) and 1022.24(b)(3) or the provisions in section 101 of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act, 15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.

[19] See 12 CFR 1022.22(a) for examples of the scope of the opt-out notice, including examples of continuing relationships.

Menu of alternatives. A consumer may be given the opportunity to choose from a menu of alternatives when electing to prohibit solicitations, such as by:

1. Electing to prohibit solicitations from certain types of affiliates covered by the opt-out notice but not other types of affiliates covered by the notice.
2. Electing to prohibit solicitations based on certain types of eligibility information but not other types of eligibility information.
3. Electing to prohibit solicitations by certain methods of delivery but not other methods of delivery.

One of the alternatives, however, must allow the consumer to prohibit all solicitations from all of the affiliates that are covered by the notice.

Continuing relationship. If the consumer establishes a continuing relationship with a person, such as a financial institution, or its affiliate, an opt-out notice may apply to eligibility information obtained from one or more continuing relationships (such as a deposit account, a mortgage loan, or a credit card), if the notice adequately describes the continuing relationships covered. The opt-out notice can also apply to future continuing relationships if the notice adequately describes the continuing future relationships that would be covered.

Special rule for a notice following termination of all continuing relationships. After all continuing relationships with a person or its affiliate(s) are terminated, a consumer must be given a new opt-out notice if the consumer later establishes another continuing relationship with the person or its affiliate(s) and the consumer's eligibility information is to be used to make a solicitation. The consumer's decision not to opt out after receiving the new opt-out notice would not override a prior opt-out election that applies to eligibility information obtained in connection with a terminated relationship, regardless of whether the new opt-out notice applies to eligibility information obtained in connection with a terminated relationship.

No continuing relationship (isolated transaction). If the consumer does not establish a continuing relationship with a person or its affiliate, but the person or its affiliate obtains eligibility information about the consumer in connection with a transaction with the consumer (such as an ATM cash withdrawal, purchase of traveler's checks, or a credit application that is denied), an opt-out notice provided to the consumer only applies to eligibility information obtained in connection with that transaction.

Time, Duration, and Renewal of Opt-Out – 12 CFR 1022.22(b) and (c) and 1022.27

A consumer may opt out at any time. The opt-out must be effective for a period of at least five years beginning when the consumer's opt-out election is received and implemented, unless the consumer later revokes the opt-out in writing or, if the consumer agrees, electronically. An opt-out period may be set at more than five years, including an opt-out that does not expire unless the consumer revokes it.

Renewal after opt-out period expires. After the opt-out period expires, a person, such as a financial institution, may not make solicitations based on eligibility information it receives from an affiliate to a consumer who previously opted out, unless:

1. The consumer receives a renewal notice and opportunity to opt out, and the consumer does not renew the opt-out; or

2. An exception to the notice and opt-out requirements applies.[20]

Contents of renewal notice. The renewal notice must be clear, conspicuous, and concise, and must accurately disclose most of the elements of the original opt-out notice, as well as the following information as applicable:

1. The consumer previously elected to limit the use of certain information to make solicitations to the consumer.

2. The consumer's election has expired or is about to expire.

3. The consumer may elect to renew the consumer's previous election.

4. If applicable, that the consumer's election to renew will apply for the specified period of time stated in the notice and that the consumer will be allowed to renew the election once that period expires.

See 12 CFR 1022.27(b) for all the content requirements of a renewal notice.

Renewal period. Each opt-out renewal must be effective for a period of at least five years.

Affiliate who may provide the notice. The renewal notice must be provided by the affiliate that provided the previous opt-out notice, or its successor; or as part of a joint renewal notice from two or more members of an affiliated group of companies, or their successors, that jointly provided the previous opt-out notice.

Timing of the renewal notice. A renewal notice may be provided to the consumer either a reasonable period of time before the expiration of the opt-out period[21] or any time after the expiration of the opt-out period but before solicitations are made to the consumer that would have been prohibited by the expired opt-out.

[20] See 12 CFR 1022.21(c) for exceptions.

[21] An opt-out period may not be shortened by sending a renewal notice to the consumer before expiration of the opt-out period, even if the consumer does not renew the opt-out. If a person provides an annual privacy notice under the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act, providing a renewal notice with the last annual privacy notice provided to the consumer before expiration of the opt-out period is a reasonable period of time before expiration of the opt-out in all cases (12 CFR 1022.27(d)).

Model Forms for Opt-Out Notices – 12 CFR Part 1022, Appendix C

Appendix C of the affiliate marketing regulation contains model forms that may be used to comply with the requirement for clear, conspicuous, and concise notices. The five model forms are:

- C-1 Model Form for Initial Opt-Out Notice (Single-Affiliate Notice)
- C-2 Model Form for Initial Opt-Out Notice (Joint Notice)
- C-3 Model Form for Renewal Notice (Single-Affiliate Notice)
- C-4 Model Form for Renewal Notice (Joint Notice)
- C-5 Model Form for Voluntary "No Marketing" Notice

Use of the model forms is not required and a person may make certain changes to the language or format of the model forms without losing the protection from liability afforded by use of the model forms. These changes may not be so extensive as to affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the language in the model forms. Institutions making such extensive revisions will lose the safe harbor that Appendix C provides. Examples of acceptable changes are provided in Appendix C to the regulation.

Module 3 – Disclosures to Consumers and Miscellaneous Requirements

Overview

The FCRA requires entities such as financial institutions to provide consumers with various notices and information under a variety of circumstances. This module contains examination responsibilities for these various areas.

Section 604(b) has specific requirements for persons, such as financial institutions, that obtain consumer reports of its employees or prospective employees prior to, and/or during, the term of employment. The FCRA generally requires the written permission of the consumer to procure a consumer report for "employment purposes." Moreover, the person must provide to the consumer in writing a clear and conspicuous disclosure that it may obtain a consumer report for employment purposes prior to procuring a report.

Prior to taking any adverse action involving employment that is based in whole or in part on the consumer report, the user generally must provide to the consumer:

1. A copy of the report.
2. A description in writing of the rights of the consumer under this title, as the CFPB prescribes under Section 609(c)(1).

At the time a financial institution takes adverse action in an employment situation, Section 615 requires that it must provide the consumer with an adverse action notice described later in this module.

Prescreened Consumer Reports and Opt-Out Notice – Sections 604(c) and 615(d); 15 U.S.C. 1681b(c) and 15 U.S.C. 1681m(d); and 12 CFR 1022.54

Sections 604(c) allow persons, including financial institutions, to obtain and use consumer reports on any consumer in connection with any credit or insurance transaction that the consumer does not initiate, to make firm offers of credit or insurance. This process, known as prescreening, occurs when a financial institution obtains a list from a consumer reporting agency of consumers who meet certain predetermined creditworthiness criteria and who have not elected to be excluded from such lists.

These lists may only contain the following information:

1. The name and address of a consumer.
2. An identifier that is not unique to the consumer and that the person uses solely for the purpose of verifying the identity of the consumer.

3. Other information pertaining to a consumer that does not identify the relationship or experience of the consumer with respect to a particular creditor or other entity.

Each name appearing on the list is considered an individual consumer report. In order to obtain and use these lists, persons, such as financial institutions, must make a "firm offer of credit or insurance" as defined in Section 603(l) to each person on the list. A person is not required to grant credit or insurance if the consumer is not creditworthy or insurable, or cannot furnish required collateral, provided that the person determines the underwriting criteria in advance, and applies it consistently.

Example 1: Assume a home mortgage lender obtains a list from a consumer reporting agency of everyone in County X, with a current home mortgage loan and a credit score of 700. The lender will use this list to market a second lien home equity loan product. The lender's other non-consumer report criteria, in addition to those used in the prescreened list for this product, include a maximum total debt-to-income ratio (DTI) of 50 percent or less. The consumer reporting agency can screen some of the criteria but the lender must determine other criteria individually, such as the DTI, when consumers respond to the offer. If a consumer responds to the offer, but already has a DTI of 60 percent, the lender does not have to grant the loan.

In addition, the person is allowed to obtain a full consumer report on anyone responding to the offer to verify that the consumer continues to meet the creditworthiness criteria. If the consumer no longer meets those criteria, the person does not have to grant the loan.

Example 2: On January 1, a credit card lender obtains a list from a consumer reporting agency of consumers in County Y who have credit scores of 720, and no previous bankruptcy records. The lender mails solicitations offering a pre-approved credit card to everyone on the list on January 2. On January 31, a consumer responds to the offer and the lender obtains and reviews a full consumer report that shows a bankruptcy record was added on January 15. Since this consumer no longer meets the lender's predetermined criteria, the lender is not required to issue the credit card.

These basic requirements help prevent a person from obtaining prescreened lists without following through with an offer of credit or insurance. The person must maintain the criteria used for the product (including the criteria used to generate the prescreened report and any other criteria such as collateral requirements) on file for a period of three years, beginning on the date that the person made the offer to the consumer.

Technical Notice and Opt-Out Requirements – Section 615(d)

Section 615(d) contains consumer protections and technical notice requirements concerning prescreened offers of credit or insurance. The FCRA requires nationwide consumer reporting agencies to jointly operate an "opt-out" system, whereby consumers can elect to be excluded from prescreened lists by calling a toll-free number.

When a person, such as a financial institution, obtains and uses these lists, it must provide consumers with a Prescreened Opt-Out Notice with the offer of credit or insurance. This notice alerts consumers that they are receiving the offer because they meet certain creditworthiness criteria. The notice must also provide the toll-free telephone number operated by the nationwide consumer reporting agencies for consumers to call to opt out of prescreened lists.

The FCRA contains the basic requirement to provide notices to consumers at the time the prescreened offers are made. The implementing regulation, 12 CFR 1022.54, contains the technical requirements of the notice. This regulation is applicable to anyone, including banks, credit unions, and saving associations, that obtains and uses prescreened consumer reports.

Short and Long Notice – 12 CFR 1022.54(c)

Entities must provide a "short" notice and a "long" notice of the prescreened opt-out information with each written solicitation made to consumers using prescreened consumer reports. They must also comply with specific requirements concerning the content and appearance of these notices.

The short notice must be a clear and conspicuous, simple, and easy-to-understand statement as follows:

1. Content. The short notice must state that the consumer has the right to opt out of receiving prescreened solicitations. It must provide the toll-free number and direct consumers to the existence and location of the long notice. It should also state the title of the long notice. The short notice may not contain any other information.

2. Form. The short notice must be in a type size larger than the principal text on the same page, but it may not be smaller than 12-point type. If a person, such as a financial institution, provides the notice by electronic means, it must be larger than the type size of the principal text on the same page.

3. Location. The short form must be on the front side of the first page of the principal promotional document in the solicitation. If provided electronically, it must be on the same page and in close proximity to the principal marketing message. The statement must be located so that it is distinct from other information, such as inside a border, and must be in a distinct type style, such as bolded, italicized, underlined, and/or in a color that contrasts with the principal text on the page, if the solicitation is provided in more than one color.

The long notice must also be a clear and conspicuous, simple, and easy-to-understand statement as follows:

1. Content. The long notice must state the information required by Section 615(d) of the FCRA and may not include any other information that interferes with, detracts from, contradicts, or otherwise undermines the purpose of the notice.

2. Form. The notice must appear in the solicitation, be in a type size that is no smaller than the type size of the principal text on the same page, and, for solicitations provided other than by electronic means, the type size may not be smaller than 8-point type. The notice must begin with a heading in capital letters, underlined, and identifying the long notice as the "PRESCREEN & OPT-OUT NOTICE." It must be in a type style that is distinct from the principal type style used on the same page, such as bolded, italicized, underlined, and/or in a color that contrasts from the principal text, if the solicitation is in more than one color. The notice must be set apart from other text on the page, such as by including a blank line above and below the statement, and by indenting both the left and right margins from other text on the page.

The model prescreened opt-out notices are contained in Appendix D to 12 CFR Part 1022. Appendix D contains complete sample solicitations for context. The model prescreen notice text is contained below:

Sample Short Notice:

You can choose to stop receiving "prescreened" offers of (credit or insurance) from this and other companies by calling toll-free (toll-free number). See PRESCREEN & OPT-OUT NOTICE on other side (or other location) for more information about prescreened offers.

Sample Long Notice:

PRESCREEN & OPT-OUT NOTICE: This "prescreened" offer of (credit or insurance) is based on information in your credit report indicating that you meet certain criteria. This offer is not guaranteed if you do not meet our criteria (including providing acceptable property as collateral). If you do not want to receive prescreened offers of (credit or insurance) from this and other companies, call the consumer reporting agencies (or name of consumer reporting agency) toll-free, (toll-free number); or write: (consumer reporting agency name and mailing address).

Truncation of Credit and Debit Card Account Numbers – Section 605(g); 15 U.S.C. 1681c(g)

Section 605(g) provides that persons, including financial institutions, that accept debit and credit cards for the transaction of business will be prohibited from issuing electronic receipts that contain more than the last five digits of the card number, or the card expiration date, at the point of sale or transaction. This requirement applies only to electronically developed receipts and does not apply to hand-written receipts or those developed with an imprint of the card.

Disclosure of Credit Scores by Certain Mortgage Lenders – Section 609(g); 15 U.S.C. 1681g(g)

Section 609(g) requires creditors, such as financial institutions, that make or arrange mortgage loans using credit scores to provide the score with accompanying information to the applicants.

Credit score

For purposes of this section, the term "credit score" is defined as a numerical value or a categorization derived from a statistical tool or modeling system used by a person who makes or arranges a loan to predict the likelihood of certain credit behaviors, including default (and the numerical value or the categorization derived from such analysis may also be referred to as a "risk predictor" or "risk score"). The credit score does not include either of the following:

1. Any mortgage score or rating by an automated underwriting system that considers one or more factors in addition to credit information, such as the loan-to-value ratio, the amount of down payment, or the financial assets of a consumer.

2. Any other elements of the underwriting process or underwriting decision.

Covered transactions

The disclosure requirement applies to both closed-end and open-end loans that are for consumer purposes and are secured by one- to four-family residential real properties, including purchase and refinance transactions. This requirement will not apply in circumstances that do not involve a consumer purpose, such as when a borrower obtains a loan secured by his or her residence to finance his or her small business.

Specific required notice

Financial institutions in covered transactions that use credit scores must provide a disclosure containing the following specific language, which is contained in 609(g)(1)(D):

> Notice to The Home Loan Applicant
> In connection with your application for a home loan, the lender must disclose to you the score that a consumer reporting agency distributed to users and the lender used in connection with your home loan, and the key factors affecting your credit scores.
> The credit score is a computer generated summary calculated at the time of the request and based on information that a consumer reporting agency or lender has on file. The scores are based on data about your credit history and payment patterns. Credit scores are important because they are used to assist the lender in determining whether you will obtain a loan. They may also be used to determine what interest rate you may be offered on the mortgage. Credit scores can change over time, depending on your conduct, how your credit history and payment patterns change, and how credit scoring technologies change.
> Because the score is based on information in your credit history, it is very important that you review the credit-related information that is being furnished to make sure it is accurate. Credit records may vary from one company to another.
> If you have questions about your credit score or the credit information that is furnished to you, contact the consumer reporting agency at the address and telephone number provided with this notice, or contact the lender, if the lender developed or generated the credit score. The consumer reporting agency plays no part in the decision to take any action on the loan application and is unable to provide you with specific reasons for the decision on a loan application.
> If you have questions concerning the terms of the loan, contact the lender.

The notice must include the name, address, and telephone number of each consumer reporting agency that provided a credit score that was used.

Credit score and key factors disclosed

In addition to the notice, a creditor, such as a financial institution, must also disclose the credit score, the range of possible scores, the date that the score was created, and the "key factors" used in the score calculation. "Key factors" are all relevant elements or reasons adversely affecting the credit score for the particular individual, listed in the order of their importance, and based on their effect on the credit score. The total number of factors to be disclosed must not exceed four. However, if one of the key factors is the number of inquiries into a consumer's credit information, then the total number of factors must not exceed five. These key factors come from information the consumer reporting agencies supplied with any consumer report that was furnished containing a credit score (Section 605(d)(2)).

This disclosure requirement applies in any application for a covered transaction, regardless of the final action the lender takes on the application. The FCRA requires a creditor to disclose all of the credit scores used in these transactions. For example, if two joint applicants apply for a mortgage loan to purchase a single-family residence and the lender uses both credit scores, then the creditor needs to disclose both. The statute specifically does not require more than one disclosure per loan. Therefore, if the creditor uses multiple scores, it can include all of them in one disclosure containing the Notice to the Home Loan Applicant.

If a creditor uses a credit score that it did not obtain directly from a consumer reporting agency, but may contain some information from a consumer reporting agency, the creditor may satisfy this disclosure requirement by providing a score and associated key factor information that a consumer reporting agency supplied. For example, certain automated underwriting systems generate a score used in a credit decision. These systems are often populated by data obtained from a consumer reporting agency. If a creditor uses this automated system, it may satisfy the disclosure requirement by providing the applicants with a score and key factors a consumer reporting agency supplied based on the data, including credit score(s) imported into the automated underwriting system. This will provide applicants with information about their credit history and its role in the credit decision, in the spirit of this section of the statute.

Timing

With regard to the timing of the disclosure, the statute requires that the creditor provide it as soon as is reasonably practicable after using a credit score.

Adverse Action Disclosures – Section 615(a) and (b); 15 U.S.C. 1681m(a) and (b)

Section 615(a)-(b) requires users of consumer reports, such as creditors, to make certain disclosures when they:

1. take adverse actions with respect to consumers, based in whole or in part on information contained in a consumer report;
2. deny credit for personal, family, or household purposes or increase the charge for such credit based in whole or in part on information obtained from a person other than a consumer reporting agency bearing upon the consumer's credit worthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living or
3. take certain adverse action based in whole or in part on information from an affiliate.

The disclosure requirements are discussed separately below.

Information Obtained From a Consumer Reporting Agency

Section 615(a), Duties of Users Taking Adverse Actions on the Basis of Information Contained in Consumer Reports, provides that when adverse action is taken with respect to any consumer based in whole or in part on any information contained in a consumer report, the person, such as a financial institution, must:

1. provide oral, written, or electronic notice of the adverse action to the consumer.
2. provide to the consumer written or electronic disclosures of a numerical credit score used by such person in taking any adverse action based in whole or in part on any information in a consumer report and the following information:
   a. the range of possible credit scores under the model used;
   b. all of the key factors that adversely affected the credit score, which shall not exceed four key factors, except that if one of the key factors is the number of enquiries made with respect to the consumer report, the number of key factors shall not exceed five;
   c. the date on which the credit score was created; and
   d. the name of the person or entity that provided the credit score or credit file upon which the credit score was created;
3. provide to the consumer orally, in writing, or electronically:
   a. the name, address, and telephone number of the consumer reporting agency from which it received the information (including a toll-free telephone number established by the agency, if the consumer reporting agency maintains files on a nationwide basis); and

b. a statement that the consumer reporting agency did not make the decision to take the adverse action and is unable to provide the consumer the specific reasons why the adverse action was taken;

4. provide to the consumer an oral, written, or electronic notice of the consumer's right to obtain a free copy of the consumer report from the consumer reporting agency within 60 days of receiving notice of the adverse action, and the consumer's right to dispute the accuracy or completeness of any information in the consumer report with the consumer reporting agency.

Information Obtained from Third Parties Other than Consumer Reporting Agencies (Including Affiliates)

Section 615(b), Adverse Action Based on Information Obtained from Third Parties Other than Consumer Reporting Agencies, provides that, in general, whenever credit for personal, family, or household purposes involving a consumer is denied or the charge for such credit is increased either wholly or partly because of information obtained from a person other than a consumer reporting agency bearing upon the consumer's credit worthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living, the user of such information shall:

1. At the time such adverse action is communicated, clearly and accurately disclose to the consumer his right to make a written request for the reasons for such adverse action within 60 days after learning of such adverse action; and
2. Within a reasonable period of time after receipt of such written request from the consumer, disclose the nature of the information to the consumer.

If the adverse action described in 615(b)(2)(B) is (i) taken based in whole or in part on information from a person related by common ownership or affiliated by common corporate control to the person taking the action, and (ii) bears on the credit worthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living of the consumer, and (iii) does not include information solely as to transactions or experiences between the consumer and the person furnishing the information or information in a consumer report, then the person taking the adverse action shall:

1. Notify the consumer of the action, including a statement that the consumer may obtain the information upon written request from the consumer received within 60 days after transmittal of the notice required; and
2. Not later than 30 days after receipt of such written request from the consumer, disclose to the consumer the nature of the information upon which the action is based.

Debt Collector Communications Concerning Identity Theft – Section 615(g); 15 U.S.C. 1681m(g)

Section 615(g) has specific requirements for persons, such as financial institutions, that act as debt collectors, whereby they collect debts on behalf of a third party that is a creditor or other user of a consumer report. The requirements do not apply when a person is collecting its own loans. When a person is notified that any information relating to a debt that it is attempting to collect may be fraudulent or may be the result of identity theft, the person must notify the third party of this fact. In addition, if the consumer, to whom the debt purportedly relates, requests information about the transaction, the person must provide all of the information the consumer would otherwise be entitled to if the consumer wished to dispute the debt under other provisions of law applicable to the person.

Section 615(h) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) generally requires a user of consumer reports, such as a creditor, to provide a risk-based pricing notice to a consumer when the creditor, based on a consumer report, extends credit to the consumer on terms that are "materially less favorable" than the terms the creditor has extended to other consumers. On January 15, 2010, the Federal Reserve and the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) published final rules in the Federal Register (75 Fed. Reg. 2724) implementing this section of the FCRA.

The risk-based pricing notice requirement is designed primarily to improve the accuracy of consumer reports by alerting consumers to the existence of negative information in their consumer reports so that the consumers can, if they choose, check their consumer reports for accuracy and correct any inaccurate information. This notice provision is meant to complement an existing provision of the FCRA, Section 615(a), whereby a creditor that denies a consumer's application for credit, based in whole or in part on information in a consumer's report, must provide an adverse action notice. Section 615(h), covers the situation where credit is offered on "materially less favorable terms," rather than being denied.

The Dodd-Frank Act amended Section 615(h) of the FCRA to require a person to disclose a consumer's credit score and certain information relating to the credit score, if a credit score is used in making the credit decision. On July 15, 2011, the Federal Reserve Board and the FTC published final rules (effective August 15, 2011) amending the risk-based pricing regulation to effect the Dodd-Frank Act changes (76 FR 41602). On December 21, 2011, the CFPB restated the FCRA regulations at 12 CFR Part 1022. (76 Fed. Reg. 79308)

The following definitions pertain to the rules governing the risk-based pricing regulation:

Material terms means in general:

a. for open-end credit (except as provided in (b) and (d) below), the annual percentage rate (APR) required to be disclosed in the account opening disclosures required under

Regulation Z. This does not include a temporary initial rate that is lower than the rate that will apply when the temporary rate expires, any penalty rate that applies upon the occurrence of specific events (such as a late payment), or any fixed APR option for a home equity line of credit;

b. for credit cards (other than a credit card used to access a home equity line of credit or a charge card), the APR that applies for purchases. For credit cards without a purchase APR, "material terms" means the APR that varies based on consumer report information and that has the most significant financial impact on consumers;

c. for closed-end credit, the APR required to be disclosed prior to consummation under the closed-end provisions of Regulation Z; and

d. for credit that does not have an APR, the financial term that varies based on consumer report information and that has the most significant financial impact on consumers, such as an annual membership fee for a charge card.

Materially less favorable means, generally, that the terms granted, extended, or otherwise provided to a consumer differ from the terms granted, extended, or otherwise provided to another consumer such that the cost of credit to a consumer would be significantly greater than the cost of credit granted, extended, or otherwise provided to the other consumer. Relevant factors in determining the significance of a difference in cost include the type of credit product, the term of the credit extension, and the extent of the difference between the material terms granted, extended, or otherwise provided to the two consumers.

A person must provide to a consumer a notice ("risk-based pricing notice") in the form and manner prescribed by the regulation if:

1. The person uses a consumer report in connection with an application for, or a grant, extension, or other provision of, credit to a consumer for personal, family, or household purposes; and

2. Based in whole or in part on the consumer report, the person grants, extends, or otherwise provides credit to that consumer on material terms that are materially less favorable than the most favorable material terms available to a substantial proportion of consumers from that person.

The obligation to provide the notice applies to the creditor to whom the obligation is initially payable, i.e., the original creditor. This interpretation excludes brokers and other intermediaries who do not themselves grant, extend, or provide credit to consumers. See preamble to the final regulation (75 FR 2730)(January 15, 2010).

Determination of which consumers must receive notice (12 CFR 1022.72(b)). A person may determine, on a case-by-case basis, whether a consumer has received material terms that are materially less favorable by comparing the material terms offered to the consumer to the material terms offered to other consumers for a specific type of credit product. A "specific type of credit product" means one or more credit products with similar features that are designed for similar purposes. Examples include student loans, unsecured credit cards, secured credit cards, new automobile loans, used automobile loans, fixed-rate mortgage loans, and variable-rate mortgage loans.

Because making such a direct comparison between consumers may not be operationally feasible, the rules provide two alternative methods, a credit score proxy method and a tiered pricing method, both of which are described as follows:

1. Credit score proxy method (12 CFR 1022.72(b)(1)). If a person uses credit scores to set the material terms of credit, the person may determine a cutoff score that represents the point at which approximately 40 percent of its consumers have higher credit scores and 60 percent of its consumers have lower credit scores. The person may then provide a risk-based pricing notice to each consumer who has a credit score lower than the cutoff score.

Credit Score Proxy Example
The number of all, or a representative sample of, consumers to whom the person granted credit for a specific type of credit product	10,000
40 percent of consumers	4,000
Credit scores of the 4,000 consumers with the highest credit scores	700 or higher
Cutoff score	700
Credit scores of those consumers to whom the person must provide a risk-based pricing notice, because the consumers' scores are lower than cutoff score	699 or lower

Alternative to 40/60 cutoff. The regulation provides an alternative to the 40/60 cutoff discussed above for situations where more than 40 percent of consumers (e.g., 80 percent) receive the most favorable material terms. In such situations, the person may set a different cutoff score based on its historical experience. The cutoff score would be set at a point at which the approximate percentage of consumers who historically have received the most favorable material terms based on their credit score would not receive a notice in the future. Under this alternative, the risk-based pricing notices would be provided to the approximate percentage of consumers who historically have been granted credit on material terms other than the most favorable terms.

For example, based on a sample of credit extended in the past six months, a creditor may determine that approximately 80 percent of its consumers received credit at its lowest APR (i.e., the most favorable material terms), and 20 percent of its consumers received credit at a higher APR (i.e., material terms other than the most favorable). Approximately 80 percent of the sampled consumers had a credit score at or above 750, and 20 percent had a credit score below 750. As a result, the card issuer could select 750 as its cutoff score. Consumers who have credit scores lower than 750 would receive the risk-based pricing notice. See preamble to the final regulation (75 FR at 2733)(January 15, 2010).

Recalculation. A person must recalculate the score no less than every two years.

Specific type of product (sampling approach). A person must calculate the cutoff score by considering the credit scores of all, or a representative sample of, the consumers who have received credit for a specific type of credit product.

New entrants or new products (secondary approach in limited circumstances). For new entrants into the credit business or for new products subject to risk-based pricing, a person may determine the cutoff score based on information from market research or other third-party sources for a specific type of credit product. For a newly acquired credit portfolio, a person may determine the cutoff score from information obtained from the party from which it acquired the portfolio. The person must recalculate the cutoff score using the scores of its own consumers within one year after it begins using a score derived from market research, third-party data, or the party from which it acquired the portfolio. If, within that one year, it has not granted credit to a sufficient number of new consumers, thus preventing it from having sufficient data with which to recalculate a cut-off score based on the credit scores of its own consumers, it may continue to use the original cutoff score until it obtains sufficient data on which to base the calculation. However, within two years, it must calculate its own cutoff score if it has granted credit to some new consumers within those two years.

Use of multiple credit scores. For a person that generally uses two or more credit scores to set material credit terms, the person must determine the cutoff score using the same method used to evaluate multiple scores when making credit decisions (for example, using an average credit score). If the person does not consistently use the same method for evaluating multiple scores, the person must use a reasonable means. For example, the person may use any one of the methods that the person ordinarily uses or the average credit score of each consumer to calculate the credit score by a reasonable means.

No credit score available for a consumer. If no credit score is available for a consumer, a person must assume that it is granting credit on materially less favorable terms and thus must provide a risk-based pricing notice to the consumer.

2. Tiered pricing method (12 CFR 1022.72(b)(2)). If a person sets the material terms of credit by assigning each consumer to one of a discrete number of pricing tiers for a specific type of credit product, based in whole or in part on a consumer report, the person may provide a risk-based pricing notice to each consumer who is not assigned to the top pricing tier or tiers.

   If the person uses four or fewer pricing tiers, it complies by providing risk-based pricing notices to all consumers who do not qualify for the top, best-priced tier. If the person uses five or more pricing tiers, it complies by providing the notices to all consumers who do not qualify for the two top, best-priced tiers and any other tier that, combined with the top two tiers, equals no less than the top 30 percent and no more than the top 40 percent of the total number of tiers.

Application to credit card issuers (12 CFR 1022.72(c)). A credit card issuer may use any of the methods in 12 CFR 1022.72(b) to identify consumers to whom it must provide a risk-based pricing notice. Alternatively, the card issuer may provide the notice when:

1. a consumer applies for a credit card in connection with an application program or in response to a solicitation, and more than one purchase APR may apply under the program or solicitation, and
2. based in whole or in part on a consumer report, the credit card is issued to a consumer with an APR that is higher than the lowest APR available in connection with the application or solicitation.

The risk-based pricing requirements do not apply to a card issuer if the credit card program offers only a single annual APR (other than temporary initial rates or penalty rates) or if the issuer offers the consumer the lowest possible APR under the credit card program.

Content of the notice (12 CFR 1022.73(a)(1)). The risk-based pricing notice must include:

1. a statement that a consumer report (or credit report) includes information about the consumer's credit history and the type of information included in that history;
2. a statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;
3. the identity of each consumer reporting agency that furnished a consumer report used in the credit decision;
4. a statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain a copy of a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice without charge for 60 days after receipt of the notice;
5. a statement informing the consumer how to obtain a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice and providing contact information (including a toll-free telephone number, where applicable) specified by the consumer reporting agency or agencies;
6. a statement directing consumers to the website of the CFPB to obtain more information about consumer reports;
7. if a credit score of the consumer to whom a person grants, extends, or otherwise provides credit is used in setting the material terms of credit:
    a. a statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report, that the consumer's credit score was used to set the terms of credit offered, and that a credit score can change over time to reflect changes in the consumer's credit history;

   b. the credit score used by the person in making the credit decision;
   c. the range of possible credit scores under the model used to generate the credit score;
   d. all of the key factors that adversely affected the credit score, which shall not exceed four key factors, except that if one of the key factors is the number of enquiries made with respect to the consumer report, the number of key factors shall not exceed five;
   e. the date on which the credit score was created; and
   f. the name of the consumer reporting agency or other person that provided the credit score.

8. A statement that the terms offered, such as the APR, have been set based on information from a consumer report; and
9. A statement that the terms offered may be less favorable than the terms offered to consumers with better credit histories.

See Appendix H-1 and H-6 of the regulation for model forms for the risk-based pricing notice.

Account Review (12 CFR 1022.72(d)). Generally, a person must provide an account review risk-based pricing notice to the consumer if the person, based in whole or in part on a consumer report, increases the consumer's APR after a review of the consumer's account, unless one of the exceptions in 12 CFR 1022.74 applies (for example, the creditor provides an adverse action notice).

Content of account review risk-based pricing notice (12 CFR 1022.73(a)(2)). The account review risk-based pricing notice must include:

1. a statement that a consumer report (or credit report) includes information about the consumer's credit history and the type of information included in that history;
2. a statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;
3. the identity of each consumer reporting agency that furnished a consumer report used in the account review;
4. a statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain a copy of a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice without charge for 60 days after receipt of the notice;

5. a statement informing the consumer how to obtain a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice and providing contact information (including a toll-free telephone number, where applicable) specified by the consumer reporting agency or agencies;

6. a statement directing consumers to the website of the CFPB to obtain more information about consumer reports;

7. if a credit score of the consumer whose extension of credit is under review is used in increasing the APR:

   a. a statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report, that the consumer‘s credit score was used to set the terms of credit offered, and that a credit score can change over time to reflect changes in the consumer‘s credit history;

   b. the credit score used by the person in making the credit decision;

   c. the range of possible credit scores under the model used to generate the credit score;

   d. all of the key factors that adversely affected the credit score, which shall not exceed four key factors, except that if one of the key factors is the number of enquires made with respect to the consumer report, the number of key factors shall not exceed five;

   e. the date on which the credit score was created; and

   f. the name of the consumer reporting agency or other person that provided the credit score.

8. a statement that the person has conducted a review of the account using information from a consumer report; and

9. a statement that as a result of the review, the APR on the account has been increased based on information from a consumer report.

NOTE: Items 1 through 7 for the account review risk-based pricing notice are substantially the same as items 1 through 7 for the risk-based pricing notice. Only the last two items in each list are different.

See Appendix H-2 and H-7 of the regulation for model forms for the account review risk-based pricing notice.

*Form of the notice (12 CFR 1022.73(b)).*The risk-based pricing notices and the account review risk-based pricing notices must be clear and conspicuous and provided to the consumer in oral, written, or electronic form. Persons, such as creditors, are deemed to be in compliance with the disclosure requirements through use of the optional, applicable model forms, found in Appendix H of the regulation.

Timing (12 CFR 1022.73(c)). The timing requirement depends on the specific type of credit transaction as specified below.

1. For closed-end credit, a risk-based pricing notice must be provided to the consumer after the decision to approve a credit request is communicated to the consumer, but before consummation of the transaction.

2. For open-end credit, the notice must be provided after the decision to grant credit is communicated to the consumer, but before the first transaction under the plan has been made.

3. For account reviews, the notice must be provided at the time that the decision to increase the APR is communicated to the consumer. If no notice of the increase in the APR is provided to the consumer prior to the effective date of the APR change, the notice must be provided no later than five days after the effective date of the APR change.

4. For automobile lending transactions made through an auto dealer or other party that is unaffiliated with the creditor, the creditor may provide a risk-based pricing notice in the time periods described above for closed-end credit. Alternatively, the creditor may arrange to have the auto dealer or other party provide a risk-based pricing notice to the consumer on its behalf within these time periods and maintain reasonable policies and procedures to verify that the auto dealer provides the notices to consumers within the applicable time periods. If the creditor arranges to have the auto dealer or other party provide a credit score disclosure exception notice, the creditor complies if the consumer receives a notice containing a credit score obtained by the dealer or other party, even if a different credit score is obtained and used by the creditor. (12 CFR 1022.73(c)(2))

5. For credit that is granted under an open-end credit plan to a consumer in person or by telephone for contemporaneous purchase of goods or services, the risk-based pricing notice may be provided at the earlier of:

   a. The time of the first mailing to the consumer after the decision is made to approve the credit, such as in a mailing containing the account agreement or a credit card; or

   b. Within 30 days after the decision to approve the credit.

Multiple credit scores (12 CFR 1022.73(d)). When a person obtains or creates two or more credit scores and uses one of those credit scores in setting the material terms of credit (e.g., by using the low, middle, high, or most recent score), the risk-based pricing notice and the account review notice must include that credit score and the information about the credit score described in the notice content requirements above.

When a person obtains or creates two or more credit scores and uses multiple credit scores in setting the material terms of credit (e.g., by computing the average of all the credit scores obtained or created, the risk-based pricing notice and the account review notice must include one of those credit scores and the information about the credit score described previously in the notice content requirements. The notice may, at the person‘s option, include more than one credit score and the related information for each credit score disclosed.

Examples.

1. A person that uses consumer reports to set the material terms of credit cards granted, extended, or provided to consumers regularly requests credit scores from several consumer reporting agencies and uses the low score when determining the material terms it will offer to the consumer. That person must disclose the low score in the risk-based pricing notice and the account review notice.

2. A person that uses consumer reports to set the material terms of automobile loans granted, extended, or provided to consumers regularly requests credit scores from several consumer reporting agencies, each of which it uses in an underwriting program in order to determine the material terms it will offer to the consumer. That person may choose one of these scores to include in the risk-based pricing notice and the account review notice.

The rules contain a number of exceptions to the risk-based pricing notice requirement, as follows:

1. when a consumer applies for specific material terms of credit (e.g., a specific APR), and receives them, unless those terms were specified by the creditor using a consumer report after the consumer applied for the credit and after the creditor obtained the consumer report (12 CFR 1022.74(a));

2. when a person such as a creditor provides a notice of adverse action (12 CFR 1022.74(b));

3. when a person makes a firm offer of credit in a prescreened solicitation even if the person makes other firm offers of credit to other consumers on more favorable material terms (12 CFR 1022.74(c));

4. when a person generally provides a credit score disclosure to each consumer that requests a loan that is or will be secured by residential real property (12 CFR 1022.74(d));

5. when a person generally provides a credit score disclosure to each consumer that requests a loan that is not or will not be secured by residential real property (12 CFR 1022.74(e));

6. when a person who otherwise provides credit score disclosures to consumers that request loans, provides a disclosure about credit scores when no credit score is available (12 CFR 1022.74(f)).

The specific disclosure requirements for exceptions in 12 CFR 1022.74(d)-(f) are described below.

Section 1022.74(d) exception - credit score disclosure for loans secured by residential real property. An person is not required to provide a risk-based pricing notice to a consumer under 12 CFR 1022.72(a) or (c) if:

1. The consumer requests from an person an extension of credit that is or will be secured by one to four units of residential real property; and
2. The person generally provides to each consumer that requests such an extension of credit a notice that contains the following:
    a. a statement that a consumer report (or credit report) is a record of the consumer’s credit history and includes information about whether the consumer pays his or her obligations on time and how much the consumer owes to creditors;
    b. a statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report and that a credit score can change over time to reflect changes in the consumer’s credit history;
    c. a statement that the consumer’s credit score can affect whether the consumer can obtain credit and what the cost of that credit will be;
    d. a statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;
    e. a statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain copies of his or her consumer reports directly from the consumer reporting agencies, including a free report from each of the nationwide consumer reporting agencies once during any 12-month period;
    f. contact information for the centralized source from which consumers may obtain their free annual consumer reports;
    g. a statement directing consumers to the website of the CFPB to obtain more information about consumer reports;
    h. the information required to be disclosed to the consumer in Section 609(g) of the FCRA, and as described in Module 3 of these examination procedures, under “Disclosure of Credit Scores by Certain Mortgage Lenders (FCRA), Section 609(g);” and

i. the distribution of credit scores among consumers who are scored under the same scoring model that is used to generate the consumer's credit score. The distribution must:

   i. use the same scale as that of the credit score provided to the consumer, and

   ii. be presented:

      - in the form of a bar graph containing a minimum of six bars that illustrates the percentage of consumers with credit scores within the range of scores reflected in each bar,

      - by other clear and readily understandable graphical means, or

      - in a clear and readily understandable statement informing the consumer how his or her credit score compares to the scores of other consumers.

   The presentation may use a graph or statement obtained from the entity providing the credit score if it meets these requirements.

Form of the notice. The 12 CFR 1022.74(d) notice must be:

1. clear and conspicuous;
2. provided on or with the notice required by Section 609(g) of the FCRA;
3. segregated from other information provided to the consumer, except for the notice required by Section 609(g) of the FCRA; and
4. provided to the consumer in writing and in a form that the consumer may keep.

Timing. The 12 CFR 1022.74(d) notice must be provided to the consumer at the same time as the disclosure required by Section 609(g) of the FCRA is provided to the consumer, which must be provided as soon as reasonably practicable after the credit score has been obtained. In any event, the 12 CFR 1022.74(d) notice must be provided at or before consummation in the case of closed-end credit or before the first transaction is made under an open-end credit plan.

Content of the notice when using multiple credit scores. When a person obtains two or more credit scores from consumer reporting agencies in setting material terms of credit, the content of the 12 CFR 1022.74(d) notice varies depending upon whether the person only relies upon one of the credit scores or relies upon multiple credit scores.

1. If a person only relies upon one of those credit scores in setting the material terms of credit granted, extended, or otherwise provided to a consumer (for example, by using the low, middle, high, or most recent score), the notice must include that credit score and the other information required by 12 CFR 1022.74(d).

2. If a person relies upon multiple credit scores in setting the material terms of credit granted, extended, or otherwise provided to a consumer (for example, by computing the average of all the credit scores obtained), the notice must include one of those credit scores and the other information required by 12 CFR 1022.74(d).

At the person's option, the notice may include more than one credit score, along with the additional information required by 12 CFR 1022.74(d) for each credit score disclosed.

Examples.

1. A person uses consumer reports to set the material terms of mortgage credit granted, extended, or provided to consumers and regularly requests credit scores from several consumer reporting agencies. It relies upon the low score when determining the material terms it will offer to the consumer. The person must disclose the low score in the 12 CFR 1022.74(d) notice.

2. A person uses consumer reports to set the material terms of mortgage credit granted, extended, or provided to consumers and regularly requests credit scores from several consumer reporting agencies. The person takes an average of all of the credit scores obtained in order to determine the material terms it will offer to the consumer, and thus relies upon all of the credit scores that it receives. The person may choose one of these scores to include in the 12 CFR 1022.74(d) notice.

Model form. Appendix H-3 of the regulation contains a model form of the 12 CFR 1022.74(d) notice that is consolidated with the notice required by Section 609(g) of the FCRA. While use of the model form is optional, appropriate use of Model Form H-3 is deemed to comply with the requirements of 12 CFR 1022.74(d).

Section 1022.74(e) exception - credit score disclosure for loans not secured by residential real property. A person is not required to provide a risk-based pricing notice to a consumer under 12 CFR 1022.72(a) or (c) if:

1. the consumer requests from a person an extension of credit that is not or will not be secured by one to four units of residential real property; and

2. the person provides to each consumer that requests such an extension of credit a notice that contains the following:

   a. a statement that a consumer report (or credit report) is a record of the consumer's credit history and includes information about whether the consumer pays his or her obligations on time and how much the consumer owes to creditors;

   b. a statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report and that a credit score can change over time to reflect changes in the consumer's credit history;

c. a statement that the consumer’s credit score can affect whether the consumer can obtain credit and what the cost of that credit will be;

d. a statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;

e. a statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain copies of his or her consumer reports directly from the consumer reporting agencies, including a free report from each of the nationwide consumer reporting agencies once during any 12-month period;

f. contact information for the centralized source from which consumers may obtain their free annual consumer reports;

g. a statement directing consumers to the website of the CFPB to obtain more information about consumer reports;

h. the current credit score of the consumer or the most recent credit score of the consumer that was previously calculated by the consumer reporting agency for a purpose related to the extension of credit;

i. the distribution of credit scores among consumers who are scored under the same scoring model that is used to generate the consumer’s credit score. The distribution must:

    i. use the same scale as that of the credit score provided to the consumer; and

    ii. be presented:

    - in the form of a bar graph containing a minimum of six bars that illustrates the percentage of consumers with credit scores within the range of scores reflected in each bar;
    - by other clear and readily understandable graphical means; or
    - in a clear and readily understandable statement informing the consumer how his or her credit score compares to the scores of other consumers.

    The presentation may use a graph or statement obtained from the entity providing the credit score if it meets these requirements.

j. the range of possible credit scores under the model used to generate the credit score;

k. the date on which the credit score was created; and the name of the consumer reporting agency or other person that provided the credit score.

NOTE: Items a, b, c, d, e, f, g, and i for the 12 CFR 1022.74(e) notice are the same as items a, b, c, d, e, f, g, and i for the 12 CFR 1022.74(d) notice.

Form of the notice. The 12 CFR 1022.74(e) notice must be:

a. clear and conspicuous;

b. segregated from other information provided to the consumer; and

c. provided to the consumer in writing and in a form that the consumer may keep.

Timing. The 12 CFR 1022.74(e) notice generally must be provided to the consumer as soon as reasonably practicable after the credit score has been obtained, but in any event at or before consummation in the case of closed-end credit or before the first transaction is made under an open-end credit plan. The notice may alternatively be provided in the following manner:

a. For automobile lending transactions made through an auto dealer or other party that is unaffiliated with the person, such as a creditor, the person may provide a 12 CFR 1022.74(e) notice in the time periods described above. Alternatively, the creditor may arrange to have the auto dealer or other party provide a 12 CFR 1022.74(e) notice to the consumer on its behalf within these time periods and maintain reasonable policies and procedures to verify that the auto dealer provides the notice to the consumer within the applicable time periods. If the creditor arranges to have the auto dealer or other party provide a credit score disclosure exception notice, the creditor complies if the consumer receives a notice containing a credit score obtained by the dealer or other party, even if a different credit score is obtained and used by the creditor. 12 CFR 1022.73(c)(2))

b. For credit that is granted under an open-end credit plan to a consumer in person or by telephone for contemporaneous purchase of goods or services, the 12 CFR 1022.74(e) notice may be provided at the earlier of:

   i. the time of the first mailing to the consumer after the decision is made to approve the credit, such as in a mailing containing the account agreement or a credit card; or

   ii. within 30 days after the decision to approve the credit

   (12 CFR 1022.73(c)(3)).

Multiple credit scores. When a person obtains two or more credit scores from consumer reporting agencies in setting material terms of credit, the content of the 12 CFR 1022.74(e) notice varies depending if the person relies upon only one of the credit scores or relies upon multiple credit scores. These disclosures requirements are the same as those for the 12 CFR 1022.74(d) notices, as described previously.

Model form. Appendix H-4 of the regulation contains a model form of the 12 CFR 1022.74(e) notice. While use of the model form is optional, appropriate use of Model Form H-4 is deemed to comply with the requirements of 12 CFR 1022.74(e).

Section 1022.74(f) exception - credit score not available. A person is not required to provide a risk-based pricing notice to a consumer under 12 CFR 1022.72(a) or (c) if the person:

1. regularly obtains credit scores from a consumer reporting agency and provides credit score disclosures to consumers in accordance with 12 CFR 1022.74(d) or (e), but a credit score is not available from the consumer reporting agency from which the person regularly obtains credit scores for a consumer to whom the person grants, extends, or provides credit;

2. does not obtain a credit score from another consumer reporting agency in connection with granting, extending, or providing credit to the consumer; and

3. provides to the consumer a notice that contains the following:

   a. a statement that a consumer report (or credit report) includes information about the consumer's credit history and the type of information included in that history;

   b. a statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report and that a credit score can change over time in response to changes in the consumer's credit history;

   c. a statement that credit scores are important because consumers with higher credit scores generally obtain more favorable credit terms;

   d. a statement that not having a credit score can affect whether the consumer can obtain credit and what the cost of that credit will be;

   e. a statement that a credit score about the consumer was not available from a consumer reporting agency, which must be identified by name, generally due to insufficient information regarding the consumer's credit history;

   f. a statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the consumer report;

   g. a statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain copies of his or her consumer reports directly from the consumer reporting agencies, including a free consumer report from each of the nationwide consumer reporting agencies once during any 12-month period;

   h. the contact information for the centralized source from which consumers may obtain their free annual consumer reports; and

i. a statement directing consumers to the website of the CFPB to obtain more information about consumer reports.

NOTE: Items b, f, g, h, and i for the 12 CFR 1022.74(f) notice are the same as items b, f, g, h, and i for the 12 CFR 1022.74(d) and (e) notices.

Example. A person, such as a creditor, uses consumer reports to set the material terms of non-mortgage credit granted, extended, or provided to consumers and regularly requests credit scores from a particular consumer reporting agency. As required by 12 CFR 1022.74(e), the creditor provides those credit scores and additional information to consumers. The consumer reporting agency provides to the creditor a consumer report on a particular consumer that contains one trade line, but does not provide the creditor with a credit score on that consumer. If the creditor does not obtain a credit score from another consumer reporting agency and, based in whole or in part on information in a consumer report, grants, extends, or provides credit to the consumer, the creditor may provide the 12 CFR 1022.74(f) notice. If, however, the creditor obtains a credit score from another consumer reporting agency, the creditor may not rely upon the 12 CFR 1022.74(f) exception, but must satisfy the requirements of 12 CFR 1022.74(e).

Form of the notice. The 12 CFR 1022.74(f) notice must be:

1. clear and conspicuous;
2. segregated from other information provided to the consumer; and

Timing. The 12 CFR 1022.74(f) notice generally must be provided to the consumer as soon as reasonably practicable after the person has requested the credit score, but in any event not later than consummation of a transaction in the case of closed-end credit or when the first transaction is made under an open-end credit plan. The notice may alternatively be provided in the following manner:

1. For automobile lending transactions made through an auto dealer or other party that is unaffiliated with the person, such as a creditor, the creditor may provide a 12 CFR 1022.74(f) notice in the time periods described above. Alternatively, the creditor may arrange to have the auto dealer or other party provide a 12 CFR 1022.74(f) notice to the consumer on its behalf within these time periods and maintain reasonable policies and procedures to verify that the auto dealer provides the notice to the consumer within the applicable time periods.
2. For credit that is granted under an open-end credit plan to a consumer in person or by telephone for contemporaneous purchase of goods or services, the Section 1022.74(f) notice may be provided at the earlier of:

a. the time of the first mailing to the consumer after the decision is made to approve the credit, such as in a mailing containing the account agreement or a credit card; or

b. within 30 days after the decision to approve the credit (12 CFR 1022.73(c)(3)).

Model form. Appendix H-5 of the regulation contains a model form of the 12 CFR 1022.74(f) notice. While use of the model form is optional, appropriate use of Model Form H-5 is deemed to comply with the requirements of 12 CFR 1022.74(f).

Rules of Construction – 12 CFR 1022.75

The rules clarify that, in general, only one risk-based pricing notice or one credit score disclosure exception notice is required to be provided per credit extension (however, an account review would still be required, if applicable).

In a transaction involving two or more consumers who are granted, extended, or otherwise provided credit, a person must provide a risk-based pricing notice to each consumer. If the consumers have the same address, and the notice does not include a credit score(s), a person may satisfy the requirements by providing a single notice addressed to both consumers. However, if a notice includes a credit score(s), the person must provide a separate notice to each consumer whether the consumers have the same address or not. Each separate notice that includes a credit score(s) must contain only the credit score(s) of the consumer to whom the notice is provided, and not the credit score(s) of the other consumer. Similarly, for credit score disclosure exception notices, whether the consumers have the same address or not, the person must provide a separate notice to each consumer and each separate notice that includes a credit score(s) must contain only the credit score(s) of the consumer to whom the notice is provided.

A purchaser or assignee of a credit contract with a consumer is not subject to the risk-based pricing notice requirements.

Appendix H

Appendix H contains seven optional model forms that may be used to comply with the regulatory requirements. The seven model forms are:

1. H-1 Model form for risk-based pricing notice

2. H-2 Model form for account review risk-based pricing notice

3. H-3 Model form for credit score disclosure exception for credit secured by one to four units of residential real property

4. H-4 Model form for credit score disclosure exception for loans not secured by residential real property

5. H-5 Model form for credit score disclosure exception for loans where credit score is not available

6. H-6 Model form for risk-based pricing notice with credit score information

7. H-7 Model form for account review risk-based pricing notice with credit score information

Use of the model forms is not required. A person may change the forms by rearranging the format or by making technical modifications to the language of the forms. However, any change may not be so extensive as to materially affect the substance, clarity, comprehensibility, or meaningful sequence of the forms. Persons making such extensive revisions would lose the "safe harbor" that Appendix H provides. Examples of acceptable changes are provided in Appendix H to the regulation.

Module 4 – Duties of Users of Consumer Reports and Furnishers of Consumer Report Information

Overview

The FCRA contains many responsibilities for persons, such as financial institutions, that furnish information to consumer reporting agencies. These requirements generally involve ensuring the accuracy of the data that is placed in the consumer reporting system. This examination module includes reviews of the various areas associated with furnishers of information. This module will not apply to persons that do not furnish any information to consumer reporting agencies.

Section 605(h)(1) requires that, when providing a consumer report to a person that requests the report (a user), a nationwide consumer reporting agency (NCRA) must provide a notice of address discrepancy to the user if the address provided by the user in its request "substantially differs" from the address the NCRA has in the consumer's file. Section 605(h)(2) requires the federal banking agencies and the NCUA (the Agencies), and the FTC to prescribe regulations providing guidance regarding reasonable policies and procedures that a user of a consumer report should employ when such user has received a notice of address discrepancy. On November 9, 2007, the Agencies and the FTC published final rules in the Federal Register implementing this section (72 FR 63718). On December 21, 2011, the CFPB restated the FCRA regulations at 12 CFR Part 1022. (76 Fed. Reg. 79308).

Key Definitions

Nationwide consumer reporting agency (NCRA). Section 603(p) defines an NCRA as one that compiles and maintains files on consumers on a nationwide basis and regularly engages in the practice of assembling or evaluating and maintaining the following two pieces of information about consumers residing nationwide for the purpose of furnishing consumer reports to third parties bearing on a consumer's credit worthiness, credit standing, or credit capacity:

1. public record information.
2. credit account information from persons who furnish that information regularly and in the ordinary course of business.

Notice of address discrepancy (12 CFR 1022.82(b)). A "notice of address discrepancy" is a notice sent to a user by an NCRA (Section 603(p)) that informs the user of a substantial difference between the address for the consumer that the user provided to request the consumer report and the address(es) in the NCRA's file for the consumer.

Requirement to form a reasonable belief – 12 CFR 1022.82(c)

A user must develop and implement reasonable policies and procedures designed to enable the user to form a reasonable belief that the consumer report relates to the consumer whose report was requested, when the user receives a notice of address discrepancy in connection with a new or existing account.

The rules provide the following examples of reasonable policies and procedures for forming a reasonable belief that a consumer report relates to the consumer whose report was requested:

1. comparing information in the consumer report with information the user:
    a. has obtained and used to verify the consumer's identity as required by the Customer Identification Program rules (31 CFR 1020.220);
    b. maintains in its records; or
    c. obtains from a third party; or
2. verifying the information in the consumer report with the consumer.

Requirement to furnish a consumer's address to an NCRA – 12 CFR 1022.82(d)

A user must develop and implement reasonable policies and procedures for furnishing to the NCRA an address for the consumer that the user has reasonably confirmed is accurate when the user does the following:

1. forms a reasonable belief that the report relates to the consumer whose report was requested;
2. establishes a continuing relationship with the consumer (i.e., in connection with a new account); and
3. regularly, and in the ordinary course of business, furnishes information to the NCRA that provided the notice of address discrepancy.

A user's policies and procedures for furnishing a consumer's address to an NCRA must require the user to furnish the confirmed address as part of the information it regularly furnishes to the NCRA during the reporting period when it establishes a continuing relationship with the consumer.

The rules also provide the following examples of how a user may reasonably confirm an address is accurate:

1. verifying the address with the consumer whose report was requested;
2. reviewing its own records;
3. verifying the address through third-party sources; or
4. using other reasonable means.

Furnishers of Information: General – Section 623(e); 15 U.S.C. 1681s-2; 12 CFR 1022, Subpart E

Section 623(e) required the Agencies and the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) to:

1. issue guidelines for use by furnishers regarding the accuracy and integrity of the information about consumers that they furnish to consumer reporting agencies;
2. prescribe regulations requiring furnishers to establish reasonable policies and procedures for implementing the guidelines; and
3. issue regulations identifying the circumstances under which a furnisher must reinvestigate disputes concerning the accuracy of information contained in a consumer report based on a direct request from a consumer.

Key Definitions – 12 CFR 1022.41

The following definitions pertain to the rules governing the furnishers of information to a consumer reporting agency:

Accuracy means that the information a furnisher provides to a consumer reporting agency about an account or other relationship with the consumer correctly:

1. reflects the terms of and liability for the account or other relationship;
2. reflects the consumer's performance and other conduct with respect to the account or other relationship; and
3. identifies the appropriate consumer.

Direct dispute means a dispute submitted by a consumer directly to a furnisher (including a furnisher that is a debt collector) concerning the accuracy of any information contained in a consumer report and pertaining to an account or other relationship that the furnisher has or had with the consumer.

Furnisher means an entity that furnishes information relating to consumers to one or more consumer reporting agencies for inclusion in a consumer report. An entity is not a furnisher when it:

1. provides information to a consumer reporting agency solely to obtain a consumer report in accordance with the permissible purposes outlined in Sections 604(a) and (f) of the FCRA;
2. is acting as a "consumer reporting agency" as defined in Section 603(f) of the FCRA;
3. is a consumer to whom the furnished information pertains; or
4. is a neighbor, friend, or associate of the consumer, or another individual with whom the consumer is acquainted or who may have knowledge about the consumer, and who provides information about the consumer's character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living in response to a specific request from a consumer reporting agency.

Identifying information means any name or number that may be used alone or in conjunction with any other information to identify a specific person.

Identity theft means a fraud committed or attempted using the identifying information of another person without authority.

Integrity means that the information a furnisher provides to a consumer reporting agency about an account or other relationship with the consumer:

1. is substantiated by the furnisher's records at the time it is furnished;
2. is furnished in a form and manner that is designed to minimize the likelihood that the information may be incorrectly reflected in a consumer report; and
3. includes the information in the furnisher's possession about the account or other relationship that:
    a. the relevant Agency has determined that the absence of which would likely be materially misleading in evaluating a consumer's creditworthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living; and
    b. is specified in the Interagency Guidelines Concerning the Accuracy and Integrity of Information Furnished to Consumer Reporting Agencies (FCRA rule, Appendix E). Currently, the Guidelines specify the credit limit, if applicable and in the furnisher's possession.

Duties of Furnishers to Provide Accurate Information – Section 623(a); 15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)

Section 623(a) states that a person, including a financial institution, may, but need not, specify an address for receipt of notices from consumers concerning inaccurate information. If the person specifies such an address, then it may not furnish information relating to a consumer to any consumer reporting agency, if (a) the consumer notified the person, at the specified address, that the information is inaccurate, and (b) the information is inaccurate. If the person does not specify an address, then it may not furnish any information relating to a consumer to any consumer reporting agency if the person knows or has reasonable cause to believe that the information is inaccurate.

When a person that (regularly and in the ordinary course of business) furnishes information to one or more consumer reporting agencies about its transactions or experiences with any consumer determines that any such information is not complete or accurate, the person must promptly notify the consumer reporting agency of that determination. The person must provide corrections to that information or any additional information necessary to make the information complete and accurate to the consumer reporting agency. Further, the person thereafter must not furnish any information that remains incomplete or inaccurate to the consumer reporting agency.

If a consumer disputes the completeness or accuracy of any information a person furnishes to a consumer reporting agency, that person may not furnish the information to any consumer reporting agency without notice that the consumer disputes the information.

Reasonable policies and procedures concerning the accuracy and integrity of furnished information (12 CFR 1022.42) and Interagency Guidelines (Appendix E)

Each furnisher must establish and implement reasonable written policies and procedures regarding the accuracy and integrity of consumer information that it furnishes to a consumer reporting agency. The policies and procedures must be appropriate to the nature, size, complexity, and scope of each furnisher's activities. In developing its policies and procedures, a furnisher must consider the Interagency Guidelines and may include its existing policies and procedures that are relevant and appropriate. Each furnisher must also review its policies and procedures periodically and update them as necessary to ensure their continued effectiveness. The guideline's recommendations include the following:

1. using standard data reporting formats and standard procedures for compiling and furnishing data, where feasible, such as electronic transmission of information about consumers to consumer reporting agencies;

2. maintaining records for a reasonable period of time, not less than any applicable recordkeeping requirement, in order to substantiate the accuracy of any information furnished about consumers to consumer reporting agencies that is subject to a direct disputer; and

3. training staff that participates in activities related to the furnishing of information about consumers to consumer reporting agencies.

Voluntary closures of accounts – Section 623(a)(4); 15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)(4)

This section requires a person, including a financial institution, who regularly and in the ordinary course of business furnishes information to a consumer reporting agency regarding one of its consumer credit accountholders, to notify the consumer reporting agency of the consumer's voluntary account closure. This notice is to be furnished to the consumer reporting agency as part of the regularly furnished information for the period in which the account is closed.

Notice involving delinquent accounts – Section 623(a)(5); 15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)(5)

This section requires that a person, including a financial institution, that furnishes information to a consumer reporting agency about a delinquent account placed for collection, charged off, or subjected to any similar action, must, not later than 90 days after furnishing the information to the consumer reporting agency, notify the consumer reporting agency of the month and year of the commencement of the delinquency that immediately preceded the action.

Duties upon notice of dispute from a consumer reporting agency – Section 623(b); 15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(b)

This section requires that whenever a person, such as a financial institution, receives a notice of dispute from a consumer reporting agency regarding the accuracy or completeness of any information the person provided to a consumer reporting agency pursuant to Section 611 (Procedure in Case of Disputed Accuracy), that person must, pursuant to Section 623(b):

1. conduct an investigation regarding the disputed information;
2. review all relevant information the consumer reporting agency provided along with the notice;
3. report the results of the investigation to the consumer reporting agency;
4. if the investigation finds the information is incomplete or inaccurate, report those results to all nationwide consumer reporting agencies to which the financial institution previously provided the information; and
5. if the disputed information is incomplete, inaccurate, or not verifiable by the person, it must promptly, for purposes of reporting to the consumer reporting agency do one of the following:

    a. modify the item of information.

    b. delete the item of information.

    c. permanently block the reporting of that item of information.

The person must complete the required investigations, reviews, and reports within 30 days. The person may extend the time period for 15 days if a consumer reporting agency receives additional relevant information from the consumer.

Duties upon notice of dispute from a consumer (direct disputes) – Section 623(a)(8); 15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)(8); 12 CFR 1022.43

General rule. A furnisher must conduct a reasonable investigation of a direct dispute (unless exceptions, described later, apply) if the dispute relates to:

1. the consumer's liability for a credit account or other debt with the furnisher, such as direct disputes relating to whether there is or has been identity theft or fraud against the consumer, whether there is individual or joint liability on an account, or whether the consumer is an authorized user of a credit account;

2. the terms of a credit account or other debt with the furnisher, such as, direct disputes relating to the type of account, principal balance, scheduled payment amount on an account, or the amount of the credit limit on an open-end account;

3. the consumer's performance or other conduct concerning an account or other relationship with the furnisher such as, direct disputes relating to the current payment status, high balance, payment date, the payment amount, or the date an account was opened or closed; or

4. any other information contained in a consumer report regarding an account or other relationship with the furnisher that bears on the consumer's creditworthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living.

Exceptions. The direct dispute requirements do not apply to a furnisher if the direct dispute relates to:

1. the consumer's identifying information such as name(s), date of birth, Social Security number, telephone number(s), or address(es);

2. the identity of past or present employers;

3. inquiries or requests for a consumer report;

4. information derived from public records, such as judgments, bankruptcies, liens, and other legal matters (unless the information was provided by a furnisher with an account or other relationship with the consumer);

5. information related to fraud alerts or active duty alerts; or

6. information provided to a consumer reporting agency by another furnisher.

The direct dispute requirements also do not apply if the furnisher has a reasonable belief that the direct dispute is:

1. submitted by a credit repair organization;
2. is prepared on behalf of the consumer by a credit repair organization; or
3. is submitted on a form supplied to the consumer by a credit repair organization.

Direct Dispute Address. A furnisher is required to investigate a direct dispute only if a consumer submits a dispute notice to the furnisher at:

1. the address provided by a furnisher and listed on a consumer report relating to the consumer;
2. an address clearly and conspicuously specified by the furnisher that is provided to the consumer in writing or electronically (if the consumer has agreed to the electronic delivery of information from the furnisher); or
3. any business address of the furnisher if the furnisher has not provided a specific address for submitting direct disputes.

Direct Dispute Notice Contents. A dispute notice from a consumer must include:

1. sufficient information to identify the account or other relationship that is in dispute, such as an account number and the name, address, and telephone number of the consumer;
2. the specific information that the consumer is disputing and an explanation of the basis for the dispute; and
3. all supporting documentation or other information reasonably required by the furnisher to substantiate the basis of the dispute. This documentation may include, for example, a copy of the relevant portion of the consumer report that contains the allegedly inaccurate information; a police report; a fraud or identity theft affidavit; a court order; or account statements.

Duties of a Furnisher after Receiving a Direct Dispute Notice from a Consumer. After receiving a dispute notice from a consumer, the furnisher must:

1. conduct a reasonable investigation with respect to the disputed information;
2. review all relevant information provided by the consumer with the dispute notice;
3. complete its investigation of the dispute and report the results of the investigation to the consumer before the expiration of the period under Section 611(a)(1) of the FCRA (15 U.S.C. 1681i(a)(1)) within which a consumer reporting agency would be required to complete its action if the consumer had elected to dispute the information under that section; and

4. if the investigation finds that the information reported was inaccurate, promptly notify each consumer reporting agency to which the furnisher provided inaccurate information of investigation findings and provide to the consumer reporting agency any correction to that information that is necessary to make the information provided by the furnisher accurate.

Frivolous or Irrelevant Disputes. A furnisher is not required to investigate a direct dispute if the furnisher has reasonably determined that the dispute is frivolous or irrelevant. A dispute qualifies as frivolous or irrelevant if:

1. the consumer did not provide sufficient information to investigate the disputed information;
2. the direct dispute is substantially the same as a dispute previously submitted by or on behalf of the consumer and the dispute is one with respect to which the furnisher has already complied with the statutory or regulatory requirements. However, a direct dispute would not be "substantially the same" as the one previously submitted if the dispute includes new information required by the regulation to be provided to the furnisher, but that had not previously been provided to the furnisher; or
3. the furnisher is not required to investigate the direct dispute because one or more of the exceptions listed in 12 CFR 1022.43(b) applies.

Upon making a determination that a dispute is frivolous or irrelevant, the furnisher must notify the consumer of the determination not later than five business days after making the determination, by mail or, if authorized by the consumer for that purpose, by any other means available to the furnisher. The furnisher's notice that a dispute is frivolous or irrelevant must include the reasons for such determination and identify any information required to investigate the disputed information. The notice may consist of a standardized form describing the general nature of such information.

Section 623(a) has specific requirements for furnishers of information, including financial institutions, to a consumer reporting agency that received notice from a consumer reporting agency that furnished information may be fraudulent as a result of identity theft. Section 605B, Block of Information Resulting From Identity Theft, requires consumer reporting agencies to notify furnishers of information, including financial institutions, that the information may be the result of identity theft, an identity theft report has been filed, and that a block has been requested. Upon receiving such notice, Section 623(a)(6) requires furnishers to establish and follow reasonable procedures to ensure that it does not re-report this information to the consumer reporting agency, thus "re-polluting" the victim's consumer report.

Section 615(f), Prohibition on Sale or Transfer of Debt Caused by Identity Theft, also prohibits a furnisher from selling or transferring debt caused by an alleged identity theft.

Negative Information Notice – Section 623(a)(7); 15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)(7); 12 CFR 1022.1(b)(2)(ii)

Section 623(a)(7) requires a financial institution to provide consumers with a notice either before it provides negative information to a nationwide consumer reporting agency, or within 30 days after reporting the negative information.

Institutions may provide this disclosure on or with any notice of default, any billing statement, or any other materials provided to the customer, as long as the notice is clear and conspicuous. Institutions may also choose to provide this notice to all customers as an abundance of caution. However, financial institutions may not include this notice in the initial disclosures provided under Section 127(a) of the Truth in Lending Act.

Key Definitions

Negative information. For these purposes, "negative information" means any information concerning a customer's delinquencies, late payments, insolvency, or any form of default.

Nationwide consumer reporting agency. Section 603(p) of the FCRA defines a "nationwide consumer reporting agency" as a: > consumer reporting agency that compiles and maintains files on consumers on a nationwide basis.

It defines this type of consumer reporting agency as one that regularly assembles or evaluates, and maintains, each of the following regarding consumers residing nationwide for the purpose of furnishing consumer reports to third parties bearing on a consumer's creditworthiness, credit standing, or credit capacity:

1. public record information.
2. credit account information from persons who furnish that information regularly and in the ordinary course of business.

Model text

Institutions may use the following model text to comply with these requirements. The first model contains text an institution can use when it provides a notice before furnishing negative information. The second model form contains text to use when an institution provides notice within 30 days after reporting negative information:

- Notice prior to communicating negative information (Model B-1):

  "We may report information about your account to credit bureaus. Late payments, missed payments, or other defaults on your account may be reflected in your credit report."

- Notice within 30 days after communicating negative information (Model B-2):

  "We have told a credit bureau about a late payment, missed payment, or other default on your account. This information may be reflected in your credit report."

Use of the model form(s) is not required; however, proper use of the model forms provides a financial institution with a safe harbor from liability. A financial institution may make certain changes to the language or format of the model notices without losing the safe harbor from liability provided by the model notices. The changes to the model notices may not be so extensive as to affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the language in the model notices. A financial institution making extensive revisions will lose the safe harbor from liability that the model notices provide. Acceptable changes include:

1. rearranging the order of the references to "late payment(s)," or "missed payment(s)."
2. pluralizing the terms "credit bureau," "credit report," and "account."
3. specifying the particular type of account on which it may furnish information, such as "credit card account."
4. rearranging in Model Notice B-1 the phrases "information about your account" and "to credit bureaus" such that it would read, "We may report to credit bureaus information about your account."

Module 5 – Consumer Alerts and Identity Theft Protections

Overview

The FCRA contains several provisions for both consumer reporting agencies and users of consumer reports, including financial institutions, that are designed to help combat identity theft. This module applies to persons that are not consumer reporting agencies, but are users of consumer reports.

Two primary requirements exist for users of consumer reports: first, a user of a consumer report that contains a fraud or active duty alert must take steps to verify the identity of an individual to whom the consumer report relates, and second, a person must disclose certain information when consumers allege that they are the victims of identity theft.

Fraud and Active Duty Alerts – Section 605A(h); 15 U.S.C. 1681c-1(h)

Initial Fraud and Active Duty Alerts

Consumers who suspect that they may be the victims of fraud including identity theft may request nationwide consumer reporting agencies to place initial fraud alerts in their consumer reports. These alerts must remain in a consumer's report for no less than 90 days. In addition, members of the armed services who are called to active duty may also request that active duty alerts be placed in their consumer reports. Active duty alerts must remain in these service members' files for no less than 12 months.

Section 605A(h)(1)(B), Limitations on Use of Information for Credit Extensions, requires users of consumer reports, including financial institutions, to verify a consumer's identity if a consumer report includes a fraud or active duty alert. Unless the user of the consumer report uses reasonable policies and procedures to form a reasonable belief that it knows the identity of the person making the request, the user may not:

1. establish a new credit plan or extension credit (other than under an open-end credit plan) in the name of the consumer;
2. issue an additional card on an existing account; or
3. increase a credit limit.

Extended Alerts

Consumers who allege that they are the victim of an identity theft may also place an extended alert, which lasts seven years, on their consumer report. Extended alerts require consumers to submit identity theft reports and appropriate proof of identity to the nationwide consumer reporting agencies.

Section 605A(h)(2)(B), Limitation on Users, requires a user that obtains a consumer report that contains an extended alert to contact the consumer in person or by the method the consumer lists in the alert prior to performing any of the three actions listed above.

Section 609(e) requires a person, such as a financial institution, to provide records of fraudulent transactions to victims of identity theft within 30 days after the receipt of a request for the records. These records include the application and business transaction records under the control of the person whether maintained by the person itself or another person on behalf of the institution (such as a service provider).

The person should provide this information to any of the following:

1. the victim;
2. any federal, state, or local government law enforcement agency or officer specified by the victim in the request; or
3. any law enforcement agency investigating the identity theft that was authorized by the victim to take receipt of these records.

The victim must make the request for the records in writing and send it to the person at the address specified by the person for this purpose. The person may ask the victim to provide information, if known, regarding the date of the transaction or application, and any other identifying information such as an account or transaction number.

Unless the person has a high degree of confidence that it knows the identity of the victim making the request for information, the person must take prudent steps to positively identify the person before disclosing any information. Proof of identity can include any of the following:

1. a government-issued identification card;
2. personally identifying information of the same type that was provided to the person by the unauthorized person; or
3. personally identifying information that the person typically requests from new applicants or for new transactions.

At the election of the person, the victim must also provide the person with proof of an identity theft complaint, which may consist of a copy of a police report evidencing the claim of identity theft and a copy of a properly completed affidavit. The CFPB's Identity Theft Affidavit is available on the CFPB's website (consumerfinance.gov/learnmore). The version of this form developed by the FTC and available on the FTC's Website (ftc.gov/idtheft) remains valid and sufficient for this purpose (12 CFR 1022.3(i)(3)(ii)).

When these conditions are met, the person must provide the information at no charge to the victim. However, the person is not required to provide any information if, acting in good faith, the person determines any of the following:

1. section 609(e) does not require disclosure of the information;
2. the person does not have a high degree of confidence in knowing the true identity of the requestor, based on the identification and/or proof provided;
3. the request for information is based on a misrepresentation of fact by the requestor; or
4. the information requested is Internet navigational data or similar information about a person's visit to a website or online service.

Duties Regarding the Detection, Prevention, and Mitigation of Identity Theft – Section 615(e); 15 U.S.C. 1681m(e)

Section 615(e) requires the federal banking agencies and the NCUA (the Agencies) as well as the FTC to prescribe regulations and guidelines for entities under their enforcement authority regarding the detection, prevention, and mitigation of identity theft. On November 9, 2007, the Agencies published final rules and guidelines in the Federal Register implementing this section (72 FR 63718). The Agencies also have issued examination procedures for the implementing regulations. CFPB examiners are not expected to examine for compliance with Section 615(e)). If CFPB examiners become aware of potential issues in this area, the appropriate federal regulator should be notified.

Section 615(e)(1)(C) requires the Agencies and the FTC to prescribe regulations for debit and credit card issuers regarding the assessment of the validity of address changes for existing accounts. On November 9, 2007, the Agencies and the FTC published final rules in the Federal Register implementing this section (72 FR 63718). The regulations require card issuers to have procedures to assess the validity of an address change if the card issuer receives a notice of change of address for an existing account, and within a short period of time (during at least the first 30 days), receives a request for an additional or replacement card for the same account. The Agencies also have issued examination procedures for the implementing regulations. CFPB examiners are not expected to examine for compliance with Section 615(e)). If CFPB examiners become aware of potential issues in this area, the appropriate federal regulator should be notified.

Disposal of Consumer Information – Section 628; 15 U.S.C. 1681w

Section 628 requires the federal banking agencies to prescribe regulations for entities under their enforcement authority regarding the proper disposal of consumer information. On December 28, 2004, the federal banking agencies published final rules and guidelines in the Federal Register implementing this section (69 FR 77610). The agencies also have issued examination procedures for the implementing regulations. CFPB examiners are not expected to examine for compliance with Section 628. If CFPB examiners become aware of potential issues in this area, the appropriate federal regulator should be notified.

Regulations

Consumer Financial Protection Bureau Regulation (12 CFR)

Part 1022	Fair Credit Reporting (Regulation V)

Examination Objectives[1] [2]

- To determine the covered entity's compliance with the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) and implementing regulations.
- To assess the quality of the covered entity's compliance risk management system to ensure compliance with the FCRA, as amended.
- To determine the reliance that can be placed on the covered entity's internal controls and procedures for monitoring the entity's compliance with the FCRA.
- To direct corrective action when violations of law are identified, or when the covered entity's policies or internal controls are deficient.

Initial Examination Procedures

The initial examination procedures are designed to acquaint examiners with the operations and processes of the entity being examined. They focus on the entity's systems, controls, policies, and procedures, including audits and previous examination findings.

The applicability of the various sections of the FCRA and the implementing regulations depends on an entity's unique operations. The functional examination requirements are presented topically in modules 1 through 5.

Initially, examiners should:

1. Through discussions with management and review of available information, determine if the entity's internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance in the FCRA area under review. Consider the following:

    a. organization charts;

    b. process flowcharts;

    c. policies and procedures;

    d. loan documentation;

    e. checklists;

[1] These reflect FFIEC-approved procedures.

[2] These procedures do not currently contain a module on the requirements for consumer reporting agencies.

   f. computer program documentation (for example, records illustrating the fields and types of data reported to consumer reporting agencies; automated records tracking customer opt-outs for FCRA affiliate information sharing; etc.).

2. Review any compliance audit material, including workpapers and reports, to determine whether:

   a. the scope of the audit addresses all provisions as applicable;

   b. corrective actions were taken to follow up on previously identified deficiencies;

   c. the testing includes samples covering all product types and decision centers;

   d. the work performed is accurate;

   e. significant deficiencies and their causes are included in reports to management and/or to the board of directors; and

   f. the frequency of review is appropriate.

3. Review the entity's training materials to determine whether:

   a. appropriate training is provided to individuals responsible for FCRA compliance and operational procedures; and

   b. the training is comprehensive and covers the various aspects of the FCRA that apply to the individual entity's operations.

4. Through discussions with management, determine which portions of the examination modules will apply.

5. Complete appropriate examination modules; document and form conclusions regarding the quality of the entity's compliance management systems and compliance with FCRA.

Module 1 – Obtaining Consumer Reports

Investigative Consumer Reports – Section 606; 15 U.S.C. 1681d

1. Determine whether the entity obtains consumer reports.

2. Determine whether the entity obtains prescreened consumer reports and/or reports for employment purposes. If so, complete the appropriate sections of Module 3.

3. Determine whether the entity procures or causes an investigative consumer report to be prepared. If so, ensure that the appropriate disclosure is given to the consumer within the required time period. In addition, ensure that the entity certified compliance with the disclosure requirements to the consumer reporting agency.

4. Ensure that the entity obtains consumer reports only for permissible purposes. Confirm that the entity certifies to the consumer reporting agency the purposes for which it will obtain reports. (The certification is usually contained in an entity's contract with the consumer reporting agency.)

5. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, such as the receipt of several consumer complaints, review a sample of consumer reports obtained from a consumer reporting agency and determine whether the entity had permissible purposes to obtain the reports. For example,

   - obtain a copy of a billing statement or other list of consumer reports obtained by the entity from the consumer reporting agency for a period of time; and

   - compare this list, or a sample from this list to the entity's records to ensure that there is a permissible purpose for the report(s) obtained. This could include any permissible purpose, such as the consumer applied for credit, insurance, or employment, etc. The entity may also obtain a report in connection with the review of an existing account.

1. Review the entity's policies, procedures, and practices concerning the sharing of consumer information with third parties, including both affiliated and nonaffiliated third parties. Determine the type of information shared and with whom the information is shared. (This portion of the examination process may overlap with a review of the entity's compliance with the Privacy of Consumer Financial Information Regulations that implement the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA).

2. Determine whether the entity's information sharing practices fall within the exceptions to the definition of a consumer report. If they do not, the entity could be considered a consumer reporting agency and subject to the FCRA requirements for consumer reporting agencies.

3. If the entity shares information other than transaction and experience information with affiliates subject to opt-out provisions, determine whether the entity's GLBA privacy notice contains tinformation regarding how to opt out, as required by the Privacy of Consumer Financial Information regulations.

4. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, obtain a sample of opt-out rights exercised by consumers and determine if the entity honored the opt-out requests by not sharing "other information" about the consumers with the entity's affiliates subsequent to receiving a consumer's opt-out direction.

1. Review the entity's policies, procedures, and practices concerning the collection and use of consumer medical information in connection with any determination of the consumer's eligibility, or continued eligibility for credit.

2. If the entity's policies, procedures, and practices allow for obtaining and using consumer medical information in the context of a credit transaction, determine whether there are adequate controls in place to ensure that the information is only used subject to the financial information exception in the rules, or under a specific exception within the rules.

3. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, obtain samples of credit transactions to determine whether the use of medical information pertaining to a consumer was done strictly under the financial information exception or the specific exceptions under the regulation.

4. Determine whether the entity has adequate policies and procedures in place to limit the redisclosure of consumer medical information that was received from a consumer reporting agency or an affiliate.

5. Determine whether the entity shares medical information about a consumer with affiliates. If it does, determine whether the sharing occurred in accordance with an exception in the rules that enables the entity to share the information without becoming a consumer reporting agency.

Affiliate Marketing Opt Out – Section 624; 15 U.S.C. 1681s-3; 12 CFR 1022 Subpart C

1. Determine whether the entity receives consumer eligibility information from an affiliate. Stop here if it does not because Subpart C of 12 CFR 1022 does not apply.

2. Determine whether the entity uses consumer eligibility information received from an affiliate to make a solicitation for marketing purposes that is subject to the notice and opt-out requirements. If it does not, stop here.

3. Evaluate the entity's policies, procedures, practices and internal controls to ensure that, where applicable, the consumer is provided with an appropriate notice, a reasonable opportunity, and a reasonable and simple method to opt out of the entity's using eligibility information to make solicitations for marketing purposes to the consumer, and that the entity is honoring the consumer's opt-outs.

4. If compliance risk management weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, obtain and review a sample of notices to ensure technical compliance and a sample of opt-out requests from consumers to determine if the entity is honoring the opt-out requests.

    a. Determine whether the opt-out notices are clear, conspicuous, and concise and contain the required information, including the name of the affiliate(s) providing the notice, a general description of the types of eligibility information that may be used to make solicitations to the consumer, and the duration of the opt out (12 CFR 1022.23(a)).

    b. Review opt-out notices that are coordinated and consolidated with any other notice or disclosure that is required under other provisions of law for compliance with the affiliate marketing regulation (12 CFR 1022.23(b)).

    c. Determine whether the opt-out notices and renewal notices provide the consumer a reasonable opportunity to opt out and a reasonable and simple method to opt out (12 CFR 1022.24 and .25).

    d. Determine whether the opt-out notice and renewal notice are provided (by mail, delivery or electronically) so that a consumer can reasonably be expected to receive that actual notice (12 CFR 1022.26).

    e. Determine whether, after an opt-out period expires, an entity provides a consumer a renewal notice prior to making solicitations based on eligibility information received from an affiliate (12 CFR 1022.27).

Module 3 – Disclosures to Consumers and Miscellaneous Requirements

1. Determine if the entity obtains consumer reports on current or prospective employees.
2. Assess the entity's policies and procedures to determine if appropriate disclosures are provided to current and prospective employees when an entity obtains consumer reports for employment purposes, including situations where the entity takes adverse actions based on consumer report information.
3. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of the disclosures to determine if they are accurate and in compliance with the technical FCRA requirements.

Prescreened Consumer Reports and Opt-Out Notice – Sections 604(c) and 615(d); 15 U.S.C. 1681b(c) and 15 U.S.C. 1681m(d) 12 CFR 1022.54

1. Determine whether the entity obtained and used prescreened consumer reports in connection with offers of credit and/or insurance.
2. Evaluate the entity's policies and procedures to determine if a list of the criteria used for prescreened offers, including all post-application criteria, is maintained in the entity's files and the criteria are applied consistently when consumers respond to the offers.
3. Determine if written solicitations contain the required disclosures of the consumers' right to opt-out of prescreened solicitations and comply with all requirements applicable at the time of the offer.
4. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, obtain and review a sample of approved and denied responses to the offers to ensure that criteria were appropriately followed.

Truncation of Credit and Debit Card Account Numbers – Sections 605(g); 15 U.S.C. 1681c(g)

1. Determine whether the entity's policies and procedures ensure that electronically generated receipts from automated teller machines and point-of-sale terminals or other machines do not contain more than the last five digits of the card number and do not contain the expiration dates.
2. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review samples of actual receipts to ensure compliance.

Disclosure of Credit Scores by Certain Mortgage Lenders – Sections 609(g); 15 U.S.C. 1681g(g)

1. Determine if the entity uses credit scores in connection with applications for closed-end or open-end loans secured by one- to four-family residential real property.
2. Evaluate the entity's policies and procedures to determine whether accurate disclosures are provided to applicants as soon as is reasonably practicable after using credit scores.
3. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of disclosures given to home loan applicants to determine technical compliance with the requirements.

Adverse Action Disclosures – Sections 615(a) and (b); 15 U.S.C. 1681m(a) and (b)

1. Determine whether the policies and procedures adequately ensure that the creditor or other person provides the appropriate disclosures, including the consumer's credit score as appropriate, when it takes adverse action against consumers based in whole or in part on information contained in a consumer report or specified information received from third parties, including affiliates.
2. Review the policies and procedures of the creditor or other person for responding to requests for information in response to these adverse action notices.
3. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of adverse action notices to determine if they are accurate and in technical compliance.

Debt Collector Communications Concerning Identity Theft – Sections 615(g); 15 U.S.C. 1681m(g)

1. Determine whether the entity collects debts for third parties.
2. Determine whether the entity has policies and procedures to ensure that the third parties are notified if the entity obtains any information that may indicate that the debt in question is the result of fraud or identity theft.
3. Determine if the entity has effective policies and procedures for providing information to consumers to whom the fraudulent debts relate.
4. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of instances where consumers have alleged identity theft and requested information related to transactions to determine if all of the appropriate information was provided to the consumer.

Risk-Based Pricing Notice – Section 615(h); 15 U.S.C. 1681m(h); 12 CFR 1022, Subpart H

1. Determine whether the creditor (or other person) uses consumer report information in consumer credit decisions.

   If yes, determine whether the creditor uses such information to provide credit on terms that are "materially less favorable" than the most favorable material terms available to a substantial proportion of its consumers. Relevant factors in determining the significance of differences in the cost of credit include the type of credit product, the term of the credit extension, and the extent of the difference.

   If "yes," the creditor is subject to the risk-based pricing regulations.

2. Determine the method the creditor uses to identify consumers who must receive a risk-based pricing notice and whether the method complies with the regulation (12 CFR 1022.72(b)).

   a. For creditors that use the direct comparison method (12 CFR 1022.72(b)), determine whether the creditor directly compares the material terms offered to each consumer and the material terms offer to other consumers for a specific type of credit product.

   b. For creditors that use the credit score proxy method (12 CFR 1022.72(b)(1)):

      i. determine whether the creditor calculates the cutoff score by considering the credit scores of all, or a representative sample, of consumers who have received credit for a specific type of credit product;

      ii. determine whether the creditor recalculates the cutoff score no less than every two years;

      iii. for new entrants into the credit business, for new products subject to risk-based pricing, or for acquired credit portfolios, determine whether the creditor recalculates the cutoff scores within time periods specified in the regulation;

      iv. for creditors using more than one credit score to set material terms, determine whether the creditor establishes a cutoff score according to the methods specified in the regulation; and

      v. if no credit score is available for a consumer, determine whether the creditor provides the consumer a risk-based pricing notice.

   c. For creditors that use the tiered pricing method (12 CFR 1022.72(b)(2)):

      i. when four or fewer pricing tiers are used, determine if the creditor sends risk-based pricing notices to consumers who do not qualify for the top, best-priced tier; or

      ii. when five or more pricing tiers are used, determine if the creditor provides risk-based pricing notices to consumers who do not qualify for the two top, best-priced tiers and any other tier that, combined with the top two tiers, equal no less than the top 30 percent and no more than the top 40 percent of the total number of tiers.

d. For credit card issuers:

   i. Determine whether the card issuer uses the direct comparison method, the credit score proxy method, or the tiered pricing method to identify consumers to whom it must provide a risk-based pricing notice.

   ii. If the creditor does not use the direct comparison method, the credit score proxy method, or the tiered pricing method, determine whether the card issuer uses the following method as permitted by 12 CFR 1022.72(c) to identify consumers to whom it must provide a risk-based pricing notice:

      a) a consumer applies for a credit card either in connection with an application program, such as a direct-mail offer or a take-one application, or in response to a solicitation under 12 CFR 1026.60, and more than a single possible purchase annual percentage rate (APR) may apply under the program or solicitation; and

      b) based in whole or in part on a consumer report, the credit card issuer provides a credit card to the consumer with a purchase APR that is greater than the lowest purchase APR available in connection with the application or solicitation.

   iii. Determine whether the card issuer provides a risk-based pricing notice to each consumer that is provided a credit card with a purchase APR greater than the lowest purchase APR available under the program or solicitation.

3. Determine whether the creditor provides a risk-based pricing notice to a consumer (12 CFR 1022.72(a)). For creditors that provide the notice, proceed to step #4. If the creditor does not provide a risk-based pricing notice, proceed to step #5 to determine whether an exception applies (12 CFR 1022.74).

4. Determine whether the risk based pricing notice contains (12 CFR 1022.73(a)(1)):

   a. a statement that a consumer report (or credit report) includes information about the consumer's credit history and the type of information included in that history;

   b. a statement that the terms offered, such as the APR, have been set based on information from a consumer report;

   c. statement that the terms offered may be less favorable than the terms offered to consumers with better credit histories;

   d. a statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;

e. the identity of each consumer reporting agency that furnished a consumer report used in the credit decision;

f. a statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain a copy of a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice without charge for 60 days after receipt of the notice;

g. a statement informing the consumer how to obtain a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice and providing contact information (including a toll-free telephone number, where applicable) specified by the consumer reporting agency or agencies;

h. a statement directing consumers to the website of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) to obtain more information about consumer reports; and

i. if a credit score of the consumer to whom a person grants, extends, or otherwise provides credit is used in setting the material terms of credit:

   i. a statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report, that the consumer's credit score was used to set the terms of credit offered, and that a credit score can change over time to reflect changes in the consumer's credit history;

   ii. the credit score used by the person in making the credit decision;

   iii. the range of possible credit scores under the model used to generate the credit score;

   iv. all of the key factors that adversely affected the credit score, which shall not exceed four key factors, except that if one of the key factors is the number of enquiries made with respect to the consumer report, the number of key factors shall not exceed five;

   v. the date on which the credit score was created; and

   vi. the name of the consumer reporting agency or other person that provided the credit score.

Proceed to step #10.

5. If the creditor does not provide a risk-based pricing notice, determine if one of the following situations that qualify for a regulatory exception applies (12 CFR 1022.74(a)-(f)):

   a. a consumer applies for specific terms of credit, and receives them, unless those terms were specified by the creditor using a consumer report after the consumer applied for the credit and after the creditor obtained the consumer report;

   b. a creditor provides a notice of adverse action;

c. a creditor makes a firm offer of credit in a prescreened solicitation (even if the person makes other firm offers of credit to other consumers on more favorable material terms);

d. a creditor generally provides a credit score disclosure to each consumer that requests a loan that is or will be secured by residential real property (if so, proceed to step #6);

e. a creditor generally provides a credit score disclosure to each consumer that requests a loan that is not or will not be secured by residential real property (if so, proceed to step #7); or

f. a creditor, which otherwise provides credit score disclosures to consumers that request loans, provides a disclosure for when no credit score is available (if so, proceed to step #8).

6. For creditors that choose to provide a credit score disclosure to consumers that request a loan that is or will be secured by residential real property, determine whether the 12 CFR 1022.74(d) notice generally is provided to each consumer that requests such an extension of credit and that each notice contains:

   a. a statement that a consumer report (or credit report) is a record of the consumer's credit history and includes information about whether the consumer pays his or her obligations on time and how much the consumer owes to creditors;

   b. a statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report and that a credit score can change over time to reflect changes in the consumer's credit history;

   c. a statement that the consumer's credit score can affect whether the consumer can obtain credit and what the cost of that credit will be;

   d. a statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;

   e. a statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain copies of his or her consumer reports directly from the consumer reporting agencies, including a free report from each of the nationwide consumer reporting agencies once during any 12-month period;

   f. contact information for the centralized source from which consumers may obtain their free annual consumer reports;

   g. a statement directing consumers to the website of the CFPB to obtain more information about consumer reports;

   h. the information required to be disclosed to the consumer in Section 609(g) of the FCRA, and as described in Module 3 of these examination procedures, under "Disclosure of Credit Scores by Certain Mortgage Lenders (FCRA), Section 609(g)"; and

i. the distribution of credit scores among consumers who are scored under the same scoring model that is used to generate the consumer's credit score. The distribution must:

   i. use the same scale as that of the credit score provided to the consumer; and

   ii. be presented:

      a) in the form of a bar graph containing a minimum of six bars that illustrates the percentage of consumers with credit scores within the range of scores reflected in each bar;

      b) by other clear and readily understandable graphical means; or

      c) in a clear and readily understandable statement informing the consumer how his or her credit score compares to the scores of other consumers.

   The presentation may use a graph or statement obtained from the entity providing the credit score if it meets these requirements.

7. For creditors that choose to provide a credit score disclosure to consumers that request a loan that is not or will not be secured by residential real property, determine whether the 12 CFR 1022.74(e) notice generally is provided to each consumer that requests such an extension of credit and that each notice contains:

   a. a statement that a consumer report (or credit report) is a record of the consumer's credit history and includes information about whether the consumer pays his or her obligations on time and how much the consumer owes to creditors;

   b. a statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report and that a credit score can change over time to reflect changes in the consumer's credit history;

   c. a statement that the consumer's credit score can affect whether the consumer can obtain credit and what the cost of that credit will be;

   d. a statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;

   e. a statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain copies of his or her consumer reports directly from the consumer reporting agencies, including a free report from each of the nationwide consumer reporting agencies once during any 12-month period;

   f. contact information for the centralized source from which consumers may obtain their free annual consumer reports;

g. a statement directing consumers to the website of CFPB to obtain more information about consumer reports;

h. the current credit score of the consumer or the most recent credit score of the consumer that was previously calculated by the consumer reporting agency for a purpose related to the extension of credit;

i. the distribution of credit scores among consumers who are scored under the same scoring model that is used to generate the consumer's credit score. The distribution must:

   i. use the same scale as that of the credit score provided to the consumer; and

   ii. be presented:

      a) in the form of a bar graph containing a minimum of six bars that illustrates the percentage of consumers with credit scores within the range of scores reflected in each bar;

      b) by other clear and readily understandable graphical means; or

      c) in a clear and readily understandable statement informing the consumer how his or her credit score compares to the scores of other consumers. The presentation may use a graph or statement obtained from the entity providing the credit score if it meets these requirements;

j. the range of possible credit scores under the model used to generate the credit score;

k. the date on which the credit score was created; and

l. the name of the consumer reporting agency or other person that provided the credit score.

8. For creditors that otherwise provide credit score disclosures to consumers that request loans, determine whether the 12 CFR 1022.74(f) notice is provided to the applicable consumers in situations where no credit score is available for the consumer, as required by 12 CFR 1022.74(f). Determine whether each notice contains:

   a. a statement that a consumer report (or credit report) includes information about the consumer's credit history and the type of information included in that history;

   b. a statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report and that a credit score can change over time in response to changes in the consumer's credit history;

   c. a statement that credit scores are important because consumers with higher credit scores generally obtain more favorable credit terms;

   d. a statement that not having a credit score can affect whether the consumer can obtain credit and what the cost of that credit will be;

e. a statement that a credit score about the consumer was not available from a consumer reporting agency, which must be identified by name, generally due to insufficient information regarding the consumer's credit history;

f. a statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the consumer report;

g. a statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain copies of his or her consumer reports directly from the consumer reporting agencies, including a free consumer report from each of the nationwide consumer reporting agencies once during any 12-month period;

h. the contact information for the centralized source from which consumers may obtain their free annual consumer reports; and

i. a statement directing consumers to the website of the CFPB to obtain more information about consumer reports.

9. For creditors that provide credit score exception notices and that obtain multiple credit scores in setting material terms of credit, determine whether the score(s) is disclosed in a manner consistent with the regulation (12 CFR 1022.74(d)(4) and .74(e)(4)):

   a. if a creditor only relies upon one of those credit scores in setting the material terms of credit granted, extended, or otherwise provided to a consumer (for example, by using the low, middle, high, or most recent score), determine whether the notice includes that credit score and the other information required by 12 CFR 1022.74(d).

   b. if a creditor relies upon multiple credit scores in setting the material terms of credit granted, extended, or otherwise provided to a consumer (for example, by computing the average of all the credit scores obtained), determine whether the notice includes one of those credit scores and the other information required by 12 CFR 1022.74(d).

10. Regardless of whether the creditor provides risk-based pricing notices or credit score disclosure exception notices, if the creditor increases the consumer's APR as the result of a review of a consumer's account, determine whether the creditor provided the consumer with an account review risk-based pricing notice (12 CFR 1022.72(d)) if an adverse action notice was not already provided.

11. Determine whether the account review risk-based pricing notice contains (12 CFR 1022.73(a)(2)):

    a. a statement that a consumer report (or credit report) includes information about the consumer's credit history and the type of information included in that history;

b. a statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;

c. the identity of each consumer reporting agency that furnished a consumer report used in the credit decision;

d. a statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain a copy of a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice without charge for 60 days after receipt of the notice;

e. a statement that informs the consumer how to obtain a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice and provides contact information (including a toll-free telephone number, where applicable) specified by the consumer reporting agency or agencies;

f. a statement that directs consumers to the website of the CFPB to obtain more information about consumer reports;

g. a statement that the creditor has conducted a review of the account using information from a consumer report;

h. a statement that, as a result of the review, the APR on the account has been increased based on information from a consumer report; and

i. if a credit score of the consumer whose extension of credit is under review is used in increasing the APR:

    i. a statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report, that the consumer's credit score was used to set the terms of credit offered, and that a credit score can change over time to reflect changes in the consumer's credit history;

    ii. the credit score used by the person in making the credit decision;

    iii. the range of possible credit scores under the model used to generate the credit score;

    iv. all of the key factors that adversely affected the credit score, which shall not exceed four key factors, except that if one of the key factors is the number of enquiries made with respect to the consumer report, the number of key factors shall not exceed five;

    v. the date on which the credit score was created; and

    vi. the name of the consumer reporting agency or other person that provided the credit score.

12. For all notices, determine whether the notices are clear and conspicuous and comply with the specific format requirements for the notices (12 CFR 1022.73(b), .74(d)(2), .74(e)(2), and .74(f)(3)).

13. For all notices, determine whether the notices are provided within the required time frames (12 CFR 1022.73(c), .74(d)(3), .74(e)(3), and .74(f)(4)), as set out as follows:

Risk-based pricing notices and account review risk-based pricing notices

- For closed-end credit, the notice generally must be provided to the consumer after the decision to approve a credit request is communicated to the consumer, but before consummation of the transaction.
- For open-end credit, the notice generally must be provided after the decision to grant credit is communicated to the consumer, but before the first transaction under the plan has been made.
- For account reviews, the notice generally must be provided at the time that the decision to increase the APR is communicated to the consumer or no later than five days after the effective date of the change in the APR.

Credit score disclosures for loans secured by residential real property

- The credit score disclosure for loans secured by residential real property must be provided to the consumer at the same time as the disclosure required by Section 609(g) of the FCRA is provided to the consumer. The Section 609(g) notice must be provided as soon as reasonably practicable after the credit score has been obtained. In any event, the credit score disclosure for loans secured by residential real property must be provided at or before consummation in the case of closed-end credit or before the first transaction is made under an open-end credit plan.

Credit score disclosures for loans not secured by residential real property

- The notice generally must be provided to the consumer as soon as reasonably practicable after the credit score has been obtained, but in any event at or before consummation in the case of closed-end credit or before the first transaction is made under an open-end credit plan.

Credit score exception notices when no credit score is available

- The notice generally must be provided to the consumer as soon as reasonably practicable after the creditor has requested the credit score, but in any event not later than consummation of a transaction in the case of closed-end credit or when the first transaction is made under an open-end credit plan.

Application to certain automobile lending transactions

- For automobile lending transactions made through an auto dealer that is unaffiliated with the creditor, the creditor may provide a notice in the time periods described above. Alternatively, the creditor may arrange to have the auto dealer provide a notice to the consumer on its behalf within these time periods and maintain reasonable policies and procedures to verify that the auto dealer provides the notice to the consumer within the applicable time periods. If the creditor arranges to have the auto dealer provide a credit score disclosure for loans not secured by residential real property, the creditor complies if the consumer receives a notice containing a credit score obtained by the auto dealer with these time periods, even if a different credit score is obtained and used by the creditor.

- For credit that is granted under an open-end credit plan to a consumer in person or by telephone for contemporaneous purchase of goods or services, the notice may be provided at the earlier of:

    - the time of the first mailing to the consumer after the decision is made to approve the credit, such as in a mailing containing the account agreement or a credit card; or

    - within 30 days after the decision to approve the credit.

14. For all notices, determine whether the creditor follows the rules of construction pertaining to the number of notices provided to the consumer(s) (12 CFR 1022.75). In a transaction involving two or more consumers, a creditor must provide a risk-based notice to each consumer. If the consumers have the same address, and the notice does not include a credit score(s), a person may satisfy the requirements by providing a single notice addressed to both consumers. However, if a notice includes a credit score(s), the person must provide a separate notice to each consumer whether the consumers have the same address or not. Each separate notice that includes a credit score(s) must contain only the credit score(s) of the consumer to whom the notice is provided, and not the credit score(s) of the other consumer. Similarly, for credit score disclosure exception notices, whether the consumers have the same address or not, the creditor must provide a separate notice to each consumer and each separate notice that includes a credit score(s) must contain only the credit score(s) of the consumer to whom the notices is provided.

15. For all notices, determine whether the creditor uses the model forms in Appendix H of the regulation. If yes, determine that it does not modify the model form so extensively as to affect the substance, clarity, comprehensibility, or meaningful sequence of the forms (Appendix H).

1. Determine whether a user of consumer reports has policies and procedures to recognize notices of address discrepancy that it receives from a nationwide consumer reporting agency (NCRA)[3] in connection with consumer reports.

2. Determine whether a user that receives notices of address discrepancy has policies and procedures to form a reasonable belief that the consumer report relates to the consumer whose report was requested (12 CFR 1022.82(c)).

   See examples of reasonable policies and procedures "to form a reasonable belief" in 12 CFR 1022.82(c)(2).

3. Determine whether a user that receives notices of address discrepancy has policies and procedures to furnish to the NCRA an address for the consumer that the user has reasonably confirmed is accurate, if the user does the following:

   a. forms a reasonable belief that the report relates to the consumer;

   b. establishes a continuing relationship with the consumer; and

   c. regularly, and in the ordinary course of business, furnishes information to the NCRA (12 CFR 1022.82(d)(1)).

   See examples of reasonable confirmation methods in 12 CFR 1022.82(d)(2).

4. Determine whether the user's policies and procedures require it to furnish the confirmed address as part of the information it regularly furnishes to an NCRA during the reporting period when it establishes a relationship with the consumer (12 CFR 1022.82(d)(3)).

5. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further information are noted, obtain a sample of consumer reports requested by the user from an NCRA that included notices of address discrepancy and determine:

   a. how the user established a reasonable belief that the consumer reports related to the consumers whose reports were requested; and

   b. if a consumer relationship was established:

[3] A NCRA compiles and maintains files on consumers on a nationwide basis.

i. whether the user furnished a consumer's address that it reasonably confirmed to the NCRA from which it received the notice of address discrepancy; and

ii. whether it furnished the address in the reporting period during which it established the relationship.

6. On the basis of examination procedures completed, form a conclusion about the ability of user's policies and procedures to meet regulatory requirements for the proper handling of address discrepancies reported by an NCRA.

Furnishers of Information to Consumer Reporting Agencies: General – Section 623(e); 15 U.S.C. 1681s-2; 12 CFR 1022, Subpart E

- Notices of Disputes from a Consumer Reporting Agency – Section 623(b); 15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(b)
- Direct Disputes from Consumers – Section 623(a)(8); 15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)(8); 12 CFR 1022.43

1. Determine whether the entity furnishes consumer information to a consumer reporting agency about an account or other relationship with a consumer. If so, the entity is subject to 12 CFR 1022.40-1022.43.

2. Determine whether the entity has established and implemented reasonable policies and procedures regarding the accuracy and integrity of information furnished to a consumer reporting agency (12 CFR 1022.42(a)).

3. Determine whether the entity considered the Interagency Guidelines in Appendix E of the regulation when developing its policies and procedures, and incorporated the guidelines as appropriate (12 CFR 1022.42(b)).

4. Determine whether the entity reviews its policies and procedures periodically and updates them as necessary to ensure their effectiveness (12 CFR 1022.42(c)).

5. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, such as a high number of consumer complaints regarding the accuracy of their consumer report information from the entity, select a sample of reported items and the corresponding loan or collection file to determine that the entity:

   a. did not report information that it knew, or had reasonable cause to believe, was inaccurate. Section 623(a)(1)(A) [15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)(1)(A)];

   b. did not report information to a consumer reporting agency if it was notified by the consumer that the information was inaccurate and the information was, in fact, inaccurate. Section 623(a)(1)(B) [15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)(1)(B)];

c. provided the consumer reporting agency with corrections or additional information to make information complete and accurate, and thereafter did not send the consumer reporting agency any information that remained incomplete or inaccurate. Section 623(a)(2) [15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)(2)];

d. furnished a notice to a consumer reporting agency of a dispute in situations where a consumer disputed the completeness or accuracy of any information the entity furnished, and the entity continued furnishing the information to a consumer reporting agency. Section 623(a)(3) [15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)(3)];

e. notified the consumer reporting agency of a voluntary account-closing by the consumer, and did so as part of the information regularly furnished for the period in which the account was closed. Section 623(a)(4) [15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)(4)]; and

f. notified the consumer reporting agency of the month and year of commencement of a delinquency that immediately preceded the action. The notification to the consumer reporting agency must be made within 90 days of furnishing information about a delinquent account that was being placed for collection, charged-off, or subjected to any similar action. Section 623(a)(5) [15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)(5)].

6. If weakness within the entity's procedures for investigating errors are revealed, review a sample of notices of discputes received from a consumer reporting agency and determine whether the entity did the following:

   a. conducted an investigation with respect to the disputed information (Section 623(b)(1)(A) [15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(b)(1)(A)];

   b. reviewed all relevant information provided by the consumer reporting agency (Section 623(b)(1)(B) [15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(b)(1)(B)];

   c. reported the results of the investigation to the consumer reporting agency (Section 623(b)(1)(C)) [15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(b)(1)(C)];

   d. reported the results of the investigation to all other nationwide consumer reporting agencies to which the information was furnished if the investigation found that the reported information was inaccurate or incomplete (Section 623(b)(1)(D)) [15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(b)(1)(D)]; and

   e. modified, deleted, or blocked the reporting of information that could not be verified.

7. Determine whether the entity conducts reasonable investigations of direct disputes from consumers, including a review of all relevant information provided by the consumer (12 CFR 1022.43(e)(1) and (2)).

   a. Determine whether the entity completes the investigation and reports the results to the consumer within the required time frame (12 CFR 1022.43(e)(3)).

b. Determine whether the entity notifies and provides corrected information to the consumer reporting agencies when the results of its investigation finds that inaccurate information was furnished to the consumer reporting agencies (12 CFR 1022.43(e)(4)).

c. When the entity finds that a dispute is frivolous or irrelevant, determine whether the entity:

   i. notifies the consumer within five days after finding the dispute frivolous or irrelevant (12 CFR 1022.43(f)(2)); and

   ii. includes in the consumer notification the reasons for the findings and the information necessary to investigate the disputed information (12 CFR 1022.43(f)(3)).

Prevention of Re-Pollution of Consumer Reports – Section 623(a)(6); 15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)(6)

1. If the entity provides information to a consumer reporting agency, review the entity's policies and procedures for ensuring that items of information blocked because of an alleged identity theft are not re-reported to the consumer reporting agency.

2. If weaknesses are noted within the entity's policies and procedures, review a sample of notices from a consumer reporting agency of allegedly fraudulent information due to identity theft furnished by the entity, to determine whether the entity does not re-report the item to a consumer reporting agency.

3. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, verify that the entity has not sold or transferred a debt that resulted from an alleged identity theft.

Negative Information Notice – Section 623(a)(7); 15 U.S.C. 1681s-2(a)(7); 12 CFR 1022.1(b)(1)(ii)

1. If the entity provides negative information to a nationwide consumer reporting agency, verify that the entity's policies and procedures ensure tht the approriate notices are provided to consumers.

2. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of notices provided to consumers to determine compliance with the technical content and timing requirements.

Module 5 – Consumer Alerts and Identity Theft Protections

Fraud and Active Duty Alerts – Section 605A(h); 15 U.S.C. 1681c-1(h)

1. Determine whether the entity has effective policies and procedures in place to verify the identity of consumers in situations in which consumer reports include fraud and/or active duty military alerts.

2. Determine if the entity has effective policies and procedures in place to contact consumers in situations where consumer reports include extended alerts.

3. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of transactions in which consumer reports including these types of alerts were obtained. Verify that the entity complied with the identity verification and/or consumer contact requirements.

1. Review the entity's policies, procedures, and/or practices to determine whether identities and claims of fruadulent transactions are verified and whether information is properly disclosed to victims of identity theft and/or appropriately authorized law enforcement agents.

2. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of these types of requests to endetermine whether the entity properly verified the requestor's identity prior to disclosing the information.

Fair Debt Collection Practices Act[1]

The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA)(15 U.S.C. 1692 et seq.), which became effective March 20, 1978, was designed to eliminate abusive, deceptive, and unfair debt collection practices. In addition, the federal law (15 U.S.C. 1692 et seq.) protects reputable debt collectors from unfair competition and encourages consistent state action to protect consumers from abuses in debt collection. The Dodd-Frank Act granted rulemaking authority under the FDCPA to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB)[2] and, with respect to entities under its jurisdiction, granted authority to the CFPB to supervise for and enforce compliance with the FDCPA.[3]

Debt That Is Covered

The FDCPA applies only to the collection of debt incurred by a consumer primarily for personal, family, or household purposes. It does not apply to the collection of corporate debt or to debt owed for business or agricultural purposes.

Debt Collectors That Are Covered

Under FDCPA, a "debt collector" is defined as any person who regularly collects, or attempts to collect, consumer debts for another person or institution or uses some name other than its own when collecting its own consumer debts. That definition would include, for example, an institution that regularly collects debts for an unrelated institution. This includes reciprocal service arrangements where one institution solicits the help of another in collecting a defaulted debt from a customer who has moved.

Debt Collectors That Are Not Covered

An institution is not a debt collector under the FDCPA when it collects:

- Another's debts in isolated instances.
- Its own debts it originated under its own name.
- Debts it originated and then sold, but continues to service (for example, mortgage and student loans).
- Debts that were not in default when they were obtained.
- Debts that were obtained as security for a commercial credit transaction (for example, accounts receivable financing).

[1] These reflect FFIEC-approved procedures.

[2] In December 2011, the CFPB restated the Federal Trade Commission's implementing regulation at 12 CFR Part 1006 (76 Fed. Reg. 78121)(December 16, 2011). The regulation only addresses the procedures for state application for exemption from the provisions of the Act.

- Debts incidental to a bona fide fiduciary relationship or escrow arrangement (for example, a debt held in the institution's trust department or mortgage loan escrow for taxes and insurance).
- Debts regularly for other institutions to which it is related by common ownership or corporate control.

Debt collectors that are not covered also include:

- Officers or employees of an institution who collect debts owed to the institution in the institution's name.
- Legal process servers.

Communications Connected with Debt Collection – 15 U.S.C. 1692b and c

For communications with a consumer or third party with the collection of a debt, the term "consumer" is defined to include the borrower's spouse, parent (if the borrower is a minor), guardian, executor, or administrator.

When, Where, and With Whom Communication is Permitted

Communicating with the Consumer

A debt collector may not communicate with a consumer at any unusual time (generally before 8 a.m. or after 9 p.m. in the consumer's time zone) or at any place that is inconvenient to the consumer, unless the consumer or a court of competent jurisdiction has already given permission for such contacts. A debt collector may not contact the consumer at his or her place of employment if the collector has reason to believe the employer prohibits such communications.

If the debt collector knows the consumer has retained an attorney to handle the debt, and can easily ascertain the attorney's name and address, all contacts must be with that attorney, unless the attorney is unresponsive or agrees to allow direct communication with the consumer.

Ceasing Communication with the Consumer

When a consumer refuses, in writing, to pay a debt or requests that the debt collector cease further communication, the collector must cease all further communication, except to advise the consumer that:

- The collection effort is being stopped.
- Certain specified remedies ordinarily invoked may be pursued or, if appropriate, that a specific remedy will be pursued.

Mailed notices from the consumer are official when they are received by the debt collector.

Communicating with Third Parties

The only third parties that a debt collector may contact when trying to collect a debt are:

- The consumer.
- The consumer's attorney.
- A consumer reporting agency (if permitted by local law).
- The creditor.
- The creditor's attorney.
- The debt collector's attorney.

The consumer or a court of competent jurisdiction may, however, give the debt collector specific permission to contact other third parties. In addition, a debt collector who is unable to locate a consumer may ask a third party for the consumer's home address, telephone number and place of employment (location information). The debt collector must give his or her name and state that he or she is confirming or correcting location information about the consumer. Unless specifically asked, the debt collector may not name the collection firm or agency or reveal that the consumer owes any debt.

No third party may be contacted more than once unless the collector believes that the information from the first contact was wrong or incomplete and that the third party has since received better information, or unless the third party specifically requests additional contact.

Contact with any third party by postcard, letter or telegram is allowed only if the envelope or content of the communication does not indicate the nature of the collector's business.

Validation of Debts – 15 U.S.C. 1692g

The debt collector must provide the consumer with certain basic information. If that information was not in the initial communication and if the consumer has not paid the debt five days after the initial communication, the following information must be sent to the consumer in written form:

- The amount of the debt;
- The name of the creditor to whom the debt is owed;
- Notice that the consumer has 30 days to dispute the debt before it is assumed to be valid;
- Notice that upon such written dispute, the debt collector will send the consumer a verification of the debt or a copy of any judgment; and

- Notice that if, within the 30-day period, the consumer makes a written request for the name and address of the original creditor, if it is different from the current creditor, the debt collector will provide that information.

If, within the 30-day period, the consumer disputes in writing any portion of the debt or requests the name and address of the original creditor, the collector must stop all collection efforts until he or she mails the consumer a copy of a judgment or verification of the debt, or the name and address of the original creditor, as applicable.

Prohibited Practices

Harassing or Abusive Practices – 15 U.S.C. 1692d

A debt collector in collecting a debt, may not harass, oppress, or abuse any person. For example, a debt collector may not:

- Use or threaten to use violence or other criminal means to harm the physical person, reputation, or property of any person.
- Use obscene, profane, or other language that abuses the hearer or reader.
- Publish a list of consumers who allegedly refuse to pay debts, except to a consumer reporting agency or to persons meeting the requirements of Section 603(f) or 604(3) of the Act.
- Advertise a debt for sale to coerce payment.
- Annoy, abuse, or harass persons by calling repeatedly their telephone number or allowing their telephones to ring continually.
- Make telephone calls without properly identifying oneself, except as allowed to obtain location information.

False or Misleading Representations – 15 U.S.C. 1692e

A debt collector, in collecting a debt, may not use any false, deceptive, or misleading representation. For example, a debt collector may not:

- Falsely represent or imply that he or she is vouched for, bonded by, or affiliated with the United States or any state, including the use of any badge, uniform, or similar identification.
- Falsely represent the character, amount, or legal status of the debt, or of any services rendered, or compensation he or she may receive for collecting the debt.
- Falsely represent or imply that he or she is an attorney or that communications are from an attorney.

- Threaten to take any action which is not legal or intended.
- Falsely represent or imply that nonpayment of any debt will result in the arrest or imprisonment of any person or the seizure, garnishment, attachment, or sale of any property or wages of any person, unless such action is lawful and intended by the debt collector or creditor.
- Falsely represent or imply that the sale, referral, or other transfer of the debt will cause the consumer to lose a claim or a defense to payment, or become subject to any practice prohibited by the FDCPA.
- Falsely represent or imply that the consumer committed a crime or other conduct to disgrace the consumer.
- Communicate, or threaten to communicate, false credit information or information which should be known to be false, including not identifying disputed debts as such.
- Use or distribute written communications made to look like or falsely represented to be documents authorized, issued, or approved by any court, official, or agency of the United States or any state if it would give a false impression of its source, authorization, or approval.
- Use any false representation or deceptive means to collect or attempt to collect a debt or to obtain information about a consumer.
- Fail to disclose in the initial written communication with the consumer, and the initial oral communication if it precedes the initial written communication, that the debt collector is attempting to collect a debt and that any information obtained will be used for that purpose. In addition, the debt collector must disclose in subsequent communications that the communication is from a debt collector. (These disclosures do not apply to a formal pleading made in connection with a legal action.)
- Falsely represent or imply that accounts have been sold to innocent purchasers.
- Falsely represent or imply that documents are legal process.
- Use any name other than the true name of the debt collector’s business, company, or organization.
- Falsely represent or imply that documents are not legal process or do not require action by the consumer.
- Falsely represent or imply that he or she operates or is employed by a consumer reporting agency.

Unfair Practices – 15 U.S.C. 1692f

A debt collector may not use unfair or unconscionable means to collect or attempt to collect a debt. For example, a debt collector may not:

- Collect any interest, fee, charge, or expense incidental to the principal obligation unless it was authorized by the original debt agreement or is otherwise permitted by law.
- Accept a check or other instrument post-dated by more than five days, unless he or she notifies the consumer, in writing, of any intention to deposit the check or instrument. That notice must be made not more than ten or less than three business days before the date of deposit.
- Solicit a post-dated check or other post-dated payment instrument to use as a threat or to institute criminal prosecution.
- Deposit or threaten to deposit a post-dated check or other post-dated payment instrument before the date on the check or instrument.
- Cause communication charges, such as those for collect telephone calls and telegrams, to be made to any person by concealing the true purpose of the communication.
- Take or threaten to repossess or disable property when the creditor has no enforceable right to the property or does not intend to do so, or if, under law, the property cannot be taken, repossessed, or disabled.
- Use a postcard to contact a consumer about a debt.
- Use any language or symbol, other than the debt collector's address, on any envelope when communicating with a consumer; a debt collector may use its business name if such name does not indicate it is in the debt collection business.

Multiple Debts – 15 U.S.C. 1692h

If a consumer owes several debts that are being collected by the same debt collector, payments must be applied according to the consumer's instructions. No payment may be applied to a disputed debt.

Legal Actions By Debt Collectors – 15 U.S.C. 1692i

A debt collector may file a lawsuit to enforce a security interest in real property only in the judicial district in which the real property is located. Other legal actions may be brought only in the judicial district in which the consumer lives or in which the original contract creating the debt was signed.

Furnishing Certain Deceptive Forms – 15 U.S.C. 1692j

No one may design, compile and/or furnish any form that creates the false impression that someone other than the creditor (for example, a debt collector) is participating in the collection of a debt.

Civil Liability

A debt collector who fails to comply with any provision of the FDCPA is liable for:

- Any actual damages sustained as a result of that failure;
- Punitive damages as allowed by the court:
  - in an individual action, up to $1,000; or
  - in a class action, up to $1,000 for each named plaintiff and an award to be divided among all members of the class of an amount up to $500,000 or 1 percent of the debt collector's net worth, whichever is less;
- Costs and a reasonable attorney's fee in any such action.

In determining punitive damages, the court must consider the nature, frequency and persistency of the violations and the extent to which they were intentional. In a class action, the court must also consider the resources of the debt collector and the number of persons adversely affected.

Defenses

A debt collector is not liable for a violation if a preponderance of the evidence shows it was not intentional and was the result of a bona fide error that arose despite procedures reasonably designed to avoid any such error. The collector is also not liable if he or she, in good faith, relied on an advisory opinion of the CFPB or on prior advisory opinions of the Federal Trade Commission, even if the ruling is later amended, rescinded, or determined to be invalid for any reason.

Jurisdiction and Statute of Limitations

Action against debt collectors for violations of the FDCPA may be brought in any appropriate U.S. district court or other court of competent jurisdiction. The consumer has one year from the date on which the violation occurred to start such as action.

Relation to State Law

The FDCPA preempts state law only to the extent that a state law is inconsistent with the FDCPA. A state law that is more protective of the consumer is not considered inconsistent with the FDCPA.

Exemption for State Regulation

The CFPB may exempt certain classes of debt collection practices from the requirements of the FDCPA if it has determined that state laws impose substantially similar requirements and that there is adequate provision for enforcement.

Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA)[1]

Background

The Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA) requires certain financial institutions to collect, report, and disclose information about their mortgage lending activity. HMDA was originally enacted by Congress in 1975 and is implemented by Regulation C (12 CFR Part 1003).

HMDA was enacted given public concern over credit shortages in certain neighborhoods. In particular, Congress believed that some financial institutions had contributed to the decline of various geographic areas through their failure to provide adequate home financing to qualified applicants on reasonable terms and conditions. Thus, one statutory purpose of HMDA is to provide the public with information that will help show whether financial institutions are serving the housing credit needs of the communities and neighborhoods in which they are located. A second statutory purpose is to aid public officials in distributing public sector investment so as to attract private investment to areas where it is needed. Finally, the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 (FIRREA) amended HMDA to require the collection and disclosure of data about applicant and borrower characteristics to assist in identifying possible discriminatory lending patterns and enforcing antidiscrimination statutes.

As the name implies, HMDA is a disclosure law that relies upon public scrutiny for its effectiveness. It does not prohibit any specific activity of lenders, and it does not establish a quota system of mortgage loans to be made in any geographic area.

Between 1988 and 1992, Congress amended HMDA's coverage. Coverage was expanded in the FIRREA amendments to include many independent nondepository mortgage lenders, in addition to the previously covered banks, savings associations, and credit unions. Coverage of independent mortgage bankers was further expanded by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Improvement Act of 1991 HMDA amendments. For a more detailed discussion of the history of HMDA, see the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council's (FFIEC) website at www.ffiec.gov/hmda/history2.htm.

Prior to the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010 (Dodd-Frank Act), HMDA required financial institutions to report data regarding applications, loan originations, and loan purchases, as well as certain requests under a pre-approval program (as defined in Regulation C). HMDA also required financial institutions to report certain applicant and borrower demographic data, such as ethnicity, race, gender, and gross income. In addition, the reporting of certain pricing information and the type of purchaser was required. Data was reported in a "register" reporting format, compiled by supervisory agencies, and disclosed to the public.

[1] 12 USC 2801–2810. The HMDA Interagency Examination Procedures cover HMDA data collected in or after 2018, that is, for loans and applications for which final action was taken in or after 2018.

The Dodd-Frank Act amended HMDA to, among other things, require reporting of additional data points, transfer HMDA rulemaking authority from the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (FRB) to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (Bureau), and provide the Bureau with authority to mandate collection, recording, and reporting of such other information as the Bureau may require.[2] In August 2014, the Bureau proposed amendments to Regulation C to implement the Dodd-Frank Act changes; to require collection, recording, and reporting of additional information to further HMDA's purposes; and to modernize the manner in which covered financial institutions report HMDA data. The Bureau published a final rule amending Regulation C in October 2015 (2015 HMDA Rule).[3] The Bureau published a final rule further amending Regulation C in September 2017 to facilitate implementation of the 2015 HMDA Rule (2017 HMDA Rule).[4]

Beginning in 2018, as discussed further below, the 2015 HMDA Rule requires that financial institutions continue to report data regarding applications, loan originations, and loan purchases. The Bureau's 2015 HMDA Rule changed: (1) the definition of a financial institution that is subject to Regulation C; (2) the types of transactions that are subject to Regulation C; (3) the data that financial institutions are required to collect, record, and report pursuant to Regulation C; and (4) the processes for reporting and disclosing HMDA data. The data are submitted electronically to the Bureau on behalf of the appropriate Federal agency associated with the reporter, and most of the data are made available to the public on both an aggregate and a loan-level basis.[5]

On May 24, 2018, the President signed the Economic Growth, Regulatory Relief, and Consumer Protection Act (2018 Act) into law.[6] Effective May 24, 2018, Section 104(a) of the 2018 Act created partial exemptions from some of HMDA's requirements for certain covered institutions. On August 31, 2018, the Bureau issued an interpretive and procedural rule (2018 HMDA Rule) to implement and clarify Section 104(a) of the 2018 Act (2018 HMDA Rule). The 2018 HMDA Rule was published in the Federal Register on September 7, 2018.[7]

The Federal supervisory agencies use HMDA data to support a variety of activities. For example, some Federal supervisory agencies use HMDA data as part of their fair lending examination process,[8] and other agencies use HMDA data in conducting Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) performance evaluations.[9] Moreover, HMDA disclosures provide the public with information on the home mortgage lending activities of particular reporting entities and on activity in their communities. These disclosures are used by local, State, and Federal officials to evaluate housing trends and issues and by community organizations to monitor financial institution lending patterns. Because HMDA data serve numerous important purposes, validating the accuracy of HMDA data is a key element of the Federal supervisory agencies' examination activities.

Coverage

A. Institutional Coverage

Institutional Coverage Generally

An institution is required to comply with Regulation C only if it is a financial institution as that term is defined in Regulation C. The definition of financial institution includes both depository financial institutions and nondepository financial institutions, as those terms are separately defined in Regulation C. 12 CFR 1003.2(g).

An institution uses these two definitions, which are outlined below, as coverage tests to determine whether it is a financial institution that is required to comply with Regulation C. For the purpose of these examination procedures, the term financial institution refers to an institution that is either a depository financial institution or a nondepository financial institution that is subject to Regulation C.

Institutional Coverage Tests

Depository Financial Institutions

A bank, savings association, or credit union is a depository financial institution and subject to Regulation C if it meets ALL of the following:

1. Asset-Size Threshold. On the preceding December 31, the bank, savings association, or credit union had assets in excess of the asset-size threshold published annually in the Federal Register, as included in the Official Interpretations, 12 CFR Part 1003, Comment 2(g)-2, and posted on the Bureau's website. 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(i). The phrase "preceding December 31" refers to the December 31 immediately preceding the current calendar year. For example, in 2019, the preceding December 31 is December 31, 2018. Comment 2(g)-1.

2. Location Test. On the preceding December 31, the bank, savings association, or credit union had a home or branch office located in a metropolitan statistical area (MSA). 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(ii).

For purposes of this location test, a branch office for a bank, savings association, or credit union is an office: (a) of the bank, savings association, or credit union (b) that is considered a branch by the institution's Federal or State supervisory agency. For purposes of Regulation C, an automated teller machine or other free-standing electronic terminal is not a branch office regardless of whether the supervisory agency would consider it a branch. 12 CFR 1003.2(c)(1). A branch office of a credit union is any office where member accounts are established or loans are made, whether or not a Federal or State agency has approved the office as a branch. Comment 2(c)(1)-1.

3. Loan-Activity Test. During the preceding calendar year, the bank, savings association, or credit union originated at least one home purchase loan or refinancing of a home purchase loan secured by a first lien on a one-to-four-unit dwelling. 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(iii). For more information on whether a loan is secured by a dwelling, is a home purchase loan, or is a refinancing, see 12 CFR 1003.2(f), (j), and (p) and associated commentary.

4. Federally Related Test. The bank, savings association, or credit union:

   a. Is federally insured; or

   b. Is federally regulated; or

   c. Originated at least one home purchase loan or refinancing of a home purchase loan that was secured by a first lien on a one-to-four-unit dwelling and also (i) was insured, guaranteed, or supplemented by a Federal agency or (ii) was intended for sale to the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) or the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac). 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(iv).

5. Loan-Volume Thresholds. The bank, savings association, or credit union meets or exceeds either the closed-end mortgage loan or the open-end line of credit loan-volume threshold in each of the two preceding calendar years.

   - Effective January 1, 2018, and through December 31, 2019, a bank, savings association, or credit union that originated at least 25 closed-end mortgage loans in each of the two preceding calendar years, or originated at least 500 open-end lines of credit in each of the two preceding calendar years meets or exceeds the loan-volume threshold.

   - Effective January 1, 2020, a bank, savings association, or credit union that originated at least 25 closed-end mortgage loans in each of the two preceding calendar years, or originated at least 100 open-end lines of credit in each of the two preceding calendar years meets or exceeds the loan-volume threshold.

When the bank, savings association, or credit union determines whether it meets these loan-volume thresholds, it does not count transactions excluded by 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1) through (10) and (13). 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(v). Closed-end mortgage loans, open-end lines of credit, and these excluded transactions are discussed below in TRANSACTIONAL COVERAGE.

When determining if it meets the loan-volume thresholds, a bank, savings association, or credit union only counts closed-end mortgage loans and open-end lines of credit that it originated. Only one institution is deemed to have originated a specific closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit under Regulation C, even if two or more institutions are involved in the origination process. Only the institution that is deemed to have originated the transaction under Regulation C counts it for purposes of the loan-volume threshold. Comment 2(g)-5; see also comments 4(a)-2 through -4. These requirements are discussed below in TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING MULTIPLE ENTITIES.

Regulation C also includes a separate test to ensure that financial institutions that meet only the closed-end mortgage loan threshold are not required to report their open-end lines of credit, and that financial institutions that meet only the open-end line of credit threshold are not required to report their closed-end mortgage loans. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11) and (12).

Nondepository Financial Institutions

Under Regulation C, a for-profit mortgage-lending institution other than a bank, savings association, or credit union is a nondepository financial institution and subject to Regulation C if it meets BOTH of the following:

1. Location Test. The institution had a home or branch office in a metropolitan statistical area (MSA) on the preceding December 31. 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(2)(i). The phrase "preceding December 31" refers to the December 31 immediately preceding the current calendar year. For example, in 2019, the preceding December 31 is December 31, 2018. Comment 2(g)-1.

For purposes of this location test, a branch office of a nondepository financial institution is any one of the institution's offices at which the institution takes from the public applications for covered loans. A nondepository financial institution is also deemed to have a branch office in an MSA or metropolitan division (MD) if, in the preceding calendar year, it received applications for, originated, or purchased five or more covered loans related to property located in that MSA or MD, even if it does not have an office in that MSA. 12 CFR 1003.2(c)(2). Covered loans and applications for covered loans are discussed below in TRANSACTIONAL COVERAGE.

2. Loan-Volume Thresholds. The institution meets or exceeds either the closed-end mortgage loan threshold or the open-end line of credit threshold in each of the two preceding calendar years.

   - Effective January 1, 2018 through December 31, 2019, an institution that originated at least 25 closed-end mortgage loans in each of the two preceding calendar years, or originated at least 500 open-end lines of credit in each of the two preceding calendar years meets or exceeds the loan-volume threshold.

   - Effective January 1, 2020, an institution that originated at least 25 closed-end mortgage loans in each of the two preceding calendar years, or originated at least 100 open-end lines of credit in each of the two preceding calendar years meets or exceeds the loan-volume threshold.

When an institution determines whether it meets the loan-volume thresholds, it does not count transactions excluded by 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1) through (10) and (13). 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(2)(ii). Closed-end mortgage loans, open-end lines of credit, and these excluded transactions are discussed below in TRANSACTIONAL COVERAGE.

When determining if it meets the loan-volume thresholds, an institution only counts closed-end mortgage loans and open-end lines of credit that it originated. Only one institution is deemed to have originated a specific closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit under Regulation C, even if two or more institutions are involved in the origination process. Only the institution that is deemed to have originated the transaction under Regulation C counts it for purposes of the loan-volume threshold. Comment 2(g)-5. See also comments 4(a)-2 through -4. These requirements are discussed below in TRANSACTIONS WITH MULTIPLE ENTITIES.

Regulation C also includes a separate test to ensure that financial institutions that meet only the closed-end mortgage loan threshold are not required to report their open-end lines of credit, and that financial institutions that meet only the open-end line of credit threshold are not required to report their closed-end mortgage loans. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11)–(12).

B. Exemptions Based on State Law

Regulation C provides that financial institutions may apply for an exemption from coverage. Specifically, the Bureau may exempt a State-chartered or State-licensed financial institution if the Bureau determines that the financial institution is subject to a State disclosure law that contains requirements substantially similar to those imposed by Regulation C and adequate enforcement provisions. Any State-licensed or State-chartered financial institution or association of such institutions may apply to the Bureau for an exemption. An exempt institution shall submit the data required by State law to its State supervisory agency. 12 CFR 1003.3(a). A financial institution that loses its exemption must comply with Regulation C beginning with the calendar year following the year for which it last reported data under the State disclosure law. 12 CFR 1003.3(b).

C. Transactional Coverage

A financial institution is required to collect, record, and report information only for transactions that are subject to Regulation C.

Covered Loans

A covered loan can be either a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit, but an excluded transaction cannot be a covered loan. 12 CFR 1003.2(e).

To determine if a transaction is subject to Regulation C, a financial institution should first determine whether the loan or line of credit involved in the transaction is either a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit. See CLOSED-END MORTGAGE LOANS AND OPEN-END LINES OF CREDIT, below. If the loan or line of credit is neither a closed-end mortgage loan nor an open-end line of credit, the transaction does not involve a covered loan, and the financial institution is not required to report information related to the transaction. If the loan or line of credit is either a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit, the financial institution must determine if the closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit is an excluded transaction. See EXCLUDED TRANSACTIONS, below. If the closed-end mortgage loan or the open-end line of credit is an excluded transaction, it is not a covered loan, and the financial institution is not required to report information related to the transaction. If the loan or line of credit is a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit and is not an excluded transaction, the financial institution may be required to report information related to the transaction. See REPORTABLE ACTIVITY, below.

Closed-End Mortgage Loans and Open-End Lines of Credit

A closed-end mortgage loan is:

1. An extension of credit,
2. Secured by a lien on a dwelling, and
3. Not an open-end line of credit. 12 CFR 1003.2(d).

An open-end line of credit is:

1. An extension of credit,
2. Secured by a lien on a dwelling, and
3. An open-end credit plan for which:
    a. The lender reasonably contemplates repeated transactions;
    b. The lender may impose a finance charge from time-to-time on an outstanding unpaid balance; and
    c. The amount of credit that may be extended to the borrower during the term of the plan (up to any limit set by the lender) is generally made available to the extent that any outstanding balance is repaid. 12 CFR 1003.2(o); 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(20).

Financial institutions may rely on Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(20), and its official commentary when determining whether a transaction is extended under a plan for which the lender reasonably contemplates repeated transactions, the lender may impose a finance charge from time-to-time on an outstanding unpaid balance, and the amount of credit that may be extended to the borrower during the term of the plan is generally made available to the extent that any outstanding balance is repaid.

A business-purpose transaction that is exempt from Regulation Z but is otherwise open-end credit under Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(20), would be an open-end line of credit under Regulation C if it is an extension of credit secured by a lien on a dwelling and is not an excluded transaction. Comment 2(o)-1.

Extension of Credit

A closed-end loan or open-end line of credit is not a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit under Regulation C unless it involves an extension of credit. Individual draws on an open-end line of credit are not separate extensions of credit. Comment 2(o)-2.

Under Regulation C,[10] an "extension of credit" generally requires a new debt obligation. Comment 2(d)-2. Thus, for example, a loan modification where the existing debt obligation is not satisfied and replaced is not generally a covered loan (i.e., closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit) under Regulation C. Except as described below, if a transaction modifies, renews, extends, or amends the terms of an existing debt obligation, but the existing debt obligation is not satisfied and replaced, the transaction is not a covered loan.

Regulation C provides two narrow exceptions to the requirement that an "extension of credit" involve a new debt obligation. The exceptions are designed to capture transactions that are substantially similar to new debt obligations and should be treated as such.

First, assumptions are extensions of credit under Regulation C. A loan assumption is a transaction in which a financial institution enters into a written agreement accepting a new borrower in place of an existing borrower as the obligor on an existing debt obligation. Regulation C clarifies that assumptions include successor-in-interest transactions in which an individual succeeds the prior owner as the property owner and then assumes the existing debt secured by the property. Assumptions are extensions of credit even if the new borrower merely assumes the existing debt obligation and no new debt obligation is created. Comment 2(d)-2.i.

Second, Regulation C provides that transactions completed pursuant to a New York State consolidation, extension, and modification agreement (New York CEMA) and classified as a supplemental mortgage under New York Tax Law Section 255, such that the borrower owes reduced or no mortgage recording taxes, is an extension of credit. However, the regulation also provides that certain transactions providing new funds that are consolidated into a New York CEMA are excluded from the HMDA reporting requirements. Comment 2(d)-2.ii; 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(13).

Secured by a Lien on a Dwelling

A loan is not a closed-end mortgage loan and a line of credit is not an open-end line of credit unless it is secured by a lien on a dwelling. A dwelling is a residential structure. There is no requirement that the structure be attached to real property or that it be the applicant's or borrower's residence. Examples of dwellings include:

1. Principal residences;
2. Second homes and vacation homes;
3. Investment properties;
4. Residential structures whether or not attached to real property;
5. Detached residential structures;

[10] It is important to note that Regulation C, comments 2(d)-2 and 2(o)-2 defines the phrase "extension of credit" differently than Regulation B, 12 CFR Part 1002.2(q).

6. Individual condominium and cooperative units;
7. Manufactured homes or other factory-built homes; and
8. Multifamily residential structures or communities, such as apartment buildings, condominium complexes, cooperative buildings or housing complexes, and manufactured home communities. 12 CFR 1003.2(f); Comments 2(f)-1 and -2.

A dwelling is not limited to a structure that has four or fewer units. It also includes a multifamily dwelling, which is a dwelling that includes five or more individual dwelling units. A multifamily dwelling includes a manufactured home community.

A loan related to a manufactured home community is secured by a dwelling even if it is not secured by any individual manufactured homes, but is secured only by the land that constitutes the manufactured home community. However, a loan related to a multifamily residential structure or community other than a manufactured home community is not secured by a dwelling unless it is secured by one or more individual dwelling units. For example, a loan that is secured only by the common areas of a condominium complex or only by an assignment of rents from an apartment building is not secured by a dwelling. Comment 2(f)-2. Further, a covered loan secured by five or more separate dwellings, which are not multifamily dwellings, in more than one location is not a loan secured by a multifamily dwelling. For example, assume a landlord uses a covered loan to improve five or more dwellings, each with one individual dwelling unit, located in different parts of a town, and the loan is secured by those properties. The covered loan is not secured by a multifamily dwelling as defined by Section 1003.2(n). Likewise, a covered loan secured by five or more separate dwellings that are located within a multifamily dwelling, but which is not secured by the entire multifamily dwelling (e.g., an entire apartment building or housing complex), is not secured by a multifamily dwelling as defined by Section 1003.2(n). For example, assume that an investor purchases 10 individual unit condominiums in a 100-unit condominium complex using a covered loan. The covered loan would not be secured by a multifamily dwelling as defined by Section 1003.2(n). Comment 2(n)-3.

The following are not dwellings:

1. Recreational vehicles, such as boats, campers, travel trailers, or park model recreational vehicles;
2. Houseboats, floating homes, or mobile homes constructed before June 15, 1976;
3. Transitory residences, such as hotels, hospitals, college dormitories, or recreational vehicle parks; and
4. Structures originally designed as a dwelling but used exclusively for commercial purposes, such as a home converted to a daycare facility or professional office. Comment 2(f)-3.

A property that is used for both residential and commercial purposes, such as a building that has apartment and retail units, is a dwelling if the property's primary use is residential. Comment 2(f)-4.

A property used for both long-term housing and to provide assisted living or supportive housing services is a dwelling. However, transitory residences used to provide such services are not dwellings. Properties used to provide medical care, such as skilled nursing, rehabilitation, or long-term medical care, are not dwellings. If a property is used for long-term housing, to provide related services (such as assisted living), and to provide medical care, the property is a dwelling if its primary use is residential. Comment 2(f)-5.

A financial institution may use any reasonable standard to determine a property's primary use, such as square footage, income generated, or number of beds or units allocated for each use. It may select the standard on a case-by-case basis. Comments 2(f)-4 and -5.

D. Excluded Transactions

Regulation C does not apply to transactions that are specifically excluded from coverage. 12 CFR 1003.3(c). Therefore, an excluded transaction is not a covered loan. Regulation C retains and clarifies existing categories of transactions that are excluded from coverage. It also expands the existing exclusion for agricultural loans, and adds new categories of transactions that are excluded from coverage. Effective January 1, 2018, the following are excluded transactions:

1. A closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit that a financial institution originates or purchases in a fiduciary capacity, such as a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit that a financial institution originates or purchases as a trustee. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1); comment 3(c)(1).

2. A closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit secured by a lien on unimproved land. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(2). Generally, a loan or line of credit must be secured by a dwelling to be a covered loan. Regulation C also lists closed-end mortgage loans and open-end lines of credit secured only by vacant or unimproved land as excluded transactions.[11] However, a loan or line of credit secured by a lien on unimproved land is deemed to be secured by a dwelling (and might not be excluded) if the financial institution knows, based on information that it receives from the applicant or borrower at the time the application is received or the credit decision is made, that the proceeds of that loan or credit line will be used within two years after closing or account opening to construct a dwelling on, or to purchase a dwelling to be placed on, the land. Comment 3(c)(2)-1.

3. A closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit that is temporary financing. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(3). A transaction is excluded as temporary financing if it is designed to be replaced by separate permanent financing extended to the same borrower at a later time. The separate permanent financing may be extended by any lender (i.e., by either the lender that extended the temporary financing or another lender). In addition, a construction-only loan or line of credit is considered temporary financing and excluded under Regulation C if the loan or line of credit is extended to a person exclusively to construct a dwelling for sale. Comments 3(c)(3)-1 and -2.

[11] A dwelling also includes a multifamily residential structure or community such as an apartment, condominium, cooperative building or complex, or a manufactured home community. A loan related to a manufactured home community is secured by a dwelling for purposes of Section 1003.2(f) even if it is not secured by any individual manufactured homes, but only by the land that constitutes the manufactured home community including sites for manufactured homes. Comment 2(f)(2).

4. The purchase of an interest in a pool of closed-end mortgage loans or open-end lines of credit, such as mortgage-participation certificates, mortgage-backed securities, or real estate mortgage investment conduits. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(4); Comment 3(c)(4)-1.

5. The purchase solely of the right to service closed-end mortgage loans or open-end lines of credit. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(5).

6. The purchase of a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit as part of a merger or acquisition or as part of the acquisition of all of a branch office's assets and liabilities. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(6); Comment 3(c)(6)-1. For more information on mergers and acquisitions under Regulation C, see Comments 2(g)-3 and -4.

7. A closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit, or an application for a closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit, for which the total dollar amount is less than $500. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(7).

8. The purchase of a partial interest in a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(8); Comment 3(c)(8)-1.

9. A closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit if the proceeds are used primarily for agricultural purposes or if the closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit is secured by a dwelling that is located on real property that is used primarily for agricultural purposes. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(9); Comment 3(c)(9)-1. Regulation C directs financial institutions to Regulation Z's official commentary for guidance on what is an agricultural purpose. Regulation Z's official commentary states that agricultural purposes include planting, propagating, nurturing, harvesting, catching, storing, exhibiting, marketing, transporting, processing, or manufacturing food, beverages, flowers, trees, livestock, poultry, bees, wildlife, fish, or shellfish by a natural person engaged in farming, fishing, or growing crops, flowers, trees, livestock, poultry, bees, or wildlife. See Comment 3(a)-8 in the official interpretations of Regulation Z, 12 CFR Part 1026. A financial institution may use any reasonable standard to determine the primary use of the property, and may select the standard to apply on a case-by-case basis. Comment 3(c)(9)-1.

10. A closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit that is or will be made primarily for business or commercial purposes, unless it is a home improvement loan, a home purchase loan, or a refinancing. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(10). Not all transactions that are primarily for a business purpose are excluded transactions. Thus, a financial institution must collect, record, and report data for dwelling-secured, business-purpose loans and lines of credit that are home improvement loans, home purchase loans, or refinancings if no other exclusion applies. For more information on determining whether a loan or line of credit is a home purchase loan, home improvement loan, or refinancing, see 12 CFR 1003.2(f), (i), (j), and (p) and the associated commentary.

Regulation C provides that, if a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit is deemed to be primarily for a business, commercial, or organizational purpose under Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.3(a) and its official commentary, then the loan or line of credit also is deemed to be primarily for a business or commercial purpose. Comment 3(c)(10)-2. For more information and examples of business-purpose or commercial-purpose transactions that are covered loans, see Comments 3(c)(10)-3 and -4.

11. A closed-end mortgage loan if the financial institution originated fewer than 25 closed-end mortgage loans in either of the two preceding calendar years. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11). A financial institution is not required to collect, record, or report closed-end mortgage loans if it originated fewer than 25 of them in either of the two preceding calendar years. However, the financial institution may still be required to collect and report information regarding open-end lines of credit, depending on the number of open-end lines of credit it originates in the preceding two calendar years. Comment 3(c)(11)-1. For more information on how to determine if a financial institution "originated" a particular loan when multiple entities are involved in the transaction, see Comments 4(a)-2 through -4.

    A financial institution may report applications for, originations of, and purchases of closed-end mortgage loans that are excluded transactions under 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11). However a financial institution that chooses to report such excluded applications, originations, and purchases must report all such applications it received for closed-end mortgage loans, all closed-end mortgage loans it originates, and all closed-end mortgage loans it purchases that would otherwise be covered loans for a given calendar year. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11). Regulation B permits a financial institution to collect information regarding the ethnicity, race, and sex of an applicant for a closed-end mortgage loan that is an excluded transaction under 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11), if the financial institution submits HMDA data concerning such closed-end mortgage loans and applications or if it submitted such HMDA data for any of the preceding five calendar years.[12]

12. An open-end line of credit if the number of open-end lines of credit that the financial institution originated in either of the two preceding calendar years does not meet or exceed the applicable threshold. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(12); Comment 3(c)(12)-1. Effective January 1, 2018 until December 31, 2019, the applicable threshold is 500 open-end lines of credit. During this time period, a financial institution is not required to collect, record, or report open-end lines of credit if it originated fewer than 500 of them in either of the two preceding calendar years. Effective January 1, 2020, the applicable threshold will be 100 open-end lines of credit. Effective January 1, 2020, a financial institution is not required to collect, record, and report open-end lines of credit if it originated fewer than 100 of them in either of the two preceding calendar years. Comment 3(c)(12)-1. However, the financial institution will still be required to collect and report information regarding closed-end mortgage loans if it originated at least 25 of them in each of the two preceding calendar years. Comment 3(c)(12)-1. For more information on how to determine if a financial institution "originated" a particular line of credit when multiple entities are involved in the transaction, see Comments 4(a)-2 through -4.

A financial institution may report applications for, originations of, or purchases of open-end lines of credit that are excluded transactions under 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(12). However, a financial institution that chooses to report such excluded applications, originations, or purchases must report all applications for otherwise covered open-end lines of credit that it receives, all otherwise covered open-end lines of credit it originates, and all otherwise covered open-end lines of credit it purchases that would otherwise be covered loans for a given calendar year. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(12); Comment 3(c)(12)-2. Regulation B permits a financial institution to collect information regarding the ethnicity, race, and sex of an applicant for an open-end line of credit that is an excluded transaction under 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(12), if it submits HMDA data concerning such open-end lines of credit and applications or if it submitted such HMDA data for any of the preceding five calendar years.[13]

13. A transaction that provided (or, in the case of an application, proposed to provide) new funds to the borrower in advance of being consolidated in a New York CEMA classified as a supplemental mortgage under New York Tax Law Section 255. However, the transaction is excluded only if final action on the consolidation was taken in the same calendar year as the final action on the new funds transaction. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(13). Additionally, the transaction is excluded only if, at the time that it originated the transaction providing the new funds, the financial institution intended to consolidate the loan into a New York CEMA. This exclusion does not apply to similar preliminary transactions that are consolidated pursuant to laws other than New York Tax Law Section 255. Such preliminary transactions under other laws must be reported if they are covered loans and are not covered by another exclusion. Comment 3(c)(13)-1.

    New funds provided in advance of being consolidated into a New York CEMA classified as a supplemental mortgage under New York Tax Law Section 255 are reported only insofar as they form part of the total amount of the reported New York CEMA. They are not reported as a separate amount. If a New York CEMA that consolidates an excluded preliminary transaction is carried out in a transaction involving an assumption, the financial institution reports the New York CEMA and does not report the preliminary transaction separately. Comment 3(c)(13)-1.

Reportable Activity

Once a financial institution has determined whether a transaction involves a covered loan, it must determine whether it has engaged in activity that obligates it to report information about the transaction. Generally, a financial institution is required to report information for actions taken on applications (as that term is defined below) for covered loans, originations of covered loans, and purchases of covered loans. If a financial institution receives an application and that application results in the financial institution originating a covered loan, the financial institution reports the origination of the covered loan, and does not separately report the application. For more information on when to report information regarding applications and covered loans, see APPLICATIONS and ORIGINATIONS AND PURCHASES OF COVERED LOANS, below. There are special rules that apply if multiple entities are involved in the transaction. These special rules are discussed in TRANSACTION INVOLVING MULTIPLE ENTITIES, below. There are also partial exemptions for which the financial institution would not be required to collect, record, or report certain data points for the transaction that qualifies for the partial exemption. These partial exemptions are discussed below in PARTIAL EXEMPTIONS.

A. Applications

For purposes of Regulation C, an application is: (a) an oral or written request (b) for a covered loan (c) that is made in accordance with procedures the financial institution uses for the type of credit requested. 12 CFR 1003.2(b)(1).

This definition of application is similar to the Regulation B definition, except that prequalification requests are not applications under Regulation C. Interpretations that appear in the official commentary to Regulation B are generally applicable to the definition of application under Regulation C, except for those interpretations that include a prequalification request within the definition of application. Comment 2(b)-1.

Under Regulation C, a request for a preapproval may be treated differently than a request for a prequalification for certain types of loans. The determination of whether a request is a prequalification request (which is not an application) or a preapproval request (which might be an application) is based on Regulation C, not on the labels that a financial institution uses or interpretations of other regulations, such as Regulation B.

A preapproval request is an application under Regulation C if the request is:

1. For a home purchase loan,
2. Not secured by a multifamily dwelling,
3. Not for an open-end line of credit or for a reverse mortgage, and
4. Reviewed under a preapproval program (see definition of preapproval program immediately below). 12 CFR 1003.2(b)(2).

A preapproval program for purposes of Regulation C is a program in which the financial institution:

1. Conducts a comprehensive analysis of the applicant's creditworthiness (including income verification), resources, and other matters typically reviewed as part of the financial institution's normal credit evaluation program; and then

2. Issues a written commitment that: (a) is for a home purchase loan; (b) is valid for a designated period of time and up to a specified amount; and (c) is subject only to specifically permitted conditions. 12 CFR 1003.2(b)(2); Comment 2(b)-3.

The written commitment issued as part of the preapproval program can be subject to only the following types of conditions:

1. Conditions that require the identification of a suitable property;
2. Conditions that require that no material change occur regarding the applicant's financial condition or creditworthiness prior to closing; and
3. Limited conditions that (a) are not related to the applicant's financial condition or creditworthiness and (b) the financial institution ordinarily attaches to a traditional home mortgage application. Examples of conditions ordinarily attached to a traditional home mortgage application include requiring an acceptable title insurance binder or a certificate indicating clear termite inspection and, if the applicant plans to use the proceeds from the sale of the applicant's present home to purchase a new home, a settlement statement showing adequate proceeds from the sale of the present home. 12 CFR 1003.2(b)(2); Comment 2(b)-3.

A program that a financial institution describes as a "preapproval program" but that does not satisfy the Regulation C definition is not a preapproval program for purposes of the regulation. Comment 2(b)-3.

If a financial institution does not regularly use procedures to consider requests but instead considers requests on an ad hoc basis, the financial institution is not required to treat the ad hoc requests as having been reviewed under a preapproval program. However, a financial institution should be generally consistent in following uniform procedures for considering such ad hoc requests. Comment 2(b)-3.

Under Regulation C, a financial institution must collect, record, and report data regarding an application it receives if: (1) the application did not result in the financial institution originating a covered loan; and (2) the financial institution took action on the application or the applicant withdrew the application while the financial institution was reviewing it. For example, a financial institution reports information regarding an application that it denied, that it approved but the applicant did not accept, or that it closed for incompleteness. 12 CFR 1003.4(a), 1003.5(a) Comment 4(a)-1. If the application results in the financial institution originating a covered loan, the financial institution reports the covered loan, not the application itself. For more information on reporting applications when multiple entities are involved, see TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING MULTIPLE ENTITIES*,* below.

Although requests under preapproval programs are applications, a financial institution reports data regarding a request under a preapproval program only if the preapproval request is denied or approved but not accepted. A financial institution will also report a request under a preapproval program that results in the financial institution originating a home purchase loan, but it will be reported as an originated covered loan. Comment 4(a)-1.ii.

A financial institution reports the data for an application, including a reportable preapproval request, on the HMDA Loan/Application Register (LAR) for the calendar year during which it takes action even if the financial institution received the application in a previous calendar year. Comment 4(a)-1.iv.

B. Originations and Purchases of Covered Loans

A financial institution must collect, record, and report information regarding originations and purchases of covered loans. For more information on when a financial institution reports the origination or purchase of a covered loan when multiple entities are involved, see TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING MULTIPLE ENTITIES, below.

A purchase includes a repurchase of a covered loan, regardless of whether the financial institution chose to repurchase the covered loan or was required to repurchase it because of a contractual obligation, and regardless of whether the repurchase occurred within the same calendar year that the covered loan was originated or in a different calendar year. Comment 4(a)-5.

A purchase does not include a temporary transfer of a covered loan to an interim funder or warehouse creditor as part of an interim funding agreement under which the financial institution that originated the covered loan is obligated to repurchase it for sale to a subsequent investor. Such funding agreements are often referred to as repurchase agreements and are sometimes used as the functional equivalents of warehouse lines of credit. Comment 4(a)-5.

C. Transactions Involving Multiple Entities

Only one financial institution reports the origination of a covered loan. If more than one institution is involved in the origination of a covered loan, the institution that makes the credit decision approving the application before loan closing or account opening is responsible for reporting the origination of the covered loan. It is not relevant whether the loan closed in the reporting financial institution's name. If more than one institution approved an application prior to loan closing or account opening and one of those institutions purchased the covered loan after closing or account opening, the institution that purchased the covered loan after closing or account opening is responsible for reporting the origination of the covered loan. Comment 4(a)-2.

If a financial institution reports a covered loan as an origination, it reports all of the information required to be reported for the origination of a covered loan, even if the covered loan was not initially payable to the financial institution that is reporting the covered loan as an origination. Comment 4(a)-2. When reporting a covered loan as an origination, a financial institution cannot rely on exceptions or exclusions that apply to purchased covered loans, but that do not apply to originations of covered loans. See Comment 4(a)-2.

In the case of an application that did not result in an origination, a financial institution reports the action it took on that application if it made a credit decision on the application or was reviewing the application when the application was withdrawn or closed for incompleteness. The financial institution is also required to report the application if the financial institution was reviewing the application when it was withdrawn or the file was closed for incompleteness. Comment 4(a)-2.ii.

If a financial institution makes a credit decision on a covered loan or application through the actions of an agent, the financial institution reports the covered loan or application. State law determines whether one party is the agent of another party. Comment 4(a)-4.

D. Partial Exemptions

The 2018 Act created partial exemptions from some of the 2015 HMDA Rule's requirements for certain financial institutions. Only certain covered loans and applications are covered under each of the two partial exemptions. If a covered loan or application is covered by a partial exemption, the financial institution is not required to collect, record, and report specific data points. The partial exemptions were effective May 24, 2018, and apply to the collection, recording, and reporting of HMDA data on or after that date. A list of the data points covered by the partial exemptions is provided below. See 2019 A Guide to HMDA Reporting: Getting It Right! Appendix G for a list of both the partially exempt data fields and data points.

As discussed below, only a financial institution that is an insured credit union or an insured depository institution is eligible for the partial exemptions. Additionally, as explained below, in order to be eligible for the partial exemptions, an insured depository institution must not have received certain ratings in its most recent performance evaluations under the Community Reinvestment Act (CRA).[14]

As discussed below, each of the partial exemptions applies only to certain covered loans and applications and only if an applicable loan-volume threshold is met. An eligible insured depository institution or insured credit union: (1) must meet the applicable loan-volume threshold for closed-end mortgage loans in order for a partial exemption to apply to its closed-end mortgage loan transactions; and (2) must meet the applicable loan-volume threshold for open-end lines of credit in order for a partial exemption to apply to its open-end line of credit transactions.

The 2018 Act created partial exemptions, not complete exclusions. Therefore, if a covered loan or application is covered by a partial exemption, the financial institution is required to collect, record, and report 22 specific data points specified in 12 CFR 1003.4(a)(1)–(38), but is exempt from collecting, recording, and reporting 26 other specific data points for that transaction. Additionally, the financial institution may voluntarily report any or all of these remaining 26 data points for a covered loan or application covered by a partial exemption. COLLECTING, RECORDING, AND REPORTING FOR TRANSACTIONS COVERED BY A PARTIAL EXEMPTION, below, discusses the scope of the partial exemptions and includes tables that list both the 22 data points that are required to be collected, recorded, and reported and the 26 data points that are not required to be collected, recorded, and reported if a partial exemption applies to a covered loan or application.

Eligible Financial Institutions

In order to be eligible for a partial exemption, a financial institution must be an:

1. "Insured credit union," as defined in Section 101 of the Federal Credit Union Act, 12 U.S.C. 1752; or

2. "Insured depository institution," as defined in Section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, 12 U.S.C. 1813.

Additionally, a financial institution that satisfies the definition of "insured depository institution" must not have received a less than satisfactory rating in its most recent CRA performance evaluations in order to be eligible for a partial exemption. More specifically, an insured depository institution must not have received either of the following:

1. A rating of "needs to improve record of meeting community credit needs" during each of its two most recent examinations under Section 807(b)(2) of the CRA; or

2. A rating of "substantial noncompliance in meeting community credit needs" on its most recent examination under Section 807(b)(2) of the CRA.

The CRA ratings used to determine if an insured depository institution is eligible for a partial exemption are the institution's two most recent ratings as of December 31 of the preceding calendar year.

A financial institution that does not satisfy either the definition of an "insured credit union" or an "insured depository institution" may not rely on either of the partial exemptions, even if it satisfies the loan-volume thresholds discussed in LOAN-VOLUME THRESHOLDS, below. Similarly, an insured depository institution that does not satisfy the criteria regarding CRA examination history cannot rely on either of the partial exemptions.

Loan-volume Thresholds

In order for a partial exemption to apply to an application or covered loan (including a purchased covered loan), an eligible financial institution must also meet the applicable loan-volume threshold.

A partial exemption applies to an eligible financial institution's applications for, originations of, and purchases of closed-end mortgage loans if the institution originated fewer than 500 closed-end mortgage loans in each of the two preceding calendar years. When a financial institution determines whether it meets the loan-volume thresholds for a partial exemption, it does not count transactions excluded by 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1) through (10) and (13).

A partial exemption applies to an eligible financial institution's applications for, originations of, and purchases of open-end lines of credit if the institution originated fewer than 500 open-end lines of credit in each of the two preceding calendar years. However, during 2018 and 2019, a financial institution is not required to collect or report any information for open-end lines of credit if the institution originated fewer than 500 open-end lines of credit during either of the two preceding calendar years. This is because, during 2018 and 2019, open-end lines of credit are excluded transactions for a financial institution that originated fewer than 500 open-end lines of credit during either of the two preceding calendar years. See the discussion regarding excluded transactions in TRANSACTIONAL COVERAGE, above.

The partial exemption for closed-end mortgage loans and the partial exemption for open-end lines of credit operate independently of one another. Thus, in a given calendar year, an eligible financial institution may be able to rely on one or both partial exemptions.

Collecting, Recording, and Reporting for Transactions Covered by a Partial Exemption

If a partial exemption applies to a covered loan or application (as discussed above), the financial institution is not required to collect, record, and report some of the data points that the 2015 HMDA Rule would otherwise require the institution to collect, record, and report for that transaction. More specifically, if a partial exemption applies to a covered loan or application, a financial institution is not required under the HMDA Rule to collect, record, or report the 26 data points listed in the table immediately below.

Data Points Eligible Financial Institutions Need Not Collect or Report under the 2018 HMDA Rule For Transactions Covered by a Partial Exemption

- Universal Loan Identifier (ULI (1003.4(a)(1)(i))[15]
- Application Channel (1003.4(a)(33))
- Loan Term (1003.4(a)(25))
- Reasons for Denial (1003.4(a)(16))[16]
- Property Address (1003.4(a)(9)(i))
- Manufactured Home Secured Property Type (1003.4(a)(29))
- Manufactured Home Land Property Interest (1003.4(a)(30))
- Property Value (1003.4(a)(28))
- Multifamily Affordable Units (1003.4(a)(32))
- Debt-to-Income Ratio (1003.4(a)(23))
- Combined Loan-to-Value Ratio (1003.4(a)(24))
- Credit Score (1003.4(a)(15))
- Automated Underwriting System (1003.4(a)(35))
- Interest Rate (1003.4(a)(21))
- Introductory Rate Period (1003.4(a)(26))
- Rate Spread (1003.4(a)(12))
- Non-Amortizing Features (1003.4(a)(27))
- Total Loan Costs or Total Points and Fees (1003.4(a)(17))
- Origination Charges (1003.4(a)(18))

[15] If the financial institution chooses not to report a ULI for a covered loan or application covered by a partial exemption, it must report a non-universal loan identifier.
[16] Financial institutions supervised by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) are required to report reasons for denial on their HMDA loan/application registers (HMDA LARs), even if a partial exemption applies. 12 CFR 27.3(a)(1)(i), 128.6. Similarly, pursuant to regulations transferred from the Office of Thrift Supervision, certain financial institutions supervised by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) are required to report reasons for denial on their HMDA LARs, even if a partial exemption applies. 12 CFR 390.147.

- Discount Points (1003.4(a)(19))
- Lender Credits (1003.4(a)(20))
- Prepayment Penalty Term (1003.4(a)(22))
- Reverse Mortgage Flag (1003.4(a)(36))
- Open-End Line of Credit Flag (1003.4(a)(37))
- Business or Commercial Purpose Flag (1003.4(a)(38))
- Mortgage Loan Originator Identifier (1003.4(a)(34))

A financial institution may opt to collect, record, and report one or more of these 26 data points for a covered loan or application that is covered by a partial exemption.

Seven of these 26 data points (i.e., property address, credit score, reasons for denial, total loan costs or total points and fees, non-amortizing features, application channel, and automated underwriting system) have multiple data fields. If a financial institution opts to report a data point with multiple fields, it must report all of the data fields that make up that data point.

If a financial institution opts not to report one of the 26 data points other than the ULI, the financial institution generally reports that the covered loan or application is exempt from that data point. However, if a data point is not applicable to the particular transaction and the transaction is exempt from that data point, the financial institution may choose to report either that the data point is not applicable or that the transaction is exempt from the data point.

If a covered loan or application is covered by a partial exemption, a financial institution must collect, record, and report 22 data points for the covered loan or application. These 22 data points are set forth in the following table.

Data Points That Must be Collected and Reported under the 2018 HMDA Rule for Covered Loans and Applications Covered by a Partial Exemption
• Ethnicity (1003.4(a)(10)(i))
• Race (1003.4(a)(10)(i))
• Sex (1003.4(a)(10)(i))
• Age (1003.4(a)(10)(ii))
• Income (1003.4(a)(10)(iii))
• Legal Entity Identifier (LEI) (1003.5(a)(3))
• Application Date (1003.4(a)(1)(ii))

- Preapproval (1003.4(a)(4))
- Loan Type (1003.4(a)(2))
- Loan Purpose (1003.4(a)(3))
- Loan Amount (1003.4(a)(7))
- Action Taken (1003.4(a)(8)(i))
- Action Taken Date (1003.4(a)(8)(ii))
- State (1003.4(a)(9)(ii)(A))
- County (1003.4(a)(9)(ii)(B))
- Census Tract (1003.4(a)(9)(ii)(C))
- Construction Method (1003.4(a)(5))
- Occupancy Type (1003.4(a)(6))
- Lien Status (1003.4(a)(14))
- Number of Units (1003.4(a)(31))
- HOEPA Status (1003.4(a)(13))
- Type of Purchaser (1003.4(a)(11))

Because the partial exemptions do not affect these 22 data points, financial institutions must continue to collect, record, and report these 22 data points for covered loans and applications in the manner specified in the 2015 HMDA Rule, as amended and clarified by the 2017 HMDA Rule. As discussed above, during 2018 and 2019, a financial institution is not required to collect or report any information for open-end lines of credit if the institution originated fewer than 500 open-end lines of credit during either of the two preceding calendar years. See the discussion regarding excluded transactions in TRANSACTIONAL COVERAGE, above.

For more information on reporting data points if a covered loan or application is covered by a partial exemption, see the following COMPILATION OF LOAN DATA section of these procedures and the Filing Instructions Guide that incorporates the 2018 HMDA Rule available at www.consumerfinance.gov/data-research/hmda/for-filers.

Compilation of Loan Data

Attachment A is a summary of the data points required to be collected, recorded, and reported beginning in 2018 and provides information on where to find specific guidance in the regulation and commentary on what should be included for each data point.[17] Additional information on the data fields and codes used in preparing the HMDA LAR is provided in the HMDA Filing Instructions Guide (FIG) available at ffiec.cfpb.gov/.[18]

Reporting

A. Recording

Regulation C requires a financial institution to record the data about a covered loan or application on a HMDA LAR within 30 calendar days after the end of the calendar quarter in which the financial institution takes final action on the covered loan or application. 12 CFR 1003.4(f). A financial institution is not required to record all of its HMDA data for a quarter on a single HMDA LAR. Rather, a financial institution may record data on a single HMDA LAR or may record data on one or more HMDA LARs for different branches or different loan types (such as home purchase loans or home improvement loans or loans on multifamily dwellings). Comment 4(f)-1.

Other State or Federal regulations may require a financial institution to record its data on a HMDA LAR more frequently. Comment 4(f)-2.

Financial institutions may maintain their quarterly records in electronic or any other format, provided they can make the information available to their regulatory agencies in a timely manner upon request. Comment 4(f)-3.

B. Reporting

In addition to the required data discussed in 12 CFR 1003.4(a) and (b), effective January 1, 2019, a financial institution must include the following when it submits its HMDA data:

1. Its name;
2. The calendar year and, effective January 1, 2020, if applicable, the calendar quarter to which the data relate (see 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(ii)[19] for information on quarterly reporting);
3. The name and contact information for a person who can be contacted with questions about the submission;
4. The financial institution's appropriate Federal agency;
5. The total number of entries in the submission;
6. The financial institution's Federal Taxpayer Identification Number (TIN); and

[17] Each data point may correspond to more than one field reported on the HMDA LAR. Accordingly there are 48 data points described in Regulation C and 110 fields reported on the HMDA LAR. One example of a data point that corresponds to multiple fields is the ethnicity data point. Each applicant and co-applicant may enter up to five ethnicities on their application. See 12 CFR 1003.4(a)(10)(i); Appendix B to Part 1003.

[19] The quarterly reporting requirement, 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(ii), becomes effective January 1, 2020.

7. The financial institution's Legal Entity Identifier (LEI). 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(3).

If the appropriate Federal agency for a financial institution changes, the financial institution must identify its new appropriate Federal agency in its annual submission for the year of the change. Comment 5(a)-2. For example, if a financial institution's appropriate Federal agency changes in February 2018, it must identify its new appropriate Federal agency beginning with its annual submission of 2018 data by March 1, 2019. Comment 5(a)-5. For a financial institution required to comply with quarterly reporting requirements (see 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(ii)), the financial institution also must identify its new appropriate Federal agency in its quarterly submission beginning with its submission for the quarter of the change, unless the change occurs during the fourth quarter (in which case, the financial institution would identify the new appropriate Federal agency in its annual submission). For example, if the appropriate Federal agency for a financial institution changes during February 2020, the financial institution must identify its new appropriate Federal agency beginning with its quarterly submission for the first quarter of 2020. Comment 5(a)-2.

If a financial institution obtains a new TIN, it must provide the new TIN in its subsequent data submissions. For example, if two financial institutions that previously reported HMDA data merge and the surviving financial institution retained its LEI but obtained a new TIN, the surviving financial institution reports the new TIN beginning with its next HMDA data submission. Comment 5(a)-5.

A financial institution that is a subsidiary of a bank or savings association must complete its own HMDA LAR and submit it, directly or through its parent, to the appropriate Federal agency for the subsidiary's parent. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(2). A financial institution is a subsidiary of a bank or savings association (for purposes of reporting HMDA data to the same agency as the parent) if the bank or savings association holds or controls an ownership interest in the financial institution that is greater than 50 percent. Comment 5(a)-3.

C. Annual Reporting

Regulation C maintains the annual reporting requirement, but requires financial institutions to submit data electronically in accordance with the procedures published by the Bureau. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(5). These procedures do not provide detailed information about the HMDA submission process or file, data, and edit specifications. Information about those topics can be found on the FFIEC's web pages available at ffiec.cfpb.gov/ and www.ffiec.gov/hmda/.

Under Regulation C, a financial institution must submit its annual HMDA LAR in electronic format to its appropriate Federal supervisory agency by March 1 of the year following the calendar year for which the data are collected. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(i) An individual who is an authorized representative of the financial institution and who has knowledge regarding the submitted data must certify its accuracy and completeness. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(i)

A financial institution must retain a copy of its submitted annual HMDA LAR for at least three years. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(i). Financial institutions may retain their annual HMDA LARs in either paper or electronic form. Comment 5(a)-4.

For more information on reporting under Regulation C or on the electronic submission of data, please see ffiec.cfpb.gov/.

D. Quarterly Reporting

The HMDA Rule requires some financial institutions to report data on a quarterly basis as well as on an annual basis. The quarterly reporting requirement is effective January 1, 2020. It applies to a financial institution that reported at least 60,000 originated covered loans and applications (combined) for the preceding calendar year. The financial institution does not count purchased covered loans when determining whether the quarterly reporting requirement applies. If quarterly reporting is required, the financial institution must report all data required to be recorded for the calendar quarter within 60 calendar days after the end of the calendar quarter. The quarterly reporting requirement does not apply, however, to the fourth quarter of the year. A financial institution subject to the quarterly reporting requirement reports its fourth quarter data as part of its annual submission. In its annual submission, a quarterly reporter will resubmit the data previously submitted for the first three calendar quarters of the year, including any corrections to the data, as well as its fourth quarter data. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(ii).

Disclosure of Data

A. Disclosure Statement

Under Regulation C, the FFIEC shall provide a notice to the financial institution that the financial institution's disclosure statement (aggregated data derived from loan-level data submitted for the prior calendar year) is available. 12 CFR 1003.5(b)(1). No later than three business days (any calendar day other than a Saturday, Sunday, or legal public holiday) after receiving notice from the FFIEC, the financial institution must make available to the public, upon request, a written notice that clearly conveys that the financial institution's disclosure statement may be obtained on the Bureau's website at www.consumerfinance.gov/hmda. 12 CFR 1003.5(b)(2); comment 5(b)-1. A financial institution's disclosure statement may also be obtained from ffiec.cfpb.gov. A financial institution may, but is not required to, use the sample notice in to satisfy Regulation C's disclosure statement requirement. The notice may be made available in paper or electronic form. Comment 5(b)-2.

A financial institution must make the notice available to the public for a period of five years. 12 CFR 1003.5(d)(1).

At its discretion, a financial institution may also provide its disclosure statement and impose a reasonable fee for costs incurred reproducing or providing the statement. 12 CFR 1003.5(d)(2). Even if it provides the disclosure statement, a financial institution must comply with the notice requirement.

B. Modified HMDA LAR[20]

Upon request from a member of the public, a financial institution must provide a written notice regarding the availability of its modified HMDA LAR (the financial institution's HMDA LAR, as modified by the Bureau to protect applicant and borrower privacy). 12 CFR 1003.5(c). The written notice must clearly convey that the financial institution's HMDA LAR, as modified by the Bureau to protect borrower and applicant privacy, may be obtained on the Bureau's website at www.consumerfinance.gov/hmda. A financial institution's HMDA LAR is also available at ffiec.cfpb.gov.

A financial institution may, but is not required to, use the sample notice in comment 5(c)-2 to the regulation to satisfy Regulation C's modified HMDA LAR requirement. Comment 5(c)-2. A financial institution may, but is not required to, use the same notice for purposes of this disclosure requirement and the disclosure statement requirement discussed in the DISCLOSURE STATEMENT section above. The notice may be made available in paper or electronic form. Comment 5(c)-1.

The notice must be made available in the calendar year following the calendar year for which the financial institution collected data. 12 CFR 1003.5(d)(1). The notice must be made available for three years. For example, for data that it was required to collect in 2018, a financial institution must make available a notice through calendar year 2021 that its modified HMDA 2018 LAR is available.

At its discretion, a financial institution may also provide its HMDA LAR, as modified by the Bureau, and impose a reasonable fee for any costs incurred to reproduce or provide the data. 12 CFR 1003.5(d)(2). Even if it decides to provide the modified HMDA LAR, a financial institution must comply with the notice requirement.

C. Posted Notices

A financial institution must post, in the lobby of its home office and each branch office physically located in an MSA or Metropolitan Division (MD), a general notice about the availability of its HMDA data on the Bureau's website. 12 CFR 1003.5(e). A financial institution may, but is not required to, use the sample notice in Comment 5(e)-1 to the regulation to satisfy this requirement. In any case, the notice must clearly convey that the financial institution's HMDA data are available on the Bureau's website at www.consumerfinance.gov/hmda. Comment 5(e)-1.

[20] The Bureau's final policy guidance describing the modifications it will make to protect consumer privacy for data collected in 2018 and reported in 2019 is available at www.consumerfinance.gov/about-us/newsroom/consumer-financial-protection-bureau-announces-policy-guidance-disclosure-home-mortgage-data/.

D. Aggregated data

The FFIEC will use the annual data submitted pursuant to Regulation C to make available aggregated data for each MSA and MD, showing lending patterns by property location, age of housing stock, and income level, sex, ethnicity, and race. 12 CFR 1003.5(f).

Administrative Enforcement

A violation of Regulation C is subject to administrative sanctions, including civil money penalties. Compliance can be enforced by the Bureau, the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, the FDIC, the FRB, the National Credit Union Administration, or the Office of the Comptroller of Currency.

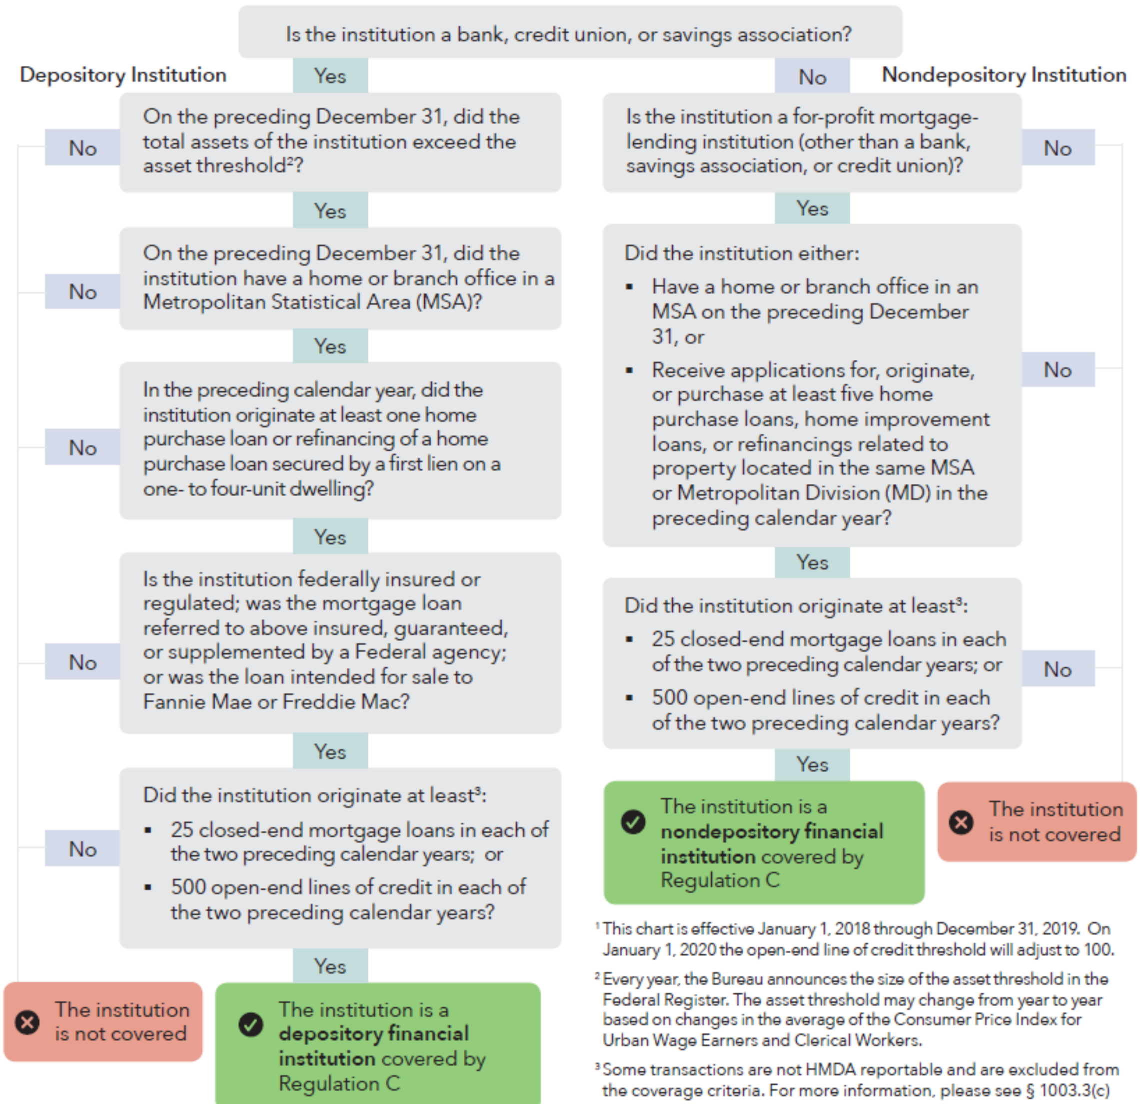
An error in compiling or recording data for a covered loan or application is not a violation of HMDA or Regulation C if the error was unintentional and occurred despite maintenance of procedures reasonably adapted to avoid such errors. 12 CFR 1003.6(b)(1). However, a financial institution that obtains the property-location information for applications and covered loans from third parties is responsible for ensuring that the information reported is correct. Comment 6(b)-1. An incorrect entry for a census tract number is deemed a bona fide error and is not a violation if the financial institution maintains procedures reasonably adapted to avoid such an error. 12 CFR 1003.6(b)(2).

If an institution makes a good-faith effort to record all data concerning covered transactions fully and accurately within thirty calendar days after the end of each calendar quarter, and some data are nevertheless inaccurate or incomplete, the error or omission is not a violation of HMDA or Regulation C, provided that the institution corrects or completes the information prior to submitting the loan/application register to its regulatory agencies. 12 CFR 1003.6(b)(3).

WHO MUST REPORT: HMDA INSTITUTIONAL COVERAGE

The precise criteria for whether an institution is covered by Regulation C are codified in 12 CFR § 1003.2(g). These criteria are illustrated by the following diagrams.

Coverage criteria | Effective January 1, 2018 through December 31, 2019[1]



[1] This chart is effective January 1, 2018 through December 31, 2019. On January 1, 2020 the open-end line of credit threshold will adjust to 100.

[2] Every year, the Bureau announces the size of the asset threshold in the Federal Register. The asset threshold may change from year to year based on changes in the average of the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers.

[3] Some transactions are not HMDA reportable and are excluded from the coverage criteria. For more information, please see § 1003.3(c) of Regulation C.

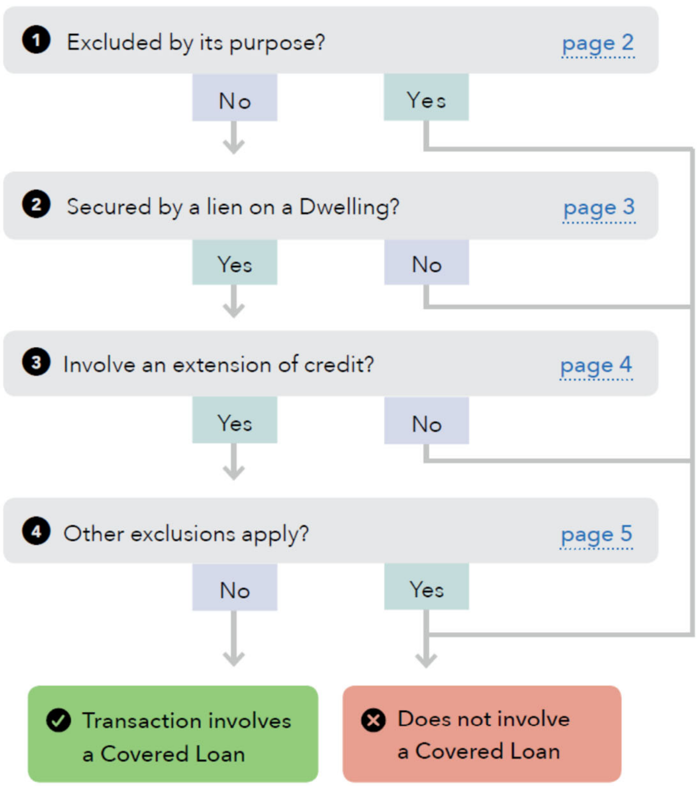
This chart summarizes requirements under HMDA and Regulation C, and does not itself establish any binding obligations. It is intended only to act as a quick reference and not as a substitute for the regulation or its commentary. Always consult the regulation text and official commentary for a complete understanding of the law. Version 2.0, 9/28/2017

HMDA TRANSACTIONAL COVERAGE

Effective January 1, 2018

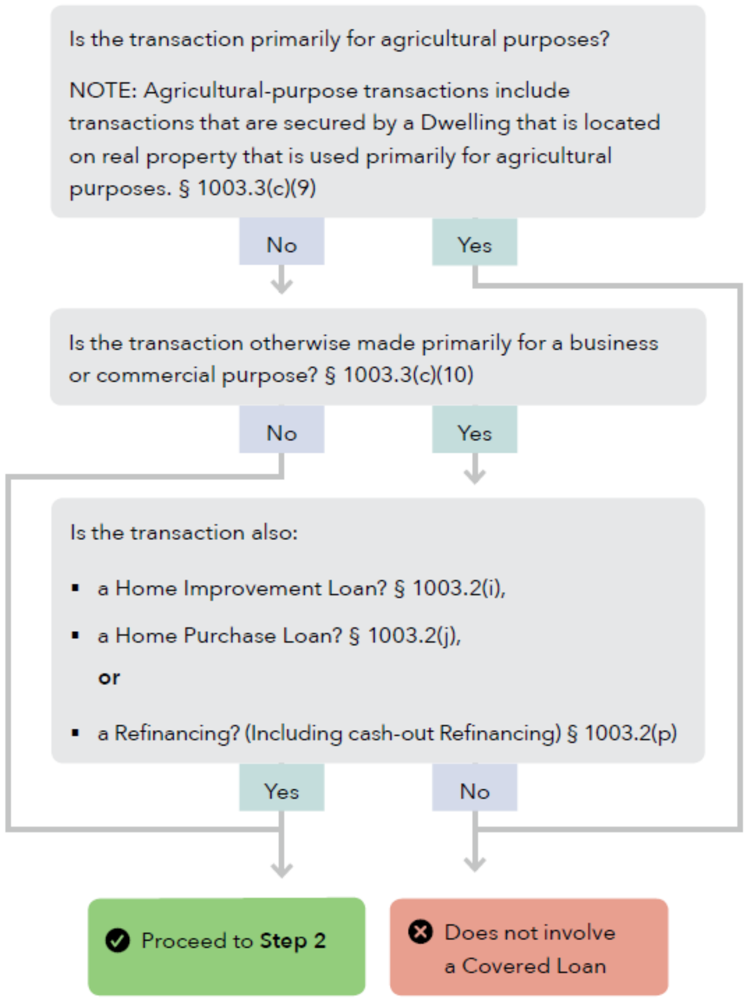
Under HMDA and Regulation C, a transaction is reportable only if it is an Application for, an origination of, or a purchase of a Covered Loan. These materials illustrate one approach to help determine whether a transaction involves a Covered Loan. If the transaction involves a Covered Loan, it is reported only if the institution meets the applicable loan-volume thresholds. Terms that are defined in Regulation C are capitalized in this document for ease of reference. Click on the numbers below to view the instructions for each step.

Does the transaction involve a Covered Loan?

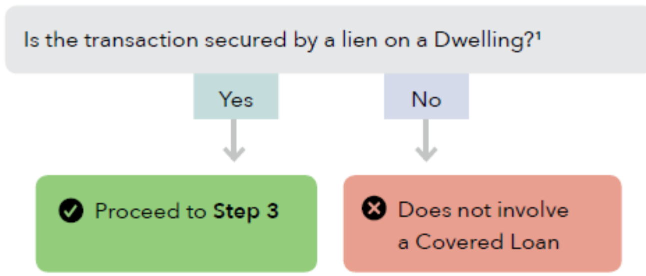


These materials summarize requirements under HMDA and Regulation C and do not themselves establish any binding obligations. They are intended only to act as a reference and not as a substitute for the regulation or its official commentary. Always consult the regulation text and official commentary for a complete understanding of the law. Version 2.0, 9/28/2017

❶ Is the transaction excluded by its purpose?



❷ Is the transaction secured by a lien on a Dwelling?[1]



Use the table below to help determine whether the transaction is secured by a lien on a Dwelling.

Single family structures	Multifamily structures	Mixed-use purposes
Dwelling	Dwelling	Dwelling
▪ Principal residences ▪ Second homes ▪ Vacation homes ▪ Manufactured Homes or other factory built homes ▪ Investment properties ▪ Individual condominium units ▪ Detached homes ▪ Individual cooperative units	▪ Apartment buildings or complexes ▪ Manufactured home communities ▪ Condominium buildings or complexes ▪ Cooperative buildings or complexes	▪ Mixed-use property if primary use is residential ▪ Properties for long-term housing and related services (such as assisted living for senior citizens or supportive housing for people with disabilities) ▪ Properties for long-term housing and medical care if primary use is residential
Not a Dwelling	Not a Dwelling	Not a Dwelling
▪ Transitory residences ▪ Recreational vehicles ▪ Boats ▪ Campers ▪ Travel trailers ▪ Park model RVs ▪ Floating homes ▪ Houseboats ▪ Mobile homes constructed before June 15, 1976	▪ Transitory residences ▪ Hotels ▪ Hospitals and properties used to provide medical care (such as skilled nursing, rehabilitation, or long-term medical care) ▪ College dormitories ▪ Recreational vehicle parks	▪ Mixed-use property if primary use is not residential ▪ Transitory residences ▪ Structures originally designed as Dwellings but used exclusively for commercial purposes ▪ Properties for long-term housing and medical care if primary use is not residential

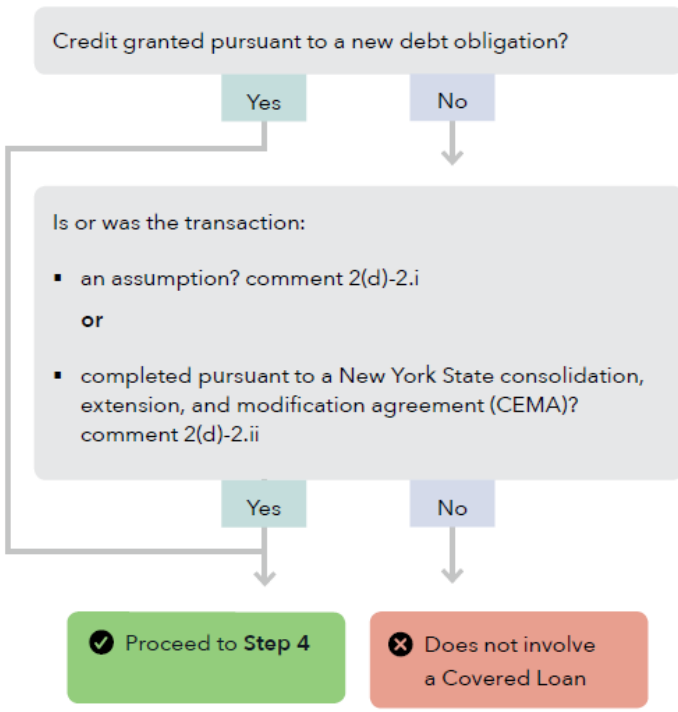
❸ Does the transaction involve an extension of credit?[2]



[2] Generally under Regulation C, an extension of credit refers to the granting of credit only pursuant to a new debt obligation. If the transaction modifies, renews, extends, or amends the terms of an existing debt obligation, but the existing debt obligation is not satisfied and replaced, the transaction is not a new extension of credit, unless it falls within the two exceptions noted above. § 1003.2(d) and (o), and comments 2(d)-2 and 2(o)-2

❹ Do other exclusions apply? § 1003.3(c)(1) through (8) and (c)(13)

Is or was the transaction:

- originated or purchased by the Financial Institution acting in a fiduciary capacity?
- secured by a lien on unimproved land?
- temporary financing?
- the purchase of an interest in a pool of otherwise Covered Loans, such as mortgage-participation certificates, mortgage-backed securities, or real estate mortgage investment conduits?
- the purchase solely of the right to service an otherwise Covered Loan?
- a purchase as part of a merger or acquisition, or as part of the acquisition of all of the assets and liabilities of a branch office?
- for a total dollar amount that is less than $500?
- a purchase of a partial interest in an otherwise Covered Loan?
- to provide new funds in advance of a consolidation agreement completed pursuant to a New York State CEMA where consolidation occurred in the same year as final action on the transaction?

If NO to all of the questions → Transaction involves a Covered Loan

If YES to any of the questions → Does not involve a Covered Loan

Transaction involves a Covered Loan

Regulation C provides different loan-volume reporting thresholds for transactions that involve a Covered Loan depending on whether they involve a Closed-End Mortgage Loan or an Open-End Line of Credit. § 1003.3(c)(11) and (12). Reporting is required if a threshold is met in each of the two preceding calendar years.[3] (See 2018 Institutional Coverage Chart for guidance regarding institutional coverage.)

Closed-End Mortgage Loan § 1003.2(d) | Open-End Line of Credit § 1003.2(o)

- Only originated Covered Loans count toward the loan-volume thresholds. If a threshold is met, the institution reports all Applications for Covered Loans that it receives, Covered Loans that it originates, and Covered Loans that it purchases for that type of transaction (either Closed-End Mortgage Loan or Open-End Line of Credit, or both, if both thresholds are met).
- Covered consumer and business or commercial purpose originations should be counted together when assessing the individual thresholds for Closed-End Mortgage Loans and Open-End Lines of Credit.
- A financial institution may voluntarily report Closed-End Mortgage Loans or Open-End Lines of Credit that are excluded because the financial institution does not meet the transactional threshold for that type of transaction. However, if it chooses to voluntarily report Closed-End Mortgage Loans or Open-End Lines of Credit, the financial institution must report all such transactions that would otherwise be covered loans for that calendar year.

[3] The threshold for open-end lines of credit is set at 500 for calendar years 2018 and 2019. See the Bureau's August 2017 Final Rule for more information about the temporary threshold increase for open-end lines of credit, available at consumerfinance.gov/policy-compliance/rulemaking/final-rules/regulation-c-home-mortgage-disclosure-act.

Merger or Acquisition Activity

If recent merger or acquisition activity has occurred, determine whether the surviving or newly formed institution meets the definition of financial institution in 12 CFR 1003.2(g). After a merger or acquisition, the surviving or newly formed institution is a financial institution according to 12 CFR 1003.2(g) if it, considering the combined assets, location, and lending activity of the surviving or newly formed institution and the merged or acquired institutions or acquired branches, satisfies the criteria included in 12 CFR 1003.2(g). For examples of institutional coverage by Regulation C after merger or acquisition activity, please see Official Interpretations, Supplement I to 12 CFR Part 1003, Comment 2(g)-3.

B. Transactional Coverage

Determine whether a transaction is subject to Regulation C because it:

1. Meets the definition of a covered loan as defined in 12 CFR 1003.2(e), and
2. Is not an excluded transaction as defined in 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1)–(13).

[Click&type]

Covered Loans

Institutions that meet the definition of financial institution according to 12 CFR 1003.2(g) must report data on transactions that meet the definition of a covered loan in 12 CFR 1003.2(e). Types of transactions enumerated in 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1)–(13) are explicitly excluded from Regulation C reporting requirements.

1. Covered Loan. Determine whether the transaction meets the definition of covered loan according to 12 CFR 1003.2(e) and should be reported under Regulation C. A covered loan is a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit that is not a transaction specifically excluded from the reporting requirements of the regulation.

    a. Determine whether the transaction is a closed-end mortgage loan as defined in 12 CFR 1003.2(d). A closed-end mortgage loan is:

        i. An extension of credit;

        ii. Secured by a lien on a dwelling; and

        iii. Is not an open-end line of credit, as defined by 12 CFR 1003.2(o).

b. Determine whether the transaction is an open-end line of credit as defined in 12 CFR 1003.2(o). An open-end line of credit is:

i. An extension of credit;

ii. Secured by a lien on a dwelling; and

iii. Is an open-end credit plan as defined in Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(20), but without regard to whether the credit is consumer credit, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(12), is extended by a creditor as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(17), or is extended to a consumer as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11).

[Click&type]

2. Note: Further, a covered loan secured by five or more separate dwellings, which are not multifamily dwellings, in more than one location is not a loan secured by a multifamily dwelling. For example, assume a landlord uses a covered loan to improve five or more dwellings, each with one individual dwelling unit, located in different parts of a town, and the loan is secured by those properties. The covered loan is not secured by a multifamily dwelling as defined by Section 1003.2(n). Likewise, a covered loan secured by five or more separate dwellings that are located within a multifamily dwelling, but which is not secured by the entire multifamily dwelling (e.g., an entire apartment building or housing complex), is not secured by a multifamily dwelling as defined by Section 1003.2(n). For example, assume that an investor purchases 10 individual unit condominiums in a 100-unit condominium complex using a covered loan. The covered loan would not be secured by a multifamily dwelling as defined by Section 1003.2(n). Comment 2(n)-3.

3. Excluded Transactions. Determine whether the type of transaction is listed as an excluded transaction in 12 CFR 1003.3(c). The following transactions are not required to be reported under Regulation C:

a. A closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit originated or purchased by a financial institution acting in a fiduciary capacity (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1));

b. A closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit secured by a lien on unimproved land (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(2));

c. Temporary financing (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(3));

d. The purchase of an interest in a pool of closed-end mortgage loans or open-end lines of credit (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(4));

e. The purchase solely of the right to service closed-end mortgage loans or open-end lines of credit (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(5));

f. The purchase of closed-end mortgage loans or open-end lines of credit as part of a merger or acquisition, or as part of the acquisition of all of the assets and liabilities of a branch office as defined in 12 CFR 1003.2(c) (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(6));

g. A closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit, or an application for a closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit, for which the total dollar amount is less than $500 (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(7));

h. The purchase of a partial interest in a closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(8));

i. A closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit that is or will be used primarily for agricultural purposes (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(9));

j. A closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit that is or will be made primarily for a business or commercial purpose, unless the closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit is a home improvement loan under 12 CFR 1003.2(i), a home purchase loan under 12 CFR 1003.2(j), or a refinancing under 12 CFR 1003.2(p) (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(10));

k. Exclusions based on a financial institution's loan-volume:

    i. An institution that originated fewer than 25 closed-end mortgage loans in either of the two proceeding calendar years is not required to report closed-end mortgage loans (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11)).

    ii. Effective January 1, 2018, and through December 31, 2019, an institution that originated fewer than 500 open-end lines of credit in either of the two preceding calendar years, and effective January 1, 2020, an institution that originated fewer than 100 open-end lines of credit in either of the two preceding calendar years, is not required to report open-end lines of credit, (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(12)).

l. A transaction that provided or, in the case of an application, proposed to provide new funds to the applicant or borrower in advance of being consolidated in a New York State consolidation, extension, and modification agreement (as before, New York CEMA) classified as a supplemental mortgage under New York Tax Law section 255, where final action was taken on the consolidation and the new funds transaction in the same calendar year. (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(13)).

Disclosure and Reporting – 12 CFR 1003.5

1. Determine whether the financial institution satisfies requirements related to disclosure and reporting:

   a. Reporting to agency. Determine whether the financial institution submits its HMDA LAR to the appropriate Federal agency no later than March 1 following the calendar year for which the data are compiled. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(i).

   b. HMDA LAR retention. Determine whether the financial institution retained a copy of its submitted annual HMDA LAR for at least three years. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(i).

   c. Disclosure statement. Determine whether no later than three business days after the financial institution receives notice from the FFIEC that the financial institution's disclosure statement is available the financial institution makes available to the public upon request at its home office, and each branch office physically located in each MSA and each MD, a written notice that clearly conveys that the financial institution's disclosure statement may be obtained on the Bureau's website at www.consumerfinance.gov/hmda. 12 CFR 1003.5(b)(2). A financial institution's disclosure statement may also be obtained from https://ffiec.cfpb.gov.

   d. Modified HMDA LAR. Determine whether the financial institution makes available to the public upon request at its home office, and each branch office physically located in each MSA and each MD, a written notice that clearly conveys that the financial institution's HMDA LAR, as modified by the Bureau to protect applicant and borrower privacy, may be obtained on the Bureau's website at www.consumerfinance.gov/hmda. 12 CFR 1003.5(c). A financial institution's modified HMDA LAR may also be obtained from ffiec.cfpb.gov.

   e. Posted notice of availability of data. Determine whether the financial institution posts a general notice about the availability of its HMDA data in the lobby of its home office and of each branch office located in each MSA and each MD. This notice must clearly convey that the financial institution's HMDA data is available on the Bureau's website at www.consumerfinance.gov/hmda. 12 CFR 1003.5(e). A financial institution's HMDA data is also available at ffiec.cfpb.gov.

If the financial institution is a bank or savings association and has a subsidiary covered by HMDA, determine whether the subsidiary completed a separate HMDA LAR and either submitted it directly or through its parent to the appropriate Federal agency for the parent. For this purpose, a financial institution is a subsidiary of a bank or savings association if the bank or savings association holds or controls an ownership interest of greater than 50 percent in the financial institution. (12 CFR 1003.5(a)(2), Comment 5(a)-6).

Transaction Testing

1. To conduct HMDA transaction testing, examiners select a random sample of entries from the financial institution's HMDA LAR (Total Sample) and ask the financial institution to provide the loan or application files (loan files) that correspond to the HMDA LAR sample entries. The size of the Total Sample will depend on the size of the financial institution's HMDA LAR, as shown in column A of the "HMDA Transaction Testing Sample Sizes and Thresholds" table (HMDA table) on page 10 of the procedures.

[Click&type]

2. If a financial institution's HMDA data are collected through multiple data collection and reporting systems, examiners may test a single sample from the financial institution's entire HMDA LAR, test separate samples from each system, or test samples from selected systems chosen based on risk. If examiners do not take a single sample from the entire HMDA LAR, they should document in their work papers from which system(s) they chose the sample(s) and why.

[Click&type]

3. Once examiners receive the loan files from the financial institution, they should verify the accuracy of the data in the entries in the HMDA LAR sample(s) against the corresponding loan files. Examiners should document in their work papers any differences between the data in the HMDA LAR and information in files, and determine whether the differences may be explained by any additional information that the financial institution may provide. Differences that are not adequately explained should be identified as errors.

[Click&type]

4. All data fields within the sample may be reviewed, or the supervisory agency may prioritize designated fields for review.

[Click&type]

5. HMDA transaction testing can be divided into two stages. Both stages test for errors only in individual data fields that are selected for review as provided above in paragraph 4. In Stage 1, examiners review only a subset of the sample (Initial Sample). The size of the Initial Sample will depend on the size of the financial institution's HMDA LAR, as shown in column B of the HMDA table. If the number of errors identified in the Initial Sample falls below the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table for each and every data field reviewed, no further sample review is required and the examiners may conclude the transaction testing. If the number of errors in any data field reviewed equals or exceeds the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table, examiners should proceed to Stage 2 and review the remainder of the Total Sample. In Stage 2, examiners must review all data fields that had one or more errors in the Initial Sample and may review any or all Initial Sample data fields reviewed and found to have no errors in Stage 1.

[Click&type]

6. If, after reviewing the remainder of the Total Sample in Stage 2, the total number of errors in any data field equals or exceeds the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table, examiners should direct the financial institution to correct any such data field in its full HMDA LAR and resubmit its HMDA LAR with the corrected data field(s).

[Click&type]

7. A financial institution may also be directed to correct one or more individual data fields and resubmit its HMDA LAR, even if errors in that field or fields do not meet the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table, if examiners have a reasonable basis to believe that errors in that field or fields will likely make analysis of the HMDA data unreliable. To illustrate, assume examiners discover that a financial institution has incorrectly coded withdrawn applications as denials to such an extent that it likely prevents reliable analysis of underwriting disparities in a fair lending examination. Examiners may direct a financial institution to correct the Action Taken data field and resubmit the HMDA LAR even if the number of Action Taken errors found in the Total Sample does not equal or exceed the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table.

[Click&type]

8. A financial institution may be directed to resubmit its HMDA LAR in order to include reportable applications or loans that examiners determined were previously omitted from the HMDA LAR.

[Click&type]

Tolerances

9. For the sole purpose of determining whether the number of errors equals or exceeds the Initial Sample Threshold in column C or the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table, examiners should not count the following differences between data in the HMDA LAR and in the loan files as errors:

   - Three calendar days or less in the date the application was received or the date shown on the application form reported pursuant to 12 CFR 1003.4(a)(1)(ii);
   - One thousand dollars or less in the amount of the covered loan or the amount applied for, as applicable, reported pursuant to 12 CFR 1003.4(a)(7);
   - Three calendar days or less in the date of the action taken by the financial institution reported pursuant to 12 CFR 1003.4(a)(8)(ii), provided that such differences do not result in reporting data for the wrong calendar year; and
   - Rounding errors in reporting the dollar amount, rounded to the nearest thousand, of the gross annual income relied on in making the credit decision or, if a credit decision was not made, the gross annual income relied on in processing the application, reported pursuant to 12 CFR 1003.4(a)(10)(iii).

To illustrate, if a loan file indicates June 4 as the application date, a HMDA LAR application date of June 1 or June 7 would not be counted as an error because it is within three calendar days of June 4, but a HMDA LAR application date of May 31 or June 8 would be counted as an error because it is more than three calendar days from June 4.

Ethnicity or Race Data Errors

10. For purposes of these guidelines, the term "data field" generally refers to individual HMDA Filing Instructions Guide (FIG) fields, each identified by a distinct Data Field Number and Data Field Name. With respect to information on the ethnicity or race of an applicant or borrower, or co-applicant or co-borrower, however, a data field consists of a group of FIG fields as follows:

- The Ethnicity of Applicant or Borrower data field group: comprised of six FIG fields with information on an applicant's or borrower's ethnicity (FIG Data Field Numbers 19-24);
- The Ethnicity of Co-Applicant or Co-Borrower data field group: comprised of six FIG fields with information on a co-applicant's or co-borrower's ethnicity (FIG Data Field Numbers 25-30);
- The Race of Applicant or Borrower data field group: comprised of eight FIG fields with information on an applicant's or borrower's race (FIG Data Field Numbers 33-40); and
- The Race of Co-Applicant or Co-Borrower data field group: comprised of eight FIG fields with information on a co-applicant's or co-borrower's race (FIG Data Field Numbers 41-48).[21]

To illustrate, for an applicant who indicates "Hispanic or Latino" and "Mexican" in response to the question of ethnicity, a financial institution reports the information in two FIG fields, for example, Ethnicity of Applicant or Borrower: 1 (1: Hispanic or Latino) and Ethnicity of Applicant or Borrower: 2 (11: Mexican). If one or more of the six Ethnicity of Applicant or Borrower FIG fields have errors, they would count as one (and only one) error for that data field group. If the Ethnicity of Applicant or Borrower data field group has errors in the Total Sample that meet or exceed the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table, examiners should direct the financial institution to correct the six Ethnicity of Applicant or [21] Data fields indicating whether ethnicity or race information was collected on the basis of visual observation or surname (FIG Data Field Numbers 31, 32, 49, and 50) are not included in any data group enumerated in paragraph 10 and are treated as individual data fields for purposes of these guidelines.

Borrower FIG fields and resubmit its HMDA LAR with those FIG fields corrected. See example 4 on page 12 of the procedures.[22]

Prospective Changes

11. Examiners may direct the financial institution to make any appropriate changes in its policies, procedures, audit processes, or other aspects of its compliance management system needed to prevent the reoccurrence of errors identified within the sample that are—absent such changes—capable of repetition, even if the number of errors does not equal or exceed either the Initial Sample Threshold in column C or the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table, or even if the errors fall within the tolerances provided in paragraph 9.

HMDA Transaction Testing Sample Sizes and Thresholds

HMDA LAR count	A Total Sample size	B Initial Sample size	C Initial Sample Threshold	D Resubmission Threshold
				#	%
25–50	30*	15	2	3	10.0*
51–100	30	20	2	3	10.0
101–130	47	29	2	3	6.4
131–190	56	29	2	3	5.4
191–500	59	30	2	3	5.1
501–100,000	79	35	2	4	5.1
100,001+	159	61	2	4	2.5

*For financial institutions with fewer than 30 HMDA LAR lines, the full sample size is the financial institution’s total number of HMDA LAR lines. The Resubmission Threshold number remains at 3. Accordingly, the [22] Example 4 describes analogous error rates and corrective actions for the race field.

Resubmission Threshold percentage will be higher for financial institutions with fewer than 30 HMDA LAR lines.

Examples

1. Financial Institution A's HMDA LAR contains 35 entries. Examiners select a Total Sample of 30 loans as shown in column A of the HMDA table.

   - Examiners test the Initial Sample of 15 as shown in column B of the HMDA table and find two errors in the Action Taken data field, which equals the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table.

   - Accordingly, the examiners proceed to review the remaining 15 entries in the Total Sample and find one additional error in the Action Taken data field for a total of three errors in that field, which equals the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table. In the review of the remaining entries in the Total Sample, examiners also find two errors in the Rate Spread data field, which is below the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table.

   - Therefore, Financial Institution A is directed to correct the Action Taken data field and resubmit its HMDA LAR with that field corrected.

2. Financial Institution B's HMDA LAR contains 125 entries. Examiners select a Total Sample of 47 loans as shown in column A of the HMDA table.

   - Examiners test the Initial Sample of 29 loans as shown in column B of the HMDA table and find one error in the Action Taken data field, which is less than the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table; one error in the Loan Type data field, which is less than the Initial Sample Threshold; and no other errors.

   - Therefore, examiners end the HMDA transaction testing for Financial Institution B and do not proceed to Stage 2 testing of the 18 remaining entries in the Total Sample because no Stage 1 errors in any single data field equaled or exceeded the Initial Sample Threshold.

3. Financial Institution C's HMDA LAR contains 500,000 entries. Examiners select a Total Sample of 159 loans as shown in column A of the HMDA table.

   - Examiners test the Initial Sample of 61 loans as shown in column B of the HMDA table and find two errors in the Action Taken data field, which equals the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table; and five errors in the Loan Amount data field, which exceeds the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table.

   - Accordingly, examiners proceed to test the remaining 98 entries in the Total Sample and find two additional errors in the Action Taken data field, for a total of four errors in that field, which equals the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table; five additional errors in the Loan Amount data field, for a total of ten errors in that field, which exceeds the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table; and four errors in the Census Tract data field, which equals the Resubmission Threshold in column

D of the HMDA table.

- Therefore, Financial Institution C is directed to correct the Action Taken data field, the Loan Amount data field, and the Census Tract data field and resubmit its HMDA LAR with those fields corrected.

4. Financial Institution D's HMDA LAR contains 1,000 entries. Examiners select a Total Sample of 79 loans as shown in column A of the HMDA table.

   - Examiners test the Initial Sample of 35 loans as shown in column B of the HMDA table and find one loan with an error in the FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 1 field, and a different loan with an error in the FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 2 field, for a total of two errors in the Race of Applicant or Borrower data field group, which equals the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table.

   - Accordingly, the examiners proceed to test the remaining 44 entries in the Total Sample and find one loan with an error in the FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 2 field, and one loan with errors in both the FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 1 field and the FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 2 field, for a total of four loans with at least one error in one of the eight Race of Applicant or Borrower FIG fields, which equals the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table.

   - Therefore, Financial Institution D is directed to correct all eight FIG fields in the Race of Applicant or Borrower data field group and resubmit its HMDA LAR with those FIG fields corrected.

   - The following table summarizes how the errors in this example are counted toward the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table:

Example: Calculating Error Rates for Applicant or Borrower Race

	FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 1 field	FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 2 field	Race of Applicant or Borrower data field group
Loan #1	Error (Initial Sample)		1
Loan #2		Error (Initial Sample)	1
Loan #3		Error (Remaining Sample)	1
Loan #4	Error (Remaining Sample)	Error (Remaining Sample)	1
Total errors			4

Please note that HMDA is a data collection, reporting, and disclosure statute. Accordingly, HMDA compliance examinations are focused on the validation of an institution's HMDA data through transaction testing and ordinarily do not evaluate consumer harm or review consumer complaints.

Homeowners Protection Act (PMI Cancellation Act)[1]

The Homeowners Protection Act of 1998 (HPA or PMI Cancellation Act, or Act) was signed into law on July 29, 1998, became effective on July 29, 1999, and was later amended on December 27, 2000, to provide technical corrections and clarification. The "PMI Cancellation Act" addresses homeowners' difficulties in canceling private mortgage insurance (PMI)[2] coverage. It establishes provisions for canceling and terminating PMI, sets disclosure and notification requirements, and requires the return of unearned premiums.

The Dodd-Frank Act granted authority to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau to supervise for and enforce compliance with the Homeowners Protection Act with respect to entities within its jurisdiction.[3]

PMI is insurance that protects lenders from the risk of default and foreclosure. PMI allows prospective buyers who cannot, or choose not to, provide significant down payments to obtain mortgage financing at affordable rates. It is used extensively to facilitate "high-ratio" loans (generally, loans in which the loan to value (LTV) ratio exceeds 80 percent). With PMI, the lender can recover costs associated with the resale of foreclosed property, and accrued interest payments or fixed costs, such as taxes or insurance policies, paid prior to resale.

Excessive PMI coverage provides little extra protection for a lender and does not benefit the borrower. In some instances, homeowners have experienced problems in canceling PMI. At other times, lenders may have agreed to terminate coverage when the borrower's equity reached 20 percent, but the policies and procedures used for canceling or terminating PMI coverage varied widely among lenders. Prior to the Act, homeowners had limited recourse when lenders refused to cancel their PMI coverage. Even homeowners in the few states that had laws pertaining to PMI cancellation or termination noted difficulties in canceling or terminating their PMI policies. The Act now protects homeowners by prohibiting life of loan PMI coverage for borrower-paid PMI products and establishing uniform procedures for the cancellation and termination of PMI policies.

Scope and Effective Date

The Act applies primarily to "residential mortgage transactions," defined as mortgage loan transactions consummated on or after July 29, 1999, to finance the acquisition, initial

[1] These reflect FFIEC-approved procedures.

[2] The HPA does not apply to mortgage insurance made available under the National Housing Act, title 38 of the United States Code, or title V of the Housing Act of 1949. This includes mortgage insurance on loans made by the Federal Housing Administration and guarantees on mortgage loans made by the Veterans Administration.

[3] Dodd-Frank Act, Secs. 1002(12)(G), 1024(b)-(c), and 1025(b)-(c); 12 U.S.C. Secs. 5481(12)(G), 5514(c), and 5515(c).

construction or refinancing[4] of a single-family dwelling that serves as a borrower's principal residence.[5] The Act also includes provisions for annual written disclosures for "residential mortgages," defined as mortgages, loans or other evidences of a security interest created for a single-family dwelling that is the principal residence of the borrower (12 U.S.C. 4901(14) and (15)). A condominium, townhouse, cooperative or mobile home is considered to be a single-family dwelling covered by the Act.

The Act's requirements vary depending on whether a mortgage is:

- A "residential mortgage" or a "residential mortgage transaction;"
- Defined as high risk (either by the lender in the case of nonconforming loans, or Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac in the case of conforming loans);
- Financed under a fixed rate or an adjustable rate; or
- Covered by borrower-paid private mortgage insurance (BPMI) or lender-paid private mortgage insurance (LPMI).[6]

Cancellation and Termination of PMI for Non-High Risk Residential Mortgage Transactions

Borrower Requested Cancellation

A borrower may initiate cancellation of PMI coverage by submitting a written request to the servicer. The servicer must take action to cancel PMI when the cancellation date occurs, which is when the principal balance of the loan reaches (based on actual payments) or is first scheduled to reach 80 percent of the "original value,"[7] irrespective of the outstanding balance, based upon the initial amortization schedule (in the case of a fixed rate loan) or amortization schedule then in effect (in the case of an adjustable rate loan),[8] or any date thereafter that:

[4] For purposes of these procedures, "refinancing" means the refinancing of loans any portion of which was to provide financing for the acquisition or initial construction of a single-family dwelling that serves as a borrower's principal residence. See 15 U.SC. 1601 et. seq. and 12 CFR 1026.20.

[5] For purposes of these procedures, junior mortgages that provide financing for the acquisition, initial construction or refinancing of a single-family dwelling that serves as a borrower's primary residence are covered.

[6] All sections of these procedures and manual apply to BPMI. For LPMI, relevant sections begin under the heading that follows thereafter.

[7] "Original value" is defined as the lesser of the sales price of the secured property as reflected in the purchase contract or, the appraised value at the time of loan consummation. In the case of a refinancing, the term means the appraised value relied upon by the lender to approve the refinance transaction.

[8] The HPA includes as an adjustable rate mortgage, a balloon loan that "contains a conditional right to refinance or modify the unamortized principal at the maturity date." Therefore, if a balloon loan contains a conditional right to refinance, the initial disclosure for an adjustable rate mortgage would be used even if the interest rate is fixed.

- The borrower submits a written cancellation request;
- The borrower has a good payment history;[9]
- The borrower is current;[10] and
- The borrower satisfies any requirement of the mortgage holder for: (i) evidence of a type established in advance that the value of the property has not declined below the original value; and (ii) certification that the borrower's equity in the property is not subject to a subordinate lien (12 U.S.C. 4902(a)(4)).

Once PMI is canceled, the servicer may not require further PMI payments or premiums more than 30 days after the later of:

(i) the date on which the written request was received, or

(ii) the date on which the borrower satisfied the evidence and certification requirements of the mortgage holder described previously (12 U.S.C. 4902(e)(1)).

Automatic Termination

The Act requires a servicer to automatically terminate PMI for residential mortgage transactions on the date that:

- The principal balance of the mortgage is first scheduled to reach 78 percent of the original value of the secured property (based solely on the initial amortization schedule in the case of a fixed rate loan or on the amortization schedule then in effect in the case of an adjustable rate loan, irrespective of the outstanding balance) if the borrower is current; or
- If the borrower is not current on that date, on the first day of the first month following the date that the borrower becomes current (12 U.S.C. 4902(b)).

If PMI is terminated, the servicer may not require further payments or premiums of PMI more than 30 days after the termination date or the date following the termination date on which the borrower becomes current on the payments, whichever is sooner (12 U.S.C. 4902(e)(2)).

There is no provision in the automatic termination section of the Act, as there is with the borrower- requested PMI cancellation section that protects the lender against declines in property value or subordinate liens. The automatic termination provisions make no reference to good payment history (as prescribed in the borrower-requested provisions), but state only that the borrower must be current on mortgage payments (12 U.S.C. 4902(b)).

[9] A borrower has a good payment history if the borrower: (1) has not made a payment that was 60 days or more past due within the first 12 months of the last two years prior to the later of the cancellation date, or the date that the borrower request cancellation; or (2) has not made a payment that was 30 days or more past due within the 12 months prior to the later of the cancellation date or the date that the borrower requests cancellation.

[10] The HPA does not define "current."

Final Termination

If PMI coverage on a residential mortgage transaction was not canceled at the borrower's request or by the automatic termination provision, the servicer must terminate PMI coverage by the first day of the month immediately following the date that is the midpoint of the loan's amortization period if, on that date, the borrower is current on the payments required by the terms of the mortgage. (If the borrower is not current on that date, PMI should be terminated when the borrower does become current.)

The midpoint of the amortization period is halfway through the period between the first day of the amortization period established at consummation and ending when the mortgage is scheduled to be amortized. The servicer may not require further payments or premiums of PMI more than 30 days after PMI is terminated (12 U.S.C. 4902(e)(3)).

Loan Modifications

If a borrower and mortgage holder agree to modify the terms and conditions of a loan pursuant to a residential mortgage transaction, the cancellation, termination or final termination dates shall be recalculated to reflect the modification (12 U.S.C. 4902(d)).

Exclusions

The Act's cancellation and termination provisions do not apply to residential mortgage transactions for which Lender Paid Mortgage Insurance (LPMI) is required (12 U.S.C. 4905(b)).

Return of Unearned Premiums

The servicer must return all unearned PMI premiums to the borrower within 45 days after cancellation or termination of PMI coverage. Within 30 days after notification by the servicer of cancellation or termination of PMI coverage, a mortgage insurer must return to the servicer any amount of unearned premiums it is holding to permit the servicer to return such premiums to the borrower (12 U.S.C. 4902(f)).

Accrued Obligations for Premium Payments

The cancellation or termination of PMI does not affect the rights of any lender, servicer or mortgage insurer to enforce any obligation of a borrower for payments of premiums that accrued before the cancellation or termination occurred (12 U.S.C. 4902 (h)).

Exceptions to Cancellation and Termination Provisions for High Risk Residential Mortgage Transactions

The borrower-requested cancellation at 80 percent LTV and the automatic termination at 78 percent LTV requirements of the Act do not apply to "high risk" loans. However, high risk loans are subject to final termination and are divided into two categories – conforming (Fannie Mae/Freddie Mac-defined high-risk loans) and nonconforming (lender-defined high-risk loans) (12 U.S.C. 4902(g)(1)).

Conforming Loans (Fannie Mae / Freddie Mac-Defined High Risk Loans)

Conforming loans are those loans with an original principal balance not exceeding Freddie Mac's and Fannie Mae's conforming loan limits.[11] Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are authorized under the Act to establish a category of residential mortgage transactions that are not subject to the Act's requirements for borrower-requested cancellation or automatic termination, because of the high risk associated with them.[12] They are, however, subject to the final termination provision of the Act. As such, PMI on a conforming high risk loan must be terminated by the first day of the month following the date that is the midpoint of the loan's initial amortization schedule (in the case of a fixed rate loan) or amortization schedule then in effect (in the case of an adjustable rate loan) if, on that date, the borrower is current on the loan. (If the borrower is not current on that date, PMI should be terminated when the borrower does become current.)

Nonconforming Loans (Lender-Defined High Risk Loans)

Nonconforming loans are those residential mortgage transactions that have an original principal balance exceeding Freddie Mac's and Fannie Mae's conforming loan limits. Lender-defined high risk loans are not subject to the Act's requirements for borrower-requested cancellation or automatic termination. However, if a residential mortgage transaction is a lender-defined high risk loan, PMI must be terminated on the date on which the principal balance of the mortgage, based solely on the initial amortization schedule (in the case of a fixed rate loan) or the amortization schedule then in effect (in the case of an adjustable rate loan) for that mortgage and irrespective of the outstanding balance for that mortgage on that date, is first scheduled to reach 77 percent of the original value of the property securing the loan.

Like conforming loans that are determined to be high risk by Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae, a residential mortgage transaction that is a lender-defined high risk loan is subject to the final termination provision of the Act.

Notices

The lender must provide written initial disclosures at consummation for all high-risk residential mortgage transactions (as defined by the lender or Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac), that in no case will PMI be required beyond the midpoint of the amortization period of the loan, if the loan is current. The Act does not require a more specific notice as to the 77 percent LTV termination standards for lender defined high-risk loans.

[11] The limit was $322,700 in 2003.

[12] Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have not defined high-risk loans as of the date of this publication.

Basic Disclosure and Notice Requirements Applicable to Residential Mortgage Transactions and Residential Mortgages

The Act requires the lender in a residential mortgage transaction to provide to the borrower, at the time of consummation, certain disclosures that describe the borrower's rights for PMI cancellation and termination. A borrower may not be charged for any disclosure required by the Act. Initial disclosures vary, based upon whether the transaction is a fixed rate mortgage, adjustable rate mortgage or high-risk loan. The Act also requires that the borrower be provided with certain annual and other notices concerning PMI cancellation and termination. Residential mortgages are subject to certain annual disclosure requirements.

Initial Disclosures for Fixed Rate Residential Mortgage Transactions

When PMI is required for non-high risk fixed rate mortgages, the lender must provide to the borrower at the time the transaction is consummated: (i) a written initial amortization schedule, and (ii) a written notice that discloses:

- The borrower's right to request cancellation of PMI, and, based on the initial amortization schedule, the date the loan balance is scheduled to reach 80 percent of the original value of the property;
- The borrower's right to request cancellation on an earlier date, if actual payments bring the loan balance to 80 percent of the original value of the property sooner than the date based on the initial amortization schedule;
- That PMI will automatically terminate when the LTV ratio reaches 78 percent of the original value of the property and the specific date that is projected to occur (based on the initial amortization schedule); and
- The Act provides for exemptions to the cancellation and automatic termination provisions for high-risk mortgages and whether these exemptions apply to the borrower's loan (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(A)).

Initial Disclosures for Adjustable Rate Residential Mortgage Transactions

When PMI is required for non-high risk adjustable rate mortgages, the lender must provide to the borrower, at the time the transaction is consummated, a written notice that discloses:

- The borrower's right to request cancellation of PMI on:

  (i) the date the loan balance is first scheduled to reach 80 percent of the original value of the property based on the amortization schedule then in effect, or

(ii) the date the balance actually reaches 80 percent of the original value of the property based on actual payments.

The notice must also state that the servicer will notify the borrower when either (i) or (ii) occurs;

- That PMI will automatically terminate when the loan balance is first scheduled to reach 78 percent of the original value of the property based on the amortization schedule then in effect. The notice must also state that the borrower will be notified when PMI is terminated (or that termination will occur when the borrower becomes current on payments); and

- That there are exemptions to the cancellation and automatic termination provisions for high risk mortgages and whether such exemptions apply to the borrower's loan (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(B)).

Initial Disclosures for High Risk Residential Mortgage Transactions

When PMI is required for high risk residential mortgage transactions, the lender must provide to the borrower a written notice stating that PMI will not be required beyond the date that is the midpoint of the loan's amortization period if, on that date, the borrower is current on the payments as required by the terms of the loan. The lender must provide this notice at consummation. The lender need not provide disclosure of the termination at 77 percent LTV for lender-defined high-risk mortgages (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(2)).

Annual Disclosures for Residential Mortgage Transactions

For all residential mortgage transactions, including high risk mortgages for which PMI is required, the servicer must provide the borrower with an annual written statement that sets forth the rights of the borrower to PMI cancellation and termination and the address and telephone number that the borrower may use to contact the servicer to determine whether the borrower may cancel PMI (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(3)).

Disclosures for Existing Residential Mortgages

When PMI was required for a residential mortgage consummated before July 29, 1999, the servicer must provide to the borrower an annual written statement that:

- States that PMI may be canceled with the consent of the lender or in accordance with state law; and

- Provides the servicer's address and telephone number, so that the borrower may contact the servicer to determine whether the borrower may cancel PMI (12 U.S.C. 4903(b)).

Notification Upon Cancellation or Termination of PMI Relating to Residential Mortgage Transactions

General

The servicer must, not later than 30 days after PMI relating to a residential mortgage transaction is cancelled or terminated, notify the borrower in writing that:[13]

- PMI has terminated and the borrower no longer has PMI; and
- No further premiums, payments, or other fees are due or payable by the borrower in connection with PMI (12 U.S.C. 4904(a)).

Notice of Grounds/Timing

If a servicer determines that a borrower in a residential mortgage transaction does not qualify for PMI cancellation or automatic termination, the servicer must provide the borrower with a written notice of the grounds relied on for that determination. If an appraisal was used in making the determination, the servicer must give the appraisal results to the borrower. If a borrower does not qualify for cancellation, the notice must be provided not later than 30 days following the later of:

(i) the date the borrower's request for cancellation is received; or

(ii) the date on which the borrower satisfies any evidence and certification requirements of the mortgage holder. If the borrower does not meet the requirements for automatic termination, the notice must be provided not later than 30 days following the scheduled termination date (12 U.S.C. 4904(b)).

Disclosure Requirements for Lender-Paid Mortgage Insurance

Definitions

Borrower paid mortgage insurance (BPMI) means PMI that is required for a residential mortgage transaction, the payments for which are made by the borrower.

Lender-paid mortgage insurance (LPMI) means PMI that is required for a residential mortgage transaction, the payments for which are made by a person other than the borrower.

[13] For adjustable rate mortgages, the initial notice to borrowers must state that the servicer will notify the borrower when the cancellation and automatic termination dates are reached (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(B)). Servicers should take care that the appropriate notices are made to borrowers when those dates are reached.

Loan commitment means a prospective lender's written confirmation of its approval, including any applicable closing conditions, of the application of a prospective borrower for a residential mortgage loan (12 U.S.C. 4905(a)).

Initial Notice

In the case of LPMI required for a residential mortgage transaction, the Act requires that the lender provide a written notice to the borrower not later than the date on which a loan commitment is made. The written notice must advise the borrower of the differences between LPMI and BPMI by notifying the borrower that LPMI:

- Differs from BPMI because it cannot be cancelled by the borrower or automatically terminated as provided under the Act;
- Usually results in a mortgage having a higher interest rate than it would in the case of BPMI; and
- Terminates only when the mortgage is refinanced, (as that term is defined in the Truth in Lending Act, 15 U.S.C. 1601 et seq., and Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.20), paid off, or otherwise terminated.

The notice must also provide:

- That LPMI and BPMI have both benefits and disadvantages;
- A generic analysis of the costs and benefits of a mortgage in the case of LPMI versus BPMI over a 10-year period, assuming prevailing interest and property appreciation rates; and
- That LPMI may be tax-deductible for federal income taxes, if the borrower itemizes expenses for that purpose (12 U.S.C. 4905(c)(1)).

Notice at Termination Date

Not later than 30 days after the termination date that would apply in the case of BPMI, the servicer shall provide to the borrower a written notice indicating that the borrower may wish to review financing options that could eliminate the requirement for LPMI in connection with the mortgage (12 U.S.C. 4905(c)(2)).

Fees for Disclosures

As stated previously, no fee or other cost may be imposed on a borrower for the disclosures or notifications required to be given to a borrower by lenders or servicers under the Act (12 U.S.C. 4906).

Civil Liability

Liability Dependent upon Type of Action

Servicers, lenders, and mortgage insurers that violate the Act are liable to borrowers as follows:

- Individual Action

  In the case of individual borrowers:

  (i) Actual damages (including interest accruing on such damages);

  (ii) Statutory damages not to exceed $2,000;

  (iii) Costs of the action; and

  (iv) Reasonable attorney fees.

- Class Action

  In the case of a class action suit against a defendant that is subject to Section 10 of the Act, (i.e., regulated by the federal banking agencies, NCUA or the Farm Credit Administration):

  (i) Such statutory damages as the court may allow up to the lesser of $500,000 or 1 percent of the liable party's net worth;

  (ii) Costs of the action; and

  (iii) Reasonable attorney fees.

  In the case of a class action suit against a defendant that is not subject to Section 10 of the Act, (i.e., not regulated by the federal banking agencies, NCUA, or the Farm Credit Administration):

  (i) Actual damages (including interest accruing on such damages);

  (ii) Statutory damages up to $1,000 per class member but not to exceed the lesser of (i) $500,000 or (ii) 1 percent of the liable party's gross revenues;

  (iii) Costs of the action; and

  (iv) Reasonable attorney fees (12 U.S.C. 4907(a))

Statute of Limitation

A borrower must bring an action under the Act within two years after the borrower discovers the violation (12 U.S.C. 4907(b)).

Mortgage Servicer Liability Limitation

A servicer shall not be liable for its failure to comply with the requirements of the Act if the servicer's failure to comply is due to the mortgage insurer's or lender's failure to comply with the Act (12 U.S.C. 4907(c)).

Enforcement

The Dodd-Frank Act directs the CFPB to enforce Federal consumer financial laws and specifically enumerates HPA as one of those laws.[14]

HPA also directs the federal banking agencies to enforce the Act under 12 U.S.C. 1818 or any other authority conferred upon the agencies by law. Under HOPA the agencies shall:

- Notify applicable lenders or servicers of any failure to comply with the Act;
- Require the lender or servicer, as applicable, to correct the borrower's account to reflect the date on which PMI should have been canceled or terminated under the Act; and
- Require the lender or servicer, as applicable, to return unearned PMI premiums to a borrower who paid premiums after the date on which the borrower's obligation to pay PMI premiums ceased under the Act (12 U.S.C. 4909).

Examination Objectives[1]

- To determine the financial institution's compliance with the Homeowners Protection Act of 1998 (HPA), as amended.
- To assess the quality of the financial institution's policies and procedures for implementing the HPA.
- To determine the reliance that can be placed on the financial institution's internal controls and procedures for monitoring the institution's compliance with the HPA.
- To initiate corrective action when violations of HPA are identified, or when policies or internal controls are deficient.

Examination Procedures

1. Through discussions with management and review of available information, determine if the institution's internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance with the HPA. Consider the following:
   a. Organization charts;
   b. Process flowcharts;
   c. Policies and procedures;
   d. Loan documentation;
   e. Checklists;
   f. Training; and
   g. Computer program documentation.

   [Click&type]

[1] These reflect FFIEC-approved procedures.

2. Review any compliance audit material, including work papers and reports, to determine whether:
   a. The institution's procedures address all applicable provisions of HPA;
   b. Steps are taken to followup on previously identified deficiencies;
   c. The procedures used include samples covering all product types and decision centers;
   d. The compliance audit work performed is accurate;
   e. Significant deficiencies and their causes are included in reports to management and/or to the Board of Directors;
   f. Corrective action is taken in a timely and appropriate manner; and
   g. The frequency of compliance review is appropriate.

3. Review sample transactions, disclosure and notification forms, and the financial institution's policies and procedures to ensure the institution provides:
   a. Initial Disclosures for
      (i) fixed rate mortgages,
      (ii) adjustable rate mortgages,
      (iii) high risk loans, and
      (iv) lender paid mortgage insurance;
   b. Annual Notices for
      (i) fixed and adjustable rate mortgages and high risk loans, and
      (ii) existing residential mortgages; and
   c. Notices of
      (i) cancellation,
      (ii) termination,
      (iii) grounds for not canceling PMI,
      (iv) grounds for not terminating PMI,
      (v) cancellation date for adjustable rate mortgages, and
      (vi) termination date for lender paid mortgage insurance.

   (Refer to Appendix A for required content of the disclosure and notices.)

4. Using the above sample and bank policies and procedures, determine that borrowers are not charged for any required disclosures or notifications (12 U.S.C. 4906).

5. Obtain and review a sample of recent written requests from borrowers to cancel their private mortgage insurance (PMI) on “non-high risk” residential mortgage transactions. Verify that the insurance was cancelled on either:
   a. The date on which the principal balance of the loan was first scheduled to reach 80 percent of the original value of the property based on the initial amortization schedule (in the case of a fixed rate loan) or amortization schedule then in effect (in the case of an adjustable rate loan); or
   b. The date on which the principal balance of the loan actually reached 80 percent of the original value of the property based on actual payments, in accordance with the applicable provisions in 12 U.S.C. 4902(a)of HPA (i.e., good payment history, current payments and, if required by the lender, evidence that the value of the mortgaged property did not decline, and certification that the borrower’s equity was unencumbered by a subordinate lien) (12 U.S.C. 4902(a)).

   [Click&type]

6. Obtain and review a sample of “non-high risk” PMI residential mortgage transactions where the borrower did not request cancellation. Select loans from the sample that have reached a 78 percent or lower LTV ratio based on the original value of the property and that are not current. Verify that PMI was terminated, based on the initial amortization schedule (in the case of a fixed rate loan) or the amortization schedule then in effect (in the case of an adjustable rate loan) on the date that the principal balance of the loan was first scheduled to reach 78 percent of the original value of the mortgaged property (if the borrower was current) or on the first day of the first month after the date that the borrower became current (12 U.S.C. 4902(b)).

   [Click&type]

7. Obtain a sample of PMI-covered residential mortgage transactions (including high-risk loans, if any) that are at or beyond the midpoint of their amortization period. Determine whether PMI was terminated by the first day of the following month if the loan was current. If the loan was not current at the midpoint, determine that PMI was terminated by the first day of the month following the day the loan became current. If, at the time of the examination, a loan at the midpoint is not current, determine whether the financial institution is monitoring the loan and has systems in place to ensure that PMI is terminated when the borrower becomes current (12 U.S.C. 4902(c) and 12 U.S.C. 4902(g)(2)).

   [Click&type]

8. Obtain a sample of any lender defined “high risk” PMI residential mortgage transactions that have a 77 percent or lower LTV based on the original value of the property. Verify that PMI was cancelled, based on the initial amortization schedule (in the case of a fixed rate loan) or the amortization schedule then in effect (in the case of an adjustable rate loan), on the date that the principal balance of the loan was scheduled to reach 77 percent of the original value of the mortgaged property (12 U.S.C. 4902(g)(1)(B)).

[Click&type]

9. Obtain a sample of loans that have had PMI cancelled or terminated (the samples obtained above can be used). For PMI loans cancelled upon the borrowers' requests, determine that the financial institution did not require any PMI payment(s) beyond 30 days of the borrower satisfying the evidence and certification requirements to cancel PMI (12 U.S.C. 4902(e)(1). For the PMI loans that received automatic termination or final termination, determine that the financial institution did not require any PMI payment(s) beyond 30 days of termination (12 U.S.C. 4902(e)(2) and 12 U.S.C. 4902(e)(3)).

[Click&type]

10. Using the samples in steps 5, 6, and 7, determine if the financial institution returned unearned premiums, if any, to the borrower within 45 days after cancellation or termination (12 U.S.C. 4902(f)(1)).

Appendix A

Homeowners Protection Act

This appendix provides guidance about the timing and required content of disclosures and notices to be made in connection with the Act.

1. Initial disclosures at consummation for fixed rate residential mortgage transactions must include:

    a. A written amortization schedule (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(A)(i)).

    b. A notice that the borrower may submit a written request to cancel PMI as of the date that, based on the initial amortization schedule, the principal balance is first scheduled to reach 80percent of the original value of the mortgaged property, irrespective of the outstanding balance of the mortgage, or such earlier date that, based on actual payments, the principal balance actually reaches 80percent of the original value of the mortgaged property and the borrower has a good payment history and has satisfied the lender's requirements that the value of the mortgaged property has not declined and is unencumbered by subordinate liens (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(A)(ii)(I) and (II)).

    c. The specific date, based on the initial amortization schedule, the loan balance is scheduled to reach 80percent of the original value of the mortgaged property (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(A)(ii)(I)).

    d. A notice that PMI will automatically terminate on the date that, based on the amortization schedule and irrespective of the outstanding balance of the mortgage, the principal balance is first scheduled to reach 78percent of the original value of the mortgaged property if the loan is current (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(A)(ii)(III)).

    e. The specific date the loan balance is scheduled to reach 78percent LTV (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(A)(ii)(III)).

    f. Notice that exemptions to the right to cancel and automatic termination exist for high-risk loans and whether such exemptions apply (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(A)(ii)(IV)).

2. Initial disclosures at consummation for adjustable rate residential mortgage transactions must include a notice that:

   a. The borrower may submit a written request to cancel PMI as of the date that, based on the amortization schedule(s) and irrespective of the outstanding balance of the mortgage, the principal balance is first scheduled to reach 80percent of the original value of the mortgaged property or such earlier date that, based on actual payments, the principal balance actually reaches 80percent of the original value of the mortgaged property and the borrower has a good payment history and has satisfied the lender requirements that the value of the mortgaged property has not declined and is unencumbered by subordinate liens (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(B)(i)).

   b. The servicer will notify the borrower when the cancellation date is reached, i.e., when the loan balance represents 80percent of the original value of the mortgaged property (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(B)(i)).

   c. PMI will automatically terminate when the loan balance is first scheduled to reach 78percent of the original value of the mortgaged property irrespective of the outstanding balance of the mortgage and the loan is current (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(B)(ii)).

   d. On the termination date, the borrower will be notified of the termination or the fact that PMI will be terminated when the loan is brought current (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(B)(ii)).

   e. Exemptions to the right to cancel and automatic termination exist for high-risk loans and whether such exemptions apply (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(B)(iii)).

3. Lender has established standards regarding the type of evidence it requires borrowers to provide to demonstrate that the value of the mortgage property has not declined and they are provided when a request for cancellation occurs (12 U.S.C. 4902(a)(3)(A)).

4. Lender provides written initial disclosures at consummation for high-risk residential mortgage transactions (as defined by the lender or Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac), that PMI will not be required beyond the midpoint of the amortization period of the loan, if the loan is current (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(2)).

5. When the financial institution acts as servicer for residential mortgage transactions, it provides an annual written statement to the borrowers explaining their rights to cancel or terminate PMI and an address and telephone number to contact the servicer to determine whether they may cancel PMI (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(3)).

   NOTE: This disclosure may be included on RESPA’s annual escrow account disclosure or IRS interest payment disclosures.

6. When the financial institution acts as servicer, it provides an annual written statement to each borrower who entered into a residential mortgage prior to July 29, 1999, that includes:

a. A statement that PMI may, under certain circumstances, be canceled by the borrower with the consent of the lender or in accordance with applicable state law (12 U.S.C. 4903(b)(1)).

b. An address and telephone number that the borrower may use to contact the servicer to determine whether the borrower may cancel the PMI (12 U.S.C. 4903(b)(2)).

NOTE: This disclosure may be included on RESPA's annual escrow account disclosure or IRS interest payment disclosure.

7. When the financial institution acts as servicer for residential mortgage transactions, it provides borrowers written notices within 30 days after the date of cancellation or termination of PMI that the borrower no longer has PMI and that no further PMI payments or related fees are due (12 U.S.C. 4904(a)).

8. When the financial institution services residential mortgage transactions, it returns all unearned PMI premiums to the borrower within 45 days of either termination upon the borrower's request or automatic termination under the HPA (12 U.S.C. 4902(e)).

9. When the financial institution acts as servicer for residential mortgage transactions, it provides borrowers written notices of the grounds it relied on (including the results of any appraisal) to deny a borrower's request for PMI cancellation, no later than 30 days after the date the request is received, or the date on which the borrower satisfies any evidence and certification requirements established by the lender, whichever is later (12 U.S.C. 4904(b)(1) and 12 U.S.C. 4904(b)(2)(A)).

10. When the financial institution acts as servicer for residential mortgage transactions, it provides borrowers written notices of the grounds it relied on (including the results of any appraisal) for refusing to automatically terminate PMI not later than 30 days after the scheduled termination date (12 U.S.C. 4904(b)(2)(B)).

    NOTE: The scheduled termination date is reached when, based on the initial amortization schedule (in the case of a fixed rate loan) or the amortization schedule(s) (in the case of an adjustable rate loan), the principal balance of the loan is first scheduled to reach 78percent of the original value of mortgaged property, assuming the borrower is current on that date or the earliest date thereafter on which the borrower becomes current.

11. When the financial institution acts as a servicer for adjustable rate residential mortgage transactions, the financial institution notifies borrowers that the cancellation date has been reached (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(B)(i)).

12. When the financial institution acts as a servicer for adjustable rate residential mortgage transactions, the financial institution notifies the borrowers on the termination date that PMI has been cancelled or will be cancelled as soon as the borrower is current on loan payments (12 U.S.C. 4903(a)(1)(B)(ii)).

13. When the financial institution requires "Lender Paid Mortgage Insurance" (LPMI) for residential mortgage transactions, it provides a written notice to a prospective borrower on or before the loan commitment date that includes:

    a. A statement that LPMI differs from borrower paid mortgage insurance (BPMI) in that the borrower may not cancel LPMI, while BPMI is subject to cancellation and automatic termination under the HPA (12 U.S.C. 4905(c)(1)(A)).

    b. A statement that LPMI usually results in a mortgage with a higher interest rate than BPMI (12 U.S.C. 4905(c)(1)(B)(i)).

    c. A statement that LPMI only terminates when the transaction is refinanced, paid off, or otherwise terminated (12 U.S.C. 4905(c)(1)(B)(ii)).

    d. A statement that LPMI and BPMI both have benefits and disadvantages and a generic analysis reflecting the differing costs and benefits of each over a 10-year period, assuming prevailing interest and property appreciation rates (12 U.S.C. 4905(c)(1)(C)).

    e. A statement that LPMI may be tax-deductible for federal income taxes if the borrower itemizes expenses for that purpose (12 U.S.C. 4905(c)(1)(D)).

14. When the lender requires LPMI for residential mortgage transactions and the financial institution acts as servicer, it notifies the borrower in writing within 30 days of the termination date that would have applied if it were a BPMI transaction that the borrower may wish to review financing options that could eliminate the requirement for PMI (12 U.S.C. 4905(c)(2)).

15. The financial institution prohibits borrower-paid fees for the disclosures and notifications required under the HPA (12 U.S.C. 4906).

Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA)

Privacy of Consumer Financial Information[1]

Title V, Subtitle A of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA)[2] governs the treatment of nonpublic personal information about consumers by financial institutions. Section 502 of the Subtitle, subject to certain exceptions, prohibits a financial institution from disclosing nonpublic personal information about a consumer to nonaffiliated third parties, unless (i) the institution satisfies various notice and opt-out requirements, and (ii) the consumer has not elected to opt out of the disclosure. Section 503 requires the institution to provide notice of its privacy policies and practices to its customers. Section 504 authorizes the issuance of regulations to implement these provisions.

In 2000, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (Board), the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA), the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC), and the former Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS), published regulations implementing provisions of GLBA governing the treatment of nonpublic personal information about consumers by financial institutions.[3]

Title X of the Dodd-Frank Act Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (Dodd-Frank Act)[4] granted rulemaking authority for most provisions of Subtitle A of Title V of GLBA to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) with respect to financial institutions and other entities subject to the CFPB's jurisdiction, except securities and futures-related companies and certain motor vehicle dealers. The Dodd-Frank Act also granted authority to the CFPB to examine and enforce compliance with these statutory provisions and their implementing regulations with respect to entities under CFPB jurisdiction.[5] In December 2011 the CFPB recodified in Regulation P, 12 CFR Part 1016, the implementing regulations that were previously issued by the Board, the FDIC, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), the NCUA, the OCC, and the former OTS.[6]

Section 1002(12)(J) of the Dodd-Frank Act, however, excluded financial institutions' information security safeguards under GLBA Section 501(b) from the CFPB's rulemaking, examination, and enforcement authority.
[6] 76 FR 79025 (Dec. 21, 2011). Pursuant to GLBA, the FTC retains rulemaking authority over any financial institution that is a person described in 12 USC Section 5519 (with certain statutory exceptions, the FTC generally retains rulemaking authority for motor vehicle dealers predominantly engaged in the sale and servicing of motor vehicles, the leasing and servicing of motor vehicles, or both).

The regulation establishes rules governing duties of a financial institution to provide particular notices and limitations on its disclosure of nonpublic personal information, as summarized below.

- A financial institution must provide notice of its privacy policies and practices, and allow the consumer to opt out of the disclosure of the consumer's nonpublic personal information to a nonaffiliated third party if the disclosure is outside of the exceptions in Sections 13, 14, or 15 of the regulation. If the financial institution provides the consumer's nonpublic personal information to a nonaffiliated third party under the exception in Section 13, it must provide notice of its privacy policies and practices to the consumer. Under the exception in Section 13, the financial institution must also enter into a contractual agreement with the third party that prohibits the third party from disclosing or using the information other than to perform services for the institution or functions on the institution's behalf, including use under an exception in Sections 14 or 15 in the ordinary course of business to carry out those services or functions. If the financial institution complies with these requirements, it is not required to provide an opt-out notice.

- Regardless of whether a financial institution shares nonpublic personal information, the institution must provide notice of its privacy policies and practices to its customers.

- A financial institution generally may not disclose consumer account numbers to any nonaffiliated third party for marketing purposes.

- A financial institution must follow redisclosure and reuse limitations on any nonpublic personal information it receives from a nonaffiliated financial institution.

In general, the privacy notice must describe a financial institution's policies and practices with respect to collecting and disclosing nonpublic personal information about a consumer to both affiliated and nonaffiliated third parties. Also, the notice must provide a consumer a reasonable opportunity to direct the institution generally not to share nonpublic personal information about the consumer (that is, to "opt out") with nonaffiliated third parties other than as permitted by exceptions under the regulation (for example, sharing for everyday business purposes, such as processing transactions and maintaining customers' accounts, and in response to properly executed governmental requests). The privacy notice must also provide, where applicable under the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA), a notice and an opportunity for a consumer to opt out of certain information sharing among affiliates.

Section 728 of the Financial Services Regulatory Relief Act of 2006 required the four federal banking agencies (the Board, the FDIC, the OCC, and the former OTS) and four additional federal regulatory agencies (the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC), the FTC, the NCUA, and the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC)) to develop a model privacy form that financial institutions may rely on as a safe harbor to provide disclosures under the privacy rules.

On December 1, 2009, the eight federal agencies jointly released a voluntary model privacy form designed to make it easier for consumers to understand how financial institutions collect and share nonpublic personal information.[7] The final rule adopting the model privacy form was effective on December 31, 2009.

On October 28, 2014, the CFPB published a final rule amending the requirements regarding financial institutions' provision of their annual disclosures of privacy policies and practices to customers by creating an alternative delivery method that financial institutions can use under certain circumstances.[8] The amendment was effective immediately upon publication. The alternative delivery method allows a financial institution to provide an annual privacy notice by posting the annual notice on its web site, if the financial institution meets certain conditions.

As of December 4, 2015, Section 75001 of the Fixing America's Surface Transportation Act[9] (FAST Act) amended Section 503 of GLBA to establish an exception to the annual privacy notice requirements whereby a financial institution that meets certain criteria is not required to provide an annual privacy notice to customers. The amendment was effective upon enactment.

There are fewer requirements to qualify for the exception to providing an annual privacy notice pursuant to the FAST Act GLBA amendments than there are to qualify to use the CFPB's alternative delivery method; any institution that meets the requirements for using the alternative delivery method is effectively excepted from delivering an annual privacy notice.

Definitions and Key Concepts

In discussing the duties and limitations imposed by the regulation, a number of key concepts are used. These concepts include financial institution; nonpublic personal information; nonaffiliated third party; the opt-out right and the exceptions to that right; and consumer and customer. Each concept is briefly discussed below. A more complete explanation of each appears in the regulation.

Financial Institution

A financial institution is any institution the business of which is engaging in activities that are financial in nature or incidental to such financial activities, as determined by Section 4(k) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956. Financial institutions can include banks, securities brokers and dealers, insurance underwriters and agents, finance companies, mortgage bankers, and travel agents.[10]

Nonpublic Personal Information

Nonpublic personal information generally is any information that is not publicly available and that:

- a consumer provides to a financial institution to obtain a financial product or service from the institution;
- results from a transaction between the consumer and the institution involving a financial product or service; or
- a financial institution otherwise obtains about a consumer in connection with providing a financial product or service.

Information is publicly available if an institution has a reasonable basis to believe that the information is lawfully made available to the general public from government records, widely distributed media, or legally required disclosures to the general public. Examples include information in a telephone book or a publicly recorded document, such as a mortgage or security interest filing.

Nonpublic personal information may include individual items of information, as well as lists of information. For example, nonpublic personal information may include names, addresses, phone numbers, social security numbers, income, credit score, and information obtained through Internet collection devices (i.e., cookies).

There are special rules regarding lists. Publicly available information would be treated as nonpublic if it were included on a list of consumers derived from nonpublic personal information. For example, a list of the names and addresses of a financial institution's depositors would be nonpublic personal information even though the same names and addresses might be published in local telephone directories, because the list is derived from the fact that a person has a deposit account with an institution, which is not publicly available information.

However, if the financial institution has a reasonable basis to believe that certain customer relationships are a matter of public record, then any list of these relationships would be considered publicly available information. For instance, a list of mortgage customers from public mortgage records would be considered publicly available information. The institution could provide a list of such customers, and include on that list any other publicly available information it has about those customers without having to provide notice or opt out.

Nonaffiliated Third Party

A nonaffiliated third party is any person except a financial institution's affiliate or a person employed jointly by a financial institution and a company that is not the institution's affiliate. An affiliate of a financial institution is any company that controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with the financial institution.

Opt-Out Right and Exceptions

The Right

Consumers must be given the right to "opt out" of, or prevent, a financial institution from disclosing nonpublic personal information about them to a nonaffiliated third party unless an exception to that right applies. The exceptions are detailed in Sections 13, 14, and 15 of the regulation and described below.

As part of the opt-out right, consumers must be given a reasonable opportunity and a reasonable means to opt out. What constitutes a reasonable opportunity to opt out depends on the circumstances surrounding the consumer's transaction, but a consumer must be provided a reasonable amount of time to exercise the opt-out right. For example, it would be reasonable if the financial institution allows 30 days from the date of mailing a notice or 30 days after customer acknowledgement of an electronic notice for an opt-out direction to be returned. What constitutes a reasonable means to opt out may include check-off boxes, a reply form, or a toll-free telephone number. It is not reasonable to require a consumer to write his or her own letter as the only means to opt out.

The Exceptions

Exceptions to the opt-out right are detailed in Sections 13, 14, and 15 of the regulation. Financial institutions need not comply with opt-out requirements if they limit disclosure of nonpublic personal information:

Section 13:

- To a nonaffiliated third party to perform services for the financial institution or to function on its behalf, including marketing the institution's own products or services or those offered jointly by the institution and another financial institution. The exception is permitted only if the financial institution provides an initial notice of these arrangements and by contract prohibits the third party from disclosing or using the information for other than the specified purposes. However, if the service or function is covered by the exceptions in Section 14 or 15 (discussed below), the financial institution does not have to comply with the disclosure and confidentiality requirements of Section 13.

Section 14:

- As necessary to effect, administer, or enforce a transaction that a consumer requests or authorizes, or under certain other circumstances relating to existing relationships with customers. Disclosures under this exception could be in connection with the audit of credit information, administration of a rewards program, or provision of an account statement.

Section 15:

- For specified other disclosures that a financial institution normally makes, such as to protect against or prevent actual or potential fraud; to the financial institution's attorneys, accountants, and auditors; or to comply with applicable legal requirements, such as the disclosure of information to regulators.

Consumer and Customer

The distinction between consumers and customers is significant because financial institutions have additional disclosure duties with respect to customers. Under the regulation, all customers are consumers, but not all consumers are customers.

A consumer is an individual, or that individual's legal representative, who obtains or has obtained a financial product or service from a financial institution that is to be used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes.

A financial service includes, among other things, a financial institution's evaluation or brokerage of information that the institution collects in connection with a request or an application from a consumer for a financial product or service. For example, a financial service includes a lender's evaluation of an application for a consumer loan or for opening a deposit account even if the application is ultimately rejected or withdrawn.

Consumers who are not customers are entitled to an initial privacy and opt-out notice before the financial institution shares nonpublic personal information with nonaffiliated third parties outside of the exceptions in Sections 13, 14, and 15 of the regulation. Consumers who are not customers are entitled to an initial privacy notice before the financial institution shares nonpublic personal information with a nonaffiliated third party under the exception in Section 13. Under the exception in Section 13, the financial institution must also enter into a contractual agreement with the third party that prohibits the third party from disclosing or using the information other than to perform services for the institution or functions on the institution's behalf, including use under an exception in Sections 14 or 15 in the ordinary course of business to carry out those services or functions. If a financial institution complies with these requirements, it is not required to provide an opt- out notice.

A customer is a consumer who has a customer relationship with a financial institution. A customer relationship is a continuing relationship between a consumer and a financial institution under which the institution provides one or more financial products or services to the consumer that are to be used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes.

- For example, a customer relationship may be established when a consumer engages in one of the following activities with a financial institution:
    - maintains a deposit or investment account;
    - obtains a loan;
    - enters into a lease of personal property; or
    - obtains financial, investment, or economic advisory services for a fee.

Customers are entitled to initial and annual privacy notices regardless of the information disclosure practices of their financial institution unless an exception to the annual privacy notice requirement applies.

There is a special rule for loans. When a financial institution sells the servicing rights to a loan to another financial institution, the customer relationship transfers with the servicing rights. However, any information on the borrower retained by the institution that sells the servicing rights must be accorded the protections due any consumer.

- Note that isolated transactions alone will not cause a consumer to be treated as a customer. For example, if an individual purchases a bank check from a financial institution where the person has no account, the individual will be a consumer but not a customer of that institution because he or she has not established a customer relationship. Likewise, if an individual uses the ATM of a financial institution where the individual has no account, even repeatedly, the individual will be a consumer, but not a customer of that institution.

Financial Institution Duties

The regulation establishes specific duties and limitations for a financial institution based on its activities. Financial institutions that intend to disclose nonpublic personal information outside the exceptions in Sections 13, 14, and 15 of the regulation will have to provide opt-out rights to their customers and to consumers who are not customers. All financial institutions have an obligation to provide initial and annual notices of their privacy policies and practices to their customers (unless an exception to the annual privacy notice requirement applies) and to provide an initial notice to consumers who are not customers before disclosing nonpublic personal information to a nonaffiliated third party other than under Sections 14 and 15. All financial institutions must abide by the regulatory limits on the disclosure of account numbers to nonaffiliated third parties and on the redisclosure and reuse of nonpublic personal information received from nonaffiliated financial institutions.

A brief summary of financial institution duties and limitations appears below. A more complete explanation of each appears in the regulation.

Notice and Opt-Out Duties to Consumers

Before a financial institution discloses nonpublic personal information about any of its consumers to a nonaffiliated third party, and an exception in Section 14 or 15 of the regulation does not apply, then the financial institution must provide to the consumer:

- an initial notice of its privacy policies and practices;
- an opt-out notice (including, among other things, a reasonable means to opt out); and
- a reasonable opportunity, before the financial institution discloses the information to the nonaffiliated third party, to opt out.

Before a financial institution discloses nonpublic personal information about a consumer to a nonaffiliated third party under the exception in Section 13, the financial institution must provide to the consumer an initial notice of its privacy policies and practices. Under the exception in Section 13, the financial institution must also enter into a contractual agreement with the third party that prohibits the third party from disclosing or using the information other than to perform services for the institution or functions on the institution's behalf, including use under an exception in Sections 14 or 15 in the ordinary course of business to carry out those services or functions. If a financial institution complies with these requirements, it is not required to provide an opt-out notice.

The financial institution may not disclose any nonpublic personal information to nonaffiliated third parties except under the enumerated exceptions unless these notices have been provided and the consumer has not opted out (where applicable). Additionally, the institution must provide a revised notice before the financial institution begins to share a new category of nonpublic personal information or shares information with a new category of nonaffiliated third party in a manner that was not described in the previous notice.

Note that a financial institution need not comply with the initial and opt-out notice requirements for consumers who are not customers if the institution limits disclosure of nonpublic personal information to the exceptions in Sections 14 and 15. A financial institution that discloses nonpublic personal information about a consumer to a nonaffiliated third party under the exception in Section 13 must provide an initial notice.

Under the exception in Section 13, the financial institution must also enter into a contractual agreement with the third party that prohibits the third party from disclosing or using the information other than to perform services for the institution or functions on the institution's behalf, including use under an exception in Sections 14 or 15 in the ordinary course of business to carry out those services or functions. If these requirements are met, the financial institution is not required to provide an opt-out notice.

Notice Duties to Customers

In addition to the duties described above, there are several duties unique to customers. In particular, regardless of whether the institution discloses or intends to disclose nonpublic personal information, a financial institution must provide notice to its customers of its privacy policies and practices at various times.

- A financial institution must provide an initial notice of its privacy policies and practices to each customer, not later than the time a customer relationship is established. Section 4(e) of the regulation describes the exceptional cases in which delivery of the notice is allowed subsequent to the establishment of the customer relationship.

- A financial institution must provide an annual notice at least once in any period of 12 consecutive months during the continuation of the customer relationship unless an exception to the annual privacy notice requirement applies.

- Generally, new privacy notices are not required for each new product or service. However, a financial institution must provide a new notice to an existing customer when the customer obtains a new financial product or service from the institution, if the initial or annual notice most recently provided to the customer was not accurate with respect to the new financial product or service.

- When a financial institution does not disclose nonpublic personal information (other than as permitted under Section 14 and Section 15 exceptions) and does not reserve the right to do so, the institution has the option of providing a simplified notice.

Requirements for Notices

Clear and Conspicuous. Privacy notices must be clear and conspicuous, meaning they must be reasonably understandable and designed to call attention to the nature and significance of the information contained in the notice. The regulation does not prescribe specific methods for making a notice clear and conspicuous, but does provide examples of ways in which to achieve the standard, such as the use of short explanatory sentences or bullet lists, and the use of plain-language headings and easily readable typeface and type size. Privacy notices also must accurately reflect the institution's privacy practices.

Delivery Rules. Privacy notices must be provided so that each recipient can reasonably be expected to receive actual notice in writing, or if the consumer agrees, electronically. To meet this standard, a financial institution could, for example, (1) hand-deliver a printed copy of the notice to its consumers, (2) mail a printed copy of the notice to a consumer's last known address, or (3) for the consumer who conducts transactions electronically, post the notice on the institution's web site and require the consumer to acknowledge receipt of the notice as a necessary step to completing the transaction.

For customers only, a financial institution must provide the initial notice (as well as any annual notice and any revised notice) so that a customer can retain or subsequently access the notice. A written notice satisfies this requirement. For customers who obtain financial products or services electronically, and agree to receive their notices on the institution's web site, the institution may provide the current version of its privacy notice on its web site.

As of October 28, 2014, a financial institution may use an alternative delivery method for providing annual privacy notices to customers through posting the annual notices on its web sites if: (1) no opt-out rights are triggered by the financial institution's information sharing practices under GLBA or under FCRA Section 603, and opt-out notices required by FCRA Section 624 and Subpart C of Regulation V have previously been provided, if applicable, or the annual privacy notice is not the only notice provided to satisfy those requirements; (2) certain information included in the annual privacy notice has not changed since the previous notice; and (3) the financial institution uses the model form provided in the regulation as its annual privacy notice. In order to use this alternative delivery method, an institution must: (1) insert a clear and conspicuous statement at least once per year on an account statement, coupon book, or a notice or disclosure the institution issues under any provision of law that informs customers that the annual privacy notice is available on the institution's web site, that the institution will mail the notice to customers who request it by calling a specific telephone number, and that the notice has not changed; (2) continuously post the current privacy notice in a clear and conspicuous manner on a page on its web site, on which the only content is the privacy notice, without requiring the customer to provide any information such as a login name or password or agree to any conditions to access the web site; and (3) mail its current privacy notice to those customers who request it by telephone within ten calendar days of the request.

As of December 4, 2015, pursuant to the FAST Act's GLBA amendment, a financial institution is not required to provide an annual privacy notice to its customers if it: (1) solely shares nonpublic personal information in accordance with the provisions of GLBA Sections 502(b)(2) (corresponding to Regulation P (12 CFR 1016.13)) or 502(e) (corresponding to Regulation P (12 CFR 1016.14 and .15)) or regulations prescribed under GLBA Section 504(b); and (2) has not changed its policies and practices with regard to disclosing nonpublic personal information since its most recent disclosure to its customers that was made in accordance with GLBA Section 503. An institution that at any time fails to comply with either of the criteria is not eligible for the exception and is required to provide an annual privacy notice to its customers.

Notice Content. A privacy notice must contain specific disclosures. However, a financial institution may provide to consumers who are not also customers a "short form" initial notice together with an opt-out notice stating that the institution's privacy notice is available upon request and explaining a reasonable means for the consumer to obtain it. The following is a list of disclosures regarding nonpublic personal information that institutions must provide in their privacy notices, as applicable:

1. categories of information collected;

2. categories of information disclosed;

3. categories of affiliates and nonaffiliated third parties to whom the institution may disclose information;

4. policies and practices with respect to the treatment of former customers' information;

5. categories of information disclosed to nonaffiliated third parties that perform services for the institution or functions on the institution's behalf and categories of third parties with whom the institution has contracted (Section 13);

6. an explanation of the opt-out right and methods for opting out;

7. any opt-out notices that the institution must provide under the FCRA with respect to affiliate information sharing;

8. policies and practices for protecting the security and confidentiality of information; and

9. a statement that the institution makes disclosures to other nonaffiliated third parties for everyday business purposes or as permitted by law (Sections 14 and 15 of the regulation).

Model Privacy Form. The Appendix to the regulation contains the model privacy form. A financial institution can use the model form to obtain a "safe harbor" for compliance with the content requirements for notifying consumers of its information-sharing practices and their right to opt out of certain sharing practices. To obtain the safe harbor, the institution must provide a model form in accordance with the instructions set forth in the Appendix of the regulation. Additionally, institutions using the alternative delivery method for providing annual privacy notices to customers must use the model form.

Limitations on Disclosure of Account Numbers

A financial institution must not disclose an account number or similar form of access number or access code for a credit card, deposit, or transaction account to any nonaffiliated third party (other than a consumer reporting agency) for use in telemarketing, direct mail marketing, or other marketing through electronic mail to the consumer.

The disclosure of encrypted account numbers without an accompanying means of decryption, however, is not subject to this prohibition. The regulation also expressly allows disclosures by a financial institution to its agent to market the institution's own products or services (although the financial institution must not authorize the agent to directly initiate charges to the customer's account). The regulation also does not bar a financial institution from disclosing account numbers to participants in private-label or affinity card programs, if the participants are identified to the customer when the customer enters the program.

Redisclosure and Reuse Limitations on Nonpublic Personal Information Received

If a financial institution receives nonpublic personal information from a nonaffiliated financial institution, its disclosure and use of the information is limited.

- For nonpublic personal information received under a Section 14 or 15 exception, the financial institution is limited to:
  - Disclosing the information to the affiliates of the financial institution from which it received the information;
  - Disclosing the information to its own affiliates, who may, in turn, disclose and use the information only to the extent that the financial institution can do so; and
  - Disclosing and using the information pursuant to a Section 14 or 15 exception (for example, an institution receiving information for account processing could disclose the information to its auditors).
- For nonpublic personal information received other than under a Section 14 or 15 exception, the recipient's use of the information is unlimited, but its disclosure of the information is limited to:
  - Disclosing the information to the affiliates of the financial institution from which it received the information;
  - Disclosing the information to its own affiliates, who may, in turn disclose the information only to the extent that the financial institution can do so; and

- Disclosing the information to any other person, if the disclosure would be lawful if made directly to that person by the financial institution from which it received the information. For example, an institution that received a customer list from another financial institution could disclose the list in accordance with the privacy policy of the financial institution that provided the list subject to any opt-out election or revocation by the consumers on the list and in accordance with appropriate exceptions under Sections 14 and 15.

Other Matters

Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA)

The regulation does not modify, limit, or supersede the operation of the FCRA.

State Law

The regulation does not supersede, alter, or affect any state statute, regulation, order, or interpretation, except to the extent that it is inconsistent with the regulation. A state statute, regulation, order, or interpretation is consistent with the regulation if the protection it affords any consumer is greater than the protection provided under the regulation, as determined by the CFPB, on its own motion or upon the petition of any interested party, after consultation with the agency or authority with jurisdiction under Section 505(a) of GLBA over either the person who initiated the complaint or that is the subject of the complaint.

Guidelines Regarding Protecting Customer Information

The regulation requires a financial institution to disclose its policies and practices for protecting the confidentiality, security, and integrity of nonpublic personal information about consumers (whether or not they are customers). The disclosure need not describe these policies and practices in detail, but instead may describe in general terms who is authorized to have access to the information and whether the institution has security practices and procedures in place to ensure the confidentiality of the information in accordance with the institution's policies.

The four federal banking agencies published guidelines, pursuant to Section 501(b) of GLBA, that address steps a financial institution should take in order to protect customer information. The guidelines relate only to information about customers, rather than all consumers. Compliance examiners should consider the findings of a 501(b) inspection during the compliance examination of a financial institution for purposes of evaluating the accuracy of the institution's disclosure regarding information security.

Examination Objectives[1]

- To assess the quality of a financial institution's compliance management policies, procedures, and internal controls for implementing the regulation, specifically ensuring consistency between what the financial institution tells consumers in its notices about its policies and practices and what it actually does.

- To determine the reliance that can be placed on a financial institution's policies, procedures, and internal controls for monitoring the institution's compliance with the regulation.

- To determine a financial institution's compliance with the regulation, specifically in meeting the following requirements:
  - Providing to customers notices of its privacy policies and practices that are timely, accurate, clear and conspicuous, and delivered so that each customer can reasonably be expected to receive actual notice;
  - Disclosing nonpublic personal information to nonaffiliated third parties, other than under an exception, after first meeting the applicable requirements for giving consumers notice and the right to opt out;
  - Appropriately honoring consumer opt-out directions;
  - Lawfully using or disclosing nonpublic personal information received from a nonaffiliated financial institution; and
  - Disclosing account numbers only according to the limits in the regulation.

- To initiate effective corrective actions when violations of law are identified, or when policies, procedures, or internal controls are deficient.

Examination Procedures

    - prevent the unlawful disclosure of account numbers;
- Information sharing agreements between the institution and affiliates and service agreements or contracts between the institution and nonaffiliated third parties either to obtain or provide information or services;

- Categories of nonpublic personal information collected from or about consumers in obtaining a financial product or service (e.g., in the application process for deposit, loan, or investment products; for an over-the-counter purchase of a bank check; from E-banking products or services, including information collected electronically through Internet cookies; or through ATM transactions);

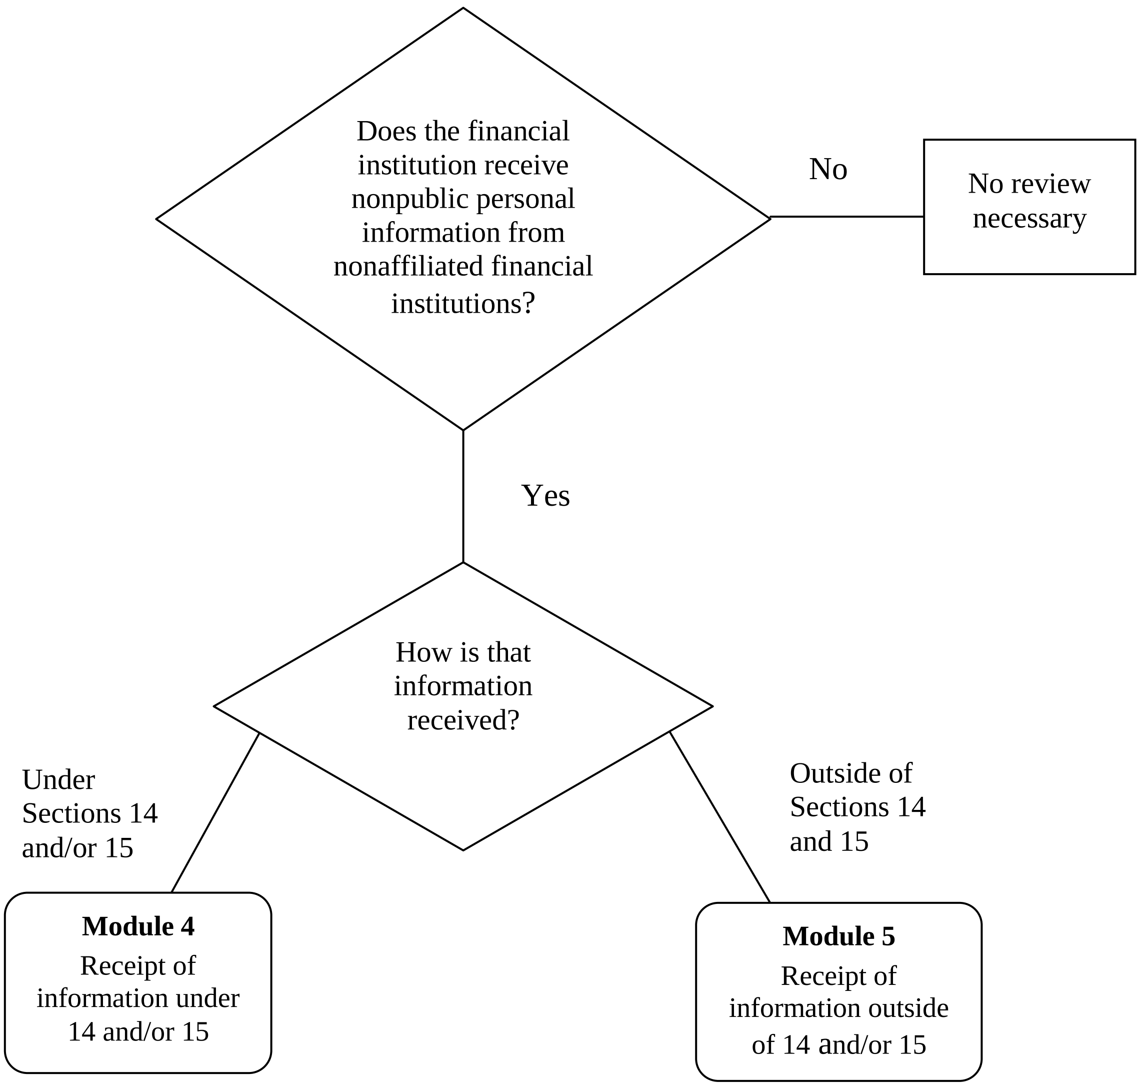
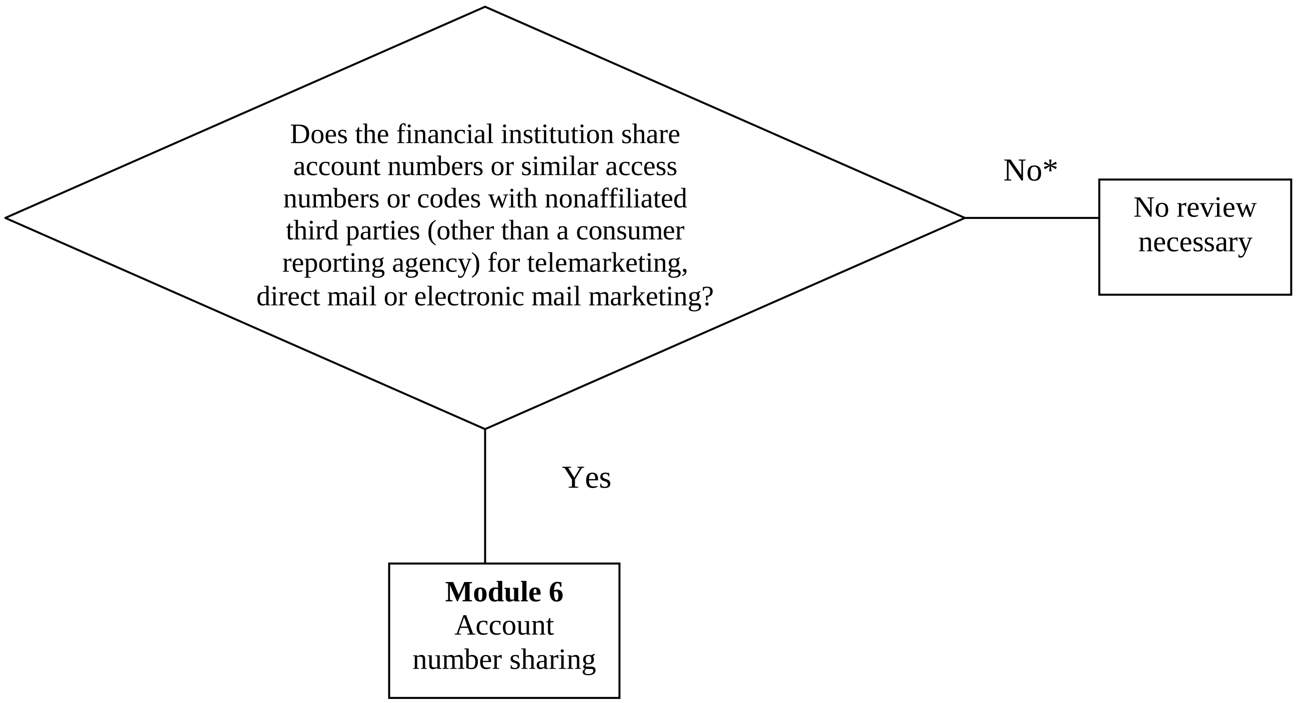
Decision Tree - Redisclosure and Reuse of Nonpublic Personal Information Received from Nonaffiliated Financial Institutions (Sections 11(A) and 11(B))



Decision Tree - Account Number Sharing (Section 12)



* This may include sharing of encrypted account numbers but not the decryption key.

Module 1 - Sharing nonpublic personal information with nonaffiliated third parties under Sections 14 and / or 15 and outside of the exceptions (with or without also sharing under Section 13)

Note: Financial institutions whose practices fall within this category engage in the most expansive degree of information sharing permissible. Consequently, these institutions are held to the most comprehensive compliance standards imposed by the regulation.

Note: As of December 4, 2015, a financial institution is not required to provide an annual privacy notice to its applicable customers if it: (1) solely shares nonpublic personal information in accordance with the provisions of GLBA Sections 502(b)(2) (corresponding to Regulation P (12 CFR 1016.13)) or 502(e) (corresponding to Regulation P (12 CFR 1016.14 and .15)) or regulations prescribed under GLBA Section 504(b); and (2) has not changed its policies and practices with regard to disclosing nonpublic personal information since its most recent disclosure to its customers that was made in accordance with GLBA Section 503. A financial institution that at any time fails to comply with either of the criteria is not eligible for the exception and is required to provide an annual privacy notice to its customers.

A. Disclosure of Nonpublic Personal Information

1. Select a sample of third party relationships with nonaffiliated third parties and obtain a sample of information shared between the institution and the third party both inside and outside of the exceptions. The sample should include a cross-section of relationships but should emphasize those that are higher risk in nature as determined by the initial procedures. Perform the following comparisons to evaluate the financial institution's compliance with disclosure limitations.

    a. Compare the categories of information shared and with whom the information was shared to those stated in the privacy notice and verify that what the institution tells consumers (both customers and those who are not customers) in its notices about its policies and practices in this regard, and what the institution actually does, are consistent (12 CFR 1016.6, 10).

    b. Compare the information shared to a sample of opt-out directions and verify that only nonpublic personal information covered under the exceptions or from consumers (customers and those who are not customers) who chose not to opt out is shared (12 CFR 1016.10).

2. If the financial institution also shares information under Section 13, obtain and review contracts with nonaffiliated third parties that perform services for the financial institution not covered by the exceptions in Section 14 or 15. Determine whether the contracts prohibit the third party from disclosing or using the information other than to carry out the purposes for which the information was disclosed (12 CFR 1016.13(a)).

B. Presentation, Content, and Delivery of Privacy Notices

1. Review the financial institution’s initial, annual and revised notices, as well as any short-form notices that the institution may use for consumers who are not customers. Determine whether or not these notices:

   a. Are clear and conspicuous (12 CFR 1016.3(b), 4(a), 5(a)(1), 8(a)(1));

   b. Accurately reflect the institution’s policies and practices (12 CFR 1016.4(a), 5(a)(1), 8(a)(1)). Note: this includes policies and practices disclosed in the notices that exceed regulatory requirements; and

   c. Include, and adequately describe, all required items of information and contain examples as applicable (12 CFR 1016.6). Note that if the institution shares under nonpublic personal information under Section 13 the notice provisions for that section shall also apply.

   d. If the model privacy form is used, determine that it reflects the institution’s policies and practices. For institutions seeking a safe harbor for compliance with the content requirements of the regulation, verify that the notice has the proper content and is in the proper format as specified in the Appendix of the regulation.

2. Through discussions with management, review of the institution’s policies, procedures, and internal controls and a sample of electronic or written consumer records where available, determine if the institution has adequate policies, procedures, and internal controls in place to provide notices to consumers, as appropriate. Assess the following:

   a. Timeliness of delivery (12 CFR 1016.4(a), 7(c), 8(a)); and

   b. Reasonableness of the method of delivery (e.g., by hand; by mail; electronically, if the consumer agrees; or as a necessary step of a transaction) (12 CFR 1016.9).

   c. For customers only, review the timeliness of delivery (12 CFR 1016.4(d), 4(e), 5(a)), means of delivery of annual notice (12 CFR 1016.9(c)), and accessibility of or ability to retain the notice (12 CFR 1016.9(e)).

C. Opt-Out Right

1. Review the financial institution’s opt-out notices. An opt-out notice may be combined with the institution’s privacy notices. Regardless, determine whether the opt-out notices:

    a. Are clear and conspicuous (12 CFR 1016.3(b) and 7(a)(1));

    b. Accurately explain the right to opt out (12 CFR 1016.7(a)(1));

    c. Include and adequately describe the three required items of information (the institution’s policy regarding disclosure of nonpublic personal information, the consumer’s opt-out right, and the means to opt out) (12 CFR 1016.7(a)(1)); and

    d. Describe how the institution treats joint relationships, as applicable (12 CFR 1016.7(d)).

2. Through discussions with management, review of the institution’s policies, procedures, and internal controls and a sample of electronic or written records where available, determine if the institution has adequate policies, procedures, and internal controls in place to provide the opt-out notice and comply with opt-out directions of consumers (customers and those who are not customers), as appropriate. Assess the following:

    a. Timeliness of delivery (12 CFR 1016.10(a)(1));

    b. Reasonableness of the method of delivery (e.g., by hand; by mail; electronically, if the consumer agrees; or as a necessary step of a transaction) (12 CFR 1016.9);

    c. Reasonableness of the opportunity to opt out (the time allowed to and the means by which the consumer may opt out) (12 CFR 1016.10(a)(1)(iii), 10(a)(3)); and

    d. Adequacy of procedures to implement and track the status of a consumer's (customers and those who are not customers) opt out direction, including those of former customers (12 CFR 1016.7(e), (f), (g)).

Module 2 – Sharing nonpublic personal information with nonaffiliated third parties under Sections 13, and 14 and/or 15 but not outside of these exceptions

Note: As of December 4, 2015, a financial institution is not required to provide an annual privacy notice to its applicable customers if it: (1) solely shares nonpublic personal information in accordance with the provisions of GLBA Sections 502(b)(2) (corresponding to Regulation P (12 CFR 1016.13)) or 502(e) (corresponding to Regulation P (12 CFR 1016.14 and .15)) or regulations prescribed under GLBA section 504(b); and (2) has not changed its policies and practices with regard to disclosing nonpublic personal information since its most recent disclosure to its customers that was made in accordance with GLBA Section 503. A financial institution that at any time fails to comply with either of the criteria is not eligible for the exception and is required to provide an annual privacy notice to its customers.

A. Disclosure of Nonpublic Personal Information

1. Select a sample of third party relationships with nonaffiliated third parties and obtain a sample of information shared between the institution and the third party. The sample should include a cross-section of relationships but should emphasize those that are higher risk in nature as determined by the initial procedures. Perform the following comparisons to evaluate the financial institution's compliance with disclosure limitations.

   a. Compare the information shared and with whom the information was shared to ensure that the institution accurately categorized its information sharing practices and is not sharing nonpublic personal information outside the exceptions (12 CFR 1016.13, 14, 15).

   b. Compare the categories of information shared and with whom the information was shared to those stated in the privacy notice and verify that what the institution tells consumers in its notices about its policies and practices in this regard and what the institution actually does are consistent (12 CFR 1016.6, 10).

   c. If the model privacy form is used, determine that it reflects the institution's policies and practices. For institutions seeking a safe harbor for compliance with the content requirements of the regulation, verify that the notice has the proper content and is in the proper format as specified in the Appendix of the regulation.

2. Review contracts with nonaffiliated third parties that perform services for the financial institution not covered by the exceptions in Section 14 or 15. Determine whether the contracts adequately prohibit the third party from disclosing or using the information other than to carry out the purposes for which the information was disclosed (12 CFR 1016.13(a)).

B. Presentation, Content, and Delivery of Privacy Notices

1. Review the financial institution's initial and annual privacy notices. Determine whether or not they:

    a. Are clear and conspicuous (12 CFR 1016.3(b), 4(a), 5(a)(1));

    b. Accurately reflect the institution's policies and practices (12 CFR 1016.4(a), 5(a)(1)). Note, this includes policies and practices disclosed in the notices that exceed regulatory requirements; and

    c. Include, and adequately describe, all required items of information and contain examples as applicable (12 CFR 1016.6, 13).

2. Through discussions with management, review of the institution's policies, procedures, and internal controls and a sample of electronic or written consumer records where available, determine if the institution has adequate policies, procedures, and internal controls in place to provide notices to consumers, as appropriate. Assess the following:

    a. Timeliness of delivery (12 CFR 1016.4(a)); and

    b. Reasonableness of the method of delivery (e.g., by hand; by mail; electronically, if the consumer agrees; as a necessary step of a transaction; or pursuant to the alternative delivery method) (12 CFR 1016.9).

    c. For customers only, review the timeliness of delivery (12 CFR 1016.4(d), 4(e), and 5(a)), means of delivery of annual notice (12 CFR 1016.9(c)), and accessibility of or ability to retain the notice (12 CFR 1016.9(e)).

Module 3 – Sharing nonpublic personal information with nonaffiliated third parties only under Sections 14 and / or 15

Note: This module applies only to customers.

Note: As of December 4, 2015, a financial institution is not required to provide an annual privacy notice to its applicable customers if it: (1) solely shares nonpublic personal information in accordance with the provisions of GLBA Sections 502(b)(2) (corresponding to Regulation P (12 CFR 1016.13)) or 502(e) (corresponding to Regulation P (12 CFR 1016.14 and .15)) or regulations prescribed under GLBA Section 504(b); and (2) has not changed its policies and practices with regard to disclosing nonpublic personal information since its most recent disclosure to its customers that was made in accordance with GLBA Section 503. A financial institution that at any time fails to comply with either of the criteria is not eligible for the exception and is required to provide an annual privacy notice to its customers.

A. Disclosure of Nonpublic Personal Information

1. Select a sample of third party relationships with nonaffiliated third parties and obtain a sample of information shared between the financial institution and the third party.

2. Through discussions with management, review of the institution's policies, procedures, and internal controls and a sample of electronic or written customer records where available, determine if the institution has adequate policies, procedures, and internal controls in place to provide notices to customers, as appropriate. Assess the following:

B. Select a sample of information received from nonaffiliated financial institutions, to evaluate the financial institution’s compliance with redisclosure and reuse limitations.

Regulation X

Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act

The Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (RESPA) (12 U.S.C. 2601 et seq.) (the Act) became effective on June 20, 1975. The Act requires lenders, mortgage brokers, or servicers of home loans to provide borrowers with pertinent and timely disclosures regarding the nature and costs of the real estate settlement process. The Act also prohibits specific practices, such as kickbacks, and places limitations upon the use of escrow accounts. The Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) originally promulgated Regulation X, which implements RESPA.

Congress has amended RESPA significantly since its enactment. The National Affordable Housing Act of 1990 amended RESPA to require detailed disclosures concerning the transfer, sale, or assignment of mortgage servicing. It also requires disclosures for mortgage escrow accounts at closing and annually thereafter, itemizing the charges to be paid by the borrower and what is paid out of the account by the servicer.

In October 1992, Congress amended RESPA to cover subordinate lien loans.

Congress, when it enacted the Economic Growth and Regulatory Paperwork Reduction Act of 1996,[1] further amended RESPA to clarify certain definitions, including "controlled business arrangement," which was changed to "affiliated business arrangement." The changes also reduced the disclosures under the mortgage servicing provisions of RESPA.

In 2008, HUD issued a RESPA Reform Rule (73 Fed. Reg. 68204, November 17, 2008) that included substantive and technical changes to the existing RESPA regulations and different implementation dates for various provisions. Substantive changes included a standard Good Faith Estimate (GFE) form and a revised HUD-1 Settlement Statement that were required as of January 1, 2010. Technical changes, including streamlined mortgage servicing disclosure language, elimination of outdated escrow account provisions, and a provision permitting an "average charge" to be listed on the GFE and HUD-1 Settlement Statement, took effect on January 16, 2009. In addition, HUD clarified that all disclosures required by RESPA are permitted to be provided electronically, in accordance with the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign).[2]

The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010, Pub. L. 111-203 (July 10, 2010) (Dodd-Frank Act) granted rule-making authority under RESPA to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) and, with respect to entities under its jurisdiction, generally granted authority to the CFPB to supervise for and enforce compliance with RESPA and its implementing regulations.[3] In December 2011, the CFPB restated HUD's implementing regulation at 12 CFR Part 1024 (76 Fed. Reg. 78978) (December 20, 2011).

Since December 2011, the CFPB has issued a series of final rules amending Regulation X. On January 17, 2013, the CFPB issued a final rule that implemented certain provisions of Title XIV of the Dodd-Frank Act and included substantive and technical changes to the existing regulations. (78 Fed. Reg. 10695) (February 14, 2013). Substantive changes included modifying the servicing transfer notice requirements and implementing new procedures and notice requirements related to borrowers' error resolution requests and information requests. The amendments also included new provisions related to escrow payments; force-placed insurance; general servicing; policies, procedures, and requirements; early intervention; continuity of contact; and loss mitigation. The amendments were effective as of January 10, 2014.

Subsequently, on July 10, 2013, September 13, 2013, and October 22, 2014, the CFPB issued final rules to further amend Regulation X ((78 Fed. Reg. 44685) (July 24, 2013), (78 Fed. Reg. 60381) (October 1, 2013), and (79 Fed. Reg. 65299) (November 3, 2014)). The final rules included substantive and technical changes to the existing regulations, including revisions to provisions on the relation to state law of Regulation X's servicing provisions, to the loss mitigation procedure requirements, and to the requirements relating to notices of error and information requests. On October 15, 2013, the CFPB issued an interim final rule to further amend Regulation X (78 Fed. Reg. 62993) (October 23, 2013) to exempt servicers from the early intervention requirements in certain circumstances. The Regulation X amendments were effective as of January 10, 2014.

On December 31, 2013, the CFPB published final rules implementing Sections 1098(2) and 1100A(5) of the Dodd-Frank Act, which direct the CFPB to publish a single, integrated disclosure for mortgage transactions, which includes mortgage disclosure requirements under the Truth in Lending Act (TILA) and Sections 4 and 5 of RESPA. These amendments are referred to in this document as the "TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule" or "TRID," and are applicable to covered closed-end mortgage loans for which a creditor or mortgage broker receives an application on or after October 3, 2015. As a result, Regulation Z now houses the integrated forms, timing, and related disclosure requirements for most closed-end consumer mortgage loans.

The new integrated disclosures are not used to disclose information about reverse mortgages; home equity lines of credit (HELOCs); chattel-dwelling loans, such as loans secured by a mobile home or by a dwelling that is not attached to real property (i.e., land); or other transactions not covered by the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule. The final rule also does not apply to loans made by a creditor who makes five or fewer mortgages in a year. Creditors originating these types of mortgages must continue to use, as applicable, the GFE, HUD-1 Settlement Statement, and Truth in Lending (TIL) disclosures.

[3] Dodd-Frank Act Secs. 1002(12)(M), 1024(b)-(c), and 1025(b)-(c); 1053; 12 U.S.C. 5481(12)(M), 5514(b)-(c), and 5515 (b)-(c).

On August 4, 2016, the CFPB issued a final rule to further clarify, revise, and amend provisions of Regulation X as well as Regulation Z, the regulation implementing TILA. (81 Fed. Reg. 72160) (October 19, 2016). The amendments in the final rule are referenced in this document as the "2016 Servicing Rule." The 2016 Servicing Rule establishes a definition of successor in interest and provides that confirmed successors in interest are considered "borrowers" for the purposes of Regulation X's mortgage servicing provisions. Confirmed successor in interest means a successor in interest once a servicer has confirmed the successor in interest's identity and ownership interest in a property that secures a mortgage loan subject to Subpart C of Regulation X. The 2016 Servicing Rule also addresses compliance with certain servicing requirements when a person is a debtor in bankruptcy or sends a cease communication request under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA).

Additionally, the 2016 Servicing Rule clarifies, revises, or amends provisions regarding force-placed insurance notices, policy and procedure requirements, early intervention, and loss mitigation requirements under Regulation X's mortgage servicing provisions; and which loans are considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer, certain periodic statement requirements relating to bankruptcy and charge-off, and prompt crediting requirements under Regulation Z's mortgage servicing provisions. The 2016 Servicing Rule was effective October 19, 2017, except for the provisions related to successors in interest and periodic statements for borrowers in bankruptcy, which take effect on April 19, 2018.

The CFPB concurrently issued an interpretive rule under the FDCPA to clarify the interaction of the FDCPA and specified mortgage servicing rules in Regulations X and Z. (81 Fed. Reg. 71977) (October 19, 2016).[4] This interpretive rule constitutes an advisory opinion for purposes of the FDCPA and provides safe harbors from liability for servicers acting in compliance with it.

On October 4, 2017, the CFPB issued an interim final rule amending a provision of the 2016 Servicing Rule relating to the timing for servicers to provide modified written early intervention notices under Regulation X to borrowers who have invoked their cease communication rights under the FDCPA. (82 FR 47953) (October 16, 2017). The interim final rule was effective October 19, 2017.

Subpart A – General Provisions

Coverage – 12 CFR 1024.5(a)

RESPA is applicable to all "federally related mortgage loans," except as provided under 12 CFR 1024.5(b) and 1024.5(d), discussed below. "Federally related mortgage loans" are defined as:

[4] See Safe Harbors from Liability under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act for Certain Actions Taken in Compliance with Mortgage Servicing Rules under the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (Regulation X) and the Truth in Lending Act (Regulation Z) (81 Fed. Reg. 71977) (Oct. 19, 2016) (hereinafter 2016 FDCPA Interpretive Rule). The interpretations contained in this interpretive rule are included in Regulation X comments 30(d)-1 and 39(d)-2; Regulation Z comment 2(a)(11)-4.ii.

Loans (other than temporary loans), including refinancings that satisfy the following two criteria:

- First, the loan is secured by a first or subordinate lien on residential real property, located within a state, upon which either:
    - A one-to-four family structure is located or is to be constructed using proceeds of the loan (including individual units of condominiums and cooperatives); or
    - A manufactured home is located or is to be constructed using proceeds of the loan.
- Second, the loan falls within one of the following categories:
    - Loans made by a lender,[5] creditor,[6] dealer;[7]
    - Loans made or insured by an agency of the federal government;
    - Loans made in connection with a housing or urban development program administered by an agency of the federal government;
    - Loans made and intended to be sold by the originating lender or creditor to the FNMA, GNMA, or FHLMC (or its successor);[8] or
    - Loans that are the subject of a home equity conversion mortgage or reverse mortgage issued by a lender or creditor subject to the regulation.

"Federally related mortgage loans" are also defined to include installment sales contracts, land contracts, or contracts for deeds on otherwise qualifying residential property if the contract is funded in whole or in part by proceeds of a loan made by a lender, specified federal agency, dealer or creditor subject to the regulation.

Exemptions – 12 CFR 1024.5(b)

The following transactions are exempt from coverage:

- A loan primarily for business, commercial or agricultural purposes (definition identical to Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.3(a)(1)).

[5] A lender includes financial institutions either regulated by, or whose deposits or accounts are insured by, any agency of the federal government.

[6] A creditor is defined in Section 103(g) of the Consumer Credit Protection Act (15 U.S.C. 1602(g)). RESPA covers any creditor that makes or invests in residential real estate loans aggregating more than $1,000,000 per year.

[7] "Dealer" is defined in Regulation X to mean a seller, contractor, or supplier of goods or services. Dealer loans are covered by RESPA if the obligations are to be assigned before the first payment is due to any lender or creditor otherwise subject to the regulation.

[8] FNMA – Federal National Mortgage Association; GNMA - Government National Mortgage Association; FHLMC – Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation.

- A temporary loan, such as a construction loan. (The exemption does not apply if the loan is used as, or may be converted to, permanent financing by the same financial institution or is used to finance transfer of title to the first user of the property.) If the lender issues a commitment for permanent financing, it is covered by the regulation.
- Any construction loan with a term of two years or more is covered by the regulation, unless it is made to a bona fide contractor. “Bridge” or “swing” loans are not covered by the regulation.
- A loan secured by vacant or unimproved property where no proceeds of the loan will be used to construct a one-to-four family residential structure. If the proceeds will be used to locate a manufactured home or construct a structure within two years from the date of settlement, the loan is covered.
- An assumption, unless the mortgage instruments require lender approval for the assumption and the lender approves the assumption.
- A conversion of a loan to different terms which are consistent with provisions of the original mortgage instrument, as long as a new note is not required, even if the lender charges an additional fee for the conversion.[9]
- A bona fide transfer of a loan obligation in the secondary market. (However, the mortgage servicing requirements of Subpart C, 12 CFR 1024.30-41, still apply.) Mortgage broker transactions that are table funded (the loan is funded by a contemporaneous advance of loan funds and an assignment of the loan to the person advancing the funds) are not secondary market transactions and therefore are covered by RESPA. Similarly, neither the creation of a dealer loan or consumer credit contract, nor the first assignment of such loan or contract to a lender, is a secondary market transaction.

Partial Exemptions for Certain Mortgage Loans – 12 CFR 1024.5(d)

Most closed-end mortgage loans are exempt from the requirement to provide the GFE, HUD-1 settlement statement, and application servicing disclosure requirements of 12 CFR 1024.6, 1024.7, 1024.8, 1024.10, and 1024.33(a). Instead, these loans are subject to disclosure, timing, and other requirements under TILA and Regulation Z. Specifically, the aforementioned provisions do not apply to a federally related mortgage loan that:

- Is subject to the special disclosure (TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure) requirements for certain consumer credit transactions secured by real property set forth in Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f), and (g); or [9] 12 CFR 1024.5(b)(6).

- Is subject to the partial exemption under 12 CFR 1026.3(h) (i.e., certain no-interest loans secured by subordinate liens made for the purpose of down payment or similar home buyer assistance, property rehabilitation, energy efficiency, or foreclosure avoidance or prevention. (12 CFR 1026.3(h)).

Note that a creditor may not use the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure forms instead of the GFE, HUD-1, and TIL forms for transactions that continue to be covered by TILA or RESPA that require those disclosures (e.g., reverse mortgages).

Summary of Applicable Disclosure Requirements:

Use TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures (See Regulation Z):	Continue to use existing TIL, RESPA Disclosures (as applicable):
• Most closed-end mortgage loans, including: o Construction-only loans o Loans secured by vacant land or by 25 or more acres	• HELOCs (subject to disclosure requirements under Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.40) • Reverse mortgages[10] (subject to existing TIL and GFE disclosures) • Chattel-secured mortgages (i.e., mortgages secured by a mobile home or by a dwelling that is not attached to real property, such as land) (subject to existing TIL disclosures, and not RESPA)
But note: In both cases, there is a partial exemption from these disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.3(h) for loans secured by subordinate liens and associated with certain housing assistance loan programs for low- and moderate-income persons.

Subpart B – Mortgage Settlement and Escrow Accounts

Examiners should note that certain provisions in Subpart B (12 CFR 1024.6, 1024.7, 1024.8, and 1024.10) are applicable only to limited categories of mortgage loans. See the discussion of 12 CFR 1024.5(d) above.

Special Information Booklet – 12 CFR 1024.6

For mortgage loans that are not subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule (see 12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f) and (g)),* a loan originator[11] is required to provide the borrower with a copy of the Special Information Booklet at the time a written application is submitted or no later than three business days after the application is received. If the application is denied before the end of the three-business-day period, the loan originator is not required to provide the booklet. If the borrower uses a mortgage broker, the broker rather than the lender, must provide the booklet.

The booklet does not need to be provided for refinancing transactions, closed-end subordinate lien mortgage loans and reverse mortgage transactions, or for any other federally related mortgage loan not intended for the purchase of a one-to-four family residential property. (12 CFR 1024.19(g)(1)(iii)).

A loan originator that complies with Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.40) for open-end home equity plans (including providing the brochure entitled "What You Should Know About Home Equity Lines of Credit" or a suitable substitute) is deemed to have complied with this section.

*NOTE: The Special Information Booklet may also be required under 12 CFR 1026.19(g) for those closed-end mortgage loans subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule. A discussion of those requirements is located in the Regulation Z examination procedures.

Good Faith Estimate (GFE) of Settlement Costs – 12 CFR 1024.7 Standard GFE Required

For closed-end reverse mortgages, a loan originator is required to provide a consumer with the standard GFE form that is designed to allow borrowers to shop for a mortgage loan by comparing settlement costs and loan terms. (See GFE form at Appendix C to 12 CFR Part 1024.)

Overview of the Standard GFE

The first page of the GFE includes a summary of loan terms and a summary of estimated settlement charges. It also includes information about key dates such as when the interest rate for the loan quoted in the GFE expires and when the estimate for the settlement charges expires. The second page discloses settlement charges as subtotals for 11 categories of costs. The third page provides a table explaining which charges can change at settlement, a trade-off table showing the relationship between the interest rate and settlement charges, and a shopping chart to compare the costs and terms of loans offered by different originators.

[11] A "loan originator" is defined as a lender or mortgage broker. 12 CFR 1024.2(b).

GFE Application Requirements

- The loan originator must provide the standard GFE to the borrower within three business days of receipt of an application for a mortgage loan. A loan originator is not required to provide a GFE if before the end of the three-business-day period, the application is denied or the borrower withdraws the application.
- An application can be in writing or electronically submitted, including a written record of an oral application.
- A loan originator determines what information it needs to collect from a borrower and which of the collected information it will use in order to issue a GFE. Under the regulations, an "application" includes at least the following six pieces of information:

  1) The borrower's name;
  2) The borrower's gross monthly income;
  3) The borrower's Social Security number (e.g., to enable the loan originator to obtain a credit report);
  4) The property address;
  5) An estimate of the value of the property; and
  6) The mortgage loan amount sought. In addition, a loan originator may require the submission of any other information it deems necessary.

  A loan originator will be presumed to have relied on such information prior to issuing a GFE and cannot base a revision of a GFE on that information unless it changes or is later found to be inaccurate.
- While the loan originator may require the borrower to submit additional information beyond the six pieces of information listed above in order to issue a GFE, it cannot require, as a condition of providing the GFE, the submission of supplemental documentation to verify the information provided by the borrower on the application. However, a loan originator is not prohibited from using its own sources to verify the information provided by the borrower prior to issuing the GFE. The loan originator can require borrowers to provide verification information after the GFE has been issued in order to complete final underwriting.
- For dealer loans, the loan originator is responsible for providing the GFE directly or ensuring that the dealer provides the GFE.
- For mortgage brokered loans, either the lender or the mortgage broker must provide a GFE within three business days after a mortgage broker receives either an application or information sufficient to complete an application. The lender is responsible for ascertaining whether the GFE has been provided. If the mortgage broker has provided the GFE to the applicant, the lender is not required to provide an additional GFE.

- A loan originator is prohibited from charging a borrower any fee in order to obtain a GFE unless the fee is limited to the cost of a credit report.

GFE Not Required for Open End Lines of Credit – 12 CFR 1024.7(h)

A loan originator that complies with Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.40) for open-end home equity plans is deemed to have complied with 12 CFR 1024.7.

Availability of GFE Terms – 12 CFR 1024.7(c)

Regulation X does not establish a minimum period of availability for which the interest rate must be honored. The loan originator must determine the expiration date for the interest rate of the loan stated on the GFE. In contrast, Regulation X requires that the estimated settlement charges and loan terms listed on the GFE be honored by the loan originator for at least 10 business days from the date the GFE is provided. The period of availability for the estimated settlement charges and loan terms as well as the period of availability for the interest rate of the loan stated on the GFE must be listed on the GFE in the “important dates” section of the form.

After the expiration date for the interest rate of the loan stated on the GFE, the interest rate and the other rate related charges, including the charge or credit for the interest rate chosen, the adjusted origination charges and the per diem interest can change until the interest rate is locked.

Key GFE Form Contents – 12 CFR 1024.7(d)

The loan originator must ensure that the required GFE form is completed in accordance with the Instructions set forth in Appendix C of 12 CFR Part 1024.

First Page of GFE

- The first page of the GFE discloses identifying information such as the name and address of the “loan originator,” which includes the lender or the mortgage broker originating the loan. The “purpose” section indicates what the GFE is about and directs the borrower to the TIL disclosures and HUD’s website for more information. The borrower is informed that only the borrower can shop for the best loan and that the borrower should compare loan offers using the shopping chart on the third page of the GFE.

- The “important dates” section requires the loan originator to state the expiration date for the interest rate for the loan provided in the GFE as well as the expiration date for the estimate of other settlement charges and the loan terms not dependent upon the interest rate.

- While the interest rate stated on the GFE is not required to be honored for any specific period of time, the estimate for the other settlement charges and other loan terms must be honored for at least 10 business days from when the GFE is provided.

- In addition, the form must state how many calendar days within which the borrower must go to settlement once the interest rate is locked (rate lock period). The form also requires disclosure of how many days prior to settlement the interest rate would have to be locked, if applicable.
- The "summary of your loan" section requires disclosure of the initial loan amount; loan term; initial interest rate; initial monthly payment for principal, interest, and any mortgage insurance; whether the interest rate can rise, and if so, the maximum rate to which it can rise over the life of the loan, and the period of time after which the interest rate can first change; whether the loan balance can rise if the payments are made on time and if so, the maximum amount to which it can rise over the life of the loan; whether the monthly amount owed for principal, interest and any mortgage insurance can rise even if payments are made on time, and if so, the maximum amount to which the monthly amount owed can ever rise over the life of the loan; whether the loan has a prepayment penalty, and if so, the maximum amount it could be; and whether the loan has a balloon payment, and if so, the amount of such payment and in how many years it will be due. Specific instructions are provided with respect to closed-end reverse mortgages.
- The "escrow account information" section requires the loan originator to indicate whether the loan does or does not have an escrow account to pay property taxes or other property related charges. In addition, this section also requires the disclosure of the monthly amount owed for principal, interest and any mortgage insurance. Specific instructions are provided with respect to closed-end reverse mortgages.
- The bottom of the first page includes subtotals for the adjusted origination charges and charges for all other settlement charges listed on page two, along with the total estimated settlement charges.

Second Page of GFE

The second page of the GFE requires disclosure of all settlement charges. It provides for the estimate of total settlement costs in eleven categories discussed below. The adjusted origination charges are disclosed in "Block A" and all other settlement charges are disclosed in "Block B." The amounts in the blocks are to be added to arrive at the "total estimated settlement charges" which is required to be listed at the bottom of the page.

Disclosure of Adjusted Origination Charge (Block A)

Block A addresses disclosure of origination charges, which include all lender and mortgage broker charges. The "adjusted origination charge" results from the subtraction of a "credit" from the "origination charge" or the addition of a "charge" to the origination charge.

- Block 1 – the origination charges, which include lender processing and underwriting fees and any fees paid to a mortgage broker.

Origination Charge Note: This block requires the disclosure of all charges that all loan originators involved in the transaction will receive for originating the loan (excluding any charges for points). A loan originator may not separately charge any additional fees for getting the loan such as application, processing or underwriting fees. The amount in Block 1 is subject to zero tolerance, i.e., the amount cannot change at settlement.

- Block 2 – a “credit” or “charge” for the interest rate chosen.

Credit or Charge for the Interest Rate Chosen Note:

Transaction Involving a Mortgage Broker. For a transaction involving a mortgage broker,[12] Block 2 requires disclosure of a “credit” or charge (points) for the specific interest rate chosen. The credit or charge for the specific interest rate chosen is the net payment to the mortgage broker (i.e., the sum of all payments to the mortgage broker from the lender, including payments based on the loan amount, a flat rate or any other compensation, and in a table funded transaction, the loan amount less the price paid for the loan by the lender.)

When the net payment to the mortgage broker from the lender is positive, there is a “credit” to the borrower and it is entered as a negative amount. For example, if the lender pays a yield spread premium to a mortgage broker for the loan set forth in the GFE, the payment must be disclosed as a “credit” to the borrower for the particular interest rate listed on the GFE (reflected on the GFE at Block 2, checkbox 2). The term “yield spread premium” is not featured on the GFE or the HUD-1 Settlement Statement.

Points paid by the borrower for the interest rate chosen must be disclosed as a “charge” (reflected on the GFE at Block 2, third checkbox). A loan cannot include both a charge (points) and a credit (yield spread premium).

Transaction Not Involving a Mortgage Broker. For a transaction without a mortgage broker, a lender may choose not to separately disclose any credit or charge for the interest rate chosen for the loan in the GFE. If the lender does not include any credit or charge in Block 2, it must check the first checkbox in Block 2 indicating that “The credit or charge for the interest rate you have chosen is included in ‘our origination charge’ above.” Only one of the boxes in Block 2 may be checked, as a credit and charge cannot occur together in the same transaction.

Disclosure of Charges for All Other Settlement Services (Block B)

Block B is the sum of charges for all settlement services other than the origination charges.

- Block 3 – required services by providers selected by the lender such as appraisal and flood certification fees.

[12] The 2008 RESPA Reform Rule changed the definition of “mortgage broker” to mean a person or entity (not an employee of a lender) that renders origination services and serves as an intermediary between a lender and a borrower in a transaction involving a federally related mortgage loan, including such person or entity that closes the loan in its own name and table funds the transaction. The definition will also apply to a loan correspondent approved under 24 CFR 202.8 for Federal Housing Administration (FHA programs). The definition would also include an “exclusive agent” who is not an employee of the lender.

- Block 4 – title service fees and the cost of lender’s title insurance.
- Block 5 – owner’s title insurance.
- Block 6 – other required services for which the consumer may shop.
- Block 7 – government recording charges.
- Block 8 – transfer tax charges.
- Block 9 – initial deposit for escrow account.
- Block 10 – daily interest charges.
- Block 11 – homeowner’s insurance charges.

Third Page of GFE

The third page of the GFE includes the following information:

- A tolerance chart identifying the charges that can change at settlement (see discussion on tolerances below);
- A trade-off table that requires the loan originator to provide information on the loan described in the GFE and at the loan originator’s option, information about alternative loans (one with lower settlement charges but a higher interest rate and one with a lower interest rate but higher settlement charges);
- A shopping chart that allows the consumer to fill in loan terms and settlement charges from other lenders or brokers to use to compare loans; and
- Language indicating that some lenders may sell the loan after settlement, but that any fees the lender receives in the future cannot change the borrower’s loan or the settlement charges.

Tolerances on Settlement Costs – 12 CFR 1024.7(e) and (i)

The 2008 RESPA Reform Rule established “tolerances” or limits on the amount actual settlement charges can vary at closing from the amounts stated on the GFE. The rule established three categories of settlement charges and each category has different tolerances. If, at settlement, the charges exceed the charges listed on the GFE by more than the permitted tolerances, the loan originator may cure the tolerance violation by reimbursing to the borrower the amount by which the tolerance was exceeded, at settlement or within 30 calendar days after settlement.

Tolerance Categories

- Zero tolerance category. This category of fees is subject to a zero tolerance standard. The fees estimated on the GFE may not be exceeded at closing. These fees include:

- The loan originator's own origination charge, including processing and underwriting fees;
- The credit or charge for the interest rate chosen (i.e., yield spread premium or discount points) while the interest rate is locked;
- The adjusted origination charge while the interest rate is locked; and
- State/local property transfer taxes.

- Ten percent tolerance category. For this category of fees, while each individual fee may increase or decrease, the sum of the charges at settlement may not be greater than 10 percent above the sum of the amounts included on the GFE. This category includes fees for:
  - Loan originator required settlement services, where the loan originator selects the third-party settlement service provider;
  - Loan originator required services, title services, required title insurance and owner's title insurance when the borrower selects a third-party provider identified by the loan originator; and
  - Government recording charges.
- No tolerance category. The final category of fees is not subject to any tolerance restriction. The amounts charged for the following settlement services included on the GFE can change at settlement and the amount of the change is not limited:
  - Loan originator required services where the borrower selects his or her own third-party provider;
  - Title services, lender's title insurance, and owner's title insurance when the borrower selects his or her own provider;
  - Initial escrow deposit;
  - Daily interest charges; and
  - Homeowner's insurance.

Identification of Third-Party Settlement Service Providers

When the loan originator permits a borrower to shop for one or more required third-party settlement services and select the settlement service provider for such required services, the loan originator must list in the relevant block on page two of the GFE the settlement service and the estimated charge to be paid to the provider of each required service. In addition, the loan originator must provide the borrower with a written list of settlement service providers for those required services on a separate sheet of paper at the time the GFE is provided.

Binding GFE – 12 CFR 1024.7(f)

The loan originator is bound, within the tolerances provided, to the settlement charges and terms listed on the GFE provided to the borrower, unless a new GFE is provided prior to settlement (see discussion below on changed circumstances). This also means that if a lender accepts a GFE issued by a mortgage broker, the lender is subject to the loan terms and settlement charges listed in the GFE, unless a new GFE is issued prior to settlement.

Changed Circumstances – 12 CFR 1024.2(b), 1024.7(f)(1) and (f)(2)

Changed circumstances are defined as:

- Acts of God, war, disaster, or other emergency;
- Information particular to the borrower or transaction that was relied on in providing the GFE that changes or is found to be inaccurate after the GFE has been provided;
- New information particular to the borrower or transaction that was not relied on in providing the GFE; or
- Other circumstances that are particular to the borrower or transaction, including boundary disputes, the need for flood insurance, or environmental problems.

Changed circumstances do not include the borrower's name, the borrower's monthly income, the property address, an estimate of the value of the property, the mortgage loan amount sought, and any information contained in any credit report obtained by the loan originator prior to providing the GFE, unless the information changes or is found to be inaccurate after the GFE has been provided. In addition, market price fluctuations by themselves do not constitute changed circumstances.

Changed circumstances affecting settlement costs are those circumstances that result in increased costs for settlement services such that the charges at settlement would exceed the tolerances or limits on those charges established by the regulations.

Changed circumstances affecting the loan are those circumstances that affect the borrower's eligibility for the loan. For example, if underwriting and verification indicate that the borrower is ineligible for the loan provided in the GFE, the loan originator would no longer be bound by the original GFE. In such cases, if a new GFE is to be provided, the loan originator must do so within three business days of receiving information sufficient to establish changed circumstances. The loan originator must document the reason that a new GFE was provided and must retain documentation of any reasons for providing a new GFE for no less than three years after settlement.

None of the information collected by the loan originator prior to issuing the GFE may later become the basis for a "changed circumstance" upon which it may offer a revised GFE, unless: it can demonstrate 1) that there was a change in the particular information; 2) that the information was inaccurate; or 3) that it did not rely on that particular information in issuing the GFE. A loan originator has the burden of demonstrating nonreliance on the collected information, but may do so through various means including through a documented record in the underwriting file or an established policy of relying on a more limited set of information in providing GFEs.

If a loan originator issues a revised GFE based on information previously collected in issuing the original GFE and "changed circumstances," it must document the reasons for issuing the revised GFE, such as its nonreliance on such information or the inaccuracy of such information.

Borrower Requested Changes – 12 CFR 1024.7(f)(3)

If a borrower requests changes to the mortgage loan identified in the GFE that change the settlement charges or the terms of the loan, the loan originator may provide a revised GFE to the borrower. If a revised GFE is provided, the loan originator must do so within three business days of the borrower's request.

Expiration of Original GFE – 12 CFR 1024.7(f)(4)

If a borrower does not express an intent to continue with an application within 10 business days after the GFE is provided, or such longer time provided by the loan originator, the loan originator is no longer bound by the GFE.

Interest Rate Dependent Charges and Terms – 12 CFR 1024.7(f)(5)

If the interest rate has not been locked by the borrower, or a locked interest rate has expired, all interest rate-dependent charges on the GFE are subject to change. The charges that may change include the charge or credit for the interest rate chosen, the adjusted origination charges, per diem interest, and loan terms related to the interest rate. However, the loan originator's origination charge (listed in Block 1 of page two of the GFE) is not subject to change, even if the interest rate floats, unless there is another changed circumstance or borrower-requested change.

If the borrower later locks the interest rate, a new GFE must be provided showing the revised interest rate dependent charges and terms. All other charges and terms must remain the same as on the original GFE, unless changed circumstances or borrower-requested changes result in increased costs for settlement services or affect the borrower's eligibility for the specific loan terms identified in the original GFE.

New Home Purchases – 12 CFR 1024.7(f)(6)

In transactions involving new home purchases, where settlement is expected to occur more than 60 calendar days from the time a GFE is provided, the loan originator may provide the GFE to the borrower with a clear and conspicuous disclosure stating that at any time up until 60 calendar days prior to closing, the loan originator may issue a revised GFE. If the loan originator does not provide such a disclosure, it cannot issue a revised GFE except as otherwise provided in Regulation X.

Volume-Based Discounts

The 2008 RESPA Reform Rule did not formally address the legality of volume-based discounts. However, HUD indicated in the preamble to the rule that discounts negotiated between loan originators and other settlement service providers, where the discount is ultimately passed on to the borrower in full, is not, depending on the circumstances of a particular transaction, a violation of Section 8 of RESPA.[13]

Uniform Settlement Statement (HUD-1 OR HUD-1A) – 12 CFR 1024.8

For closed-end reverse mortgages, the person conducting the settlement (settlement agent) must provide the borrower with a HUD-1 Settlement Statement at or before settlement that clearly itemizes all charges imposed on the buyer and the seller in connection with the settlement. The 2008 RESPA Reform rule included a revised HUD-1/1A Settlement Statement form that is required as of January 1, 2010. The HUD-1 is used for transactions in which there is a borrower and seller. For transactions in which there is a borrower and no seller (refinancings and subordinate lien loans), the HUD-1 may be completed by using the borrower's side of the settlement statement. Alternatively, the HUD-1A may be used.

However, no settlement statement is required for home equity plans subject to TILA and Regulation Z, Appendix A to 12 CFR 1024 contains the instructions for completing the forms.

Key 2008 RESPA Reform Enhancements to the HUD-1/1A Settlement Statement

While the 2008 RESPA Reform Rule did not include any substantive changes to the first page of the HUD-1/1A form, there were changes to the second page of the form to facilitate comparison between the HUD-1/1A and the GFE. Each designated line on the second page of the revised HUD-1/1A includes a reference to the relevant line from the GFE.

With respect to disclosure of "no cost" loans where "no cost" refers only to the loan originator's fees (see Section L, Subsection 800 of the HUD-1 form), the amounts shown for the "origination charge" and the "credit or charge for the interest rate chosen" should offset, so that the "adjusted origination charge" is zero.

In the case of a "no cost" loan where "no cost" encompasses loan originator and third-party fees, all third-party fees must be itemized and listed in the borrower's column on the HUD-1/1A. These itemized charges must be offset with a negative adjusted origination charge (Line 803) and recorded in the columns.

To further facilitate comparability between the forms, the revised HUD-1 includes a third page (second page of the HUD-1A) that allows borrowers to compare the loan terms and settlement charges listed on the GFE with the terms and charges listed on the closing statement. The first half of the third page includes a comparison chart that sets forth the settlement charges from the GFE and the settlement charges from the HUD-1 to allow the borrower to easily determine whether the settlement charges exceed the charges stated on the GFE. If any charges at settlement exceed the charges listed on the GFE by more than the permitted tolerances, the loan originator may cure the tolerance violation by reimbursing to the borrower the amount by which the tolerance was exceeded. A borrower will be deemed to have received timely reimbursement if the financial institution delivers or places the payment in the mail within 30 calendar days after settlement.

Inadvertent or technical errors on the settlement statement are not deemed to be a violation of Section 4 of RESPA if a revised HUD-1/1A is provided to the borrower within 30 calendar days after settlement.

The second half of the third page sets forth the loan terms for the loan received at settlement in a format that reflects the summary of loan terms on the first page of the GFE, but with additional loan related information that would be available at closing. The note at the bottom of the page indicates that the borrower should contact the lender if the borrower has questions about the settlement charges or loan terms listed on the form.

12 CFR 1024.8(b) and the instructions for completing the HUD-1/1A Settlement Statement provide that the loan originator shall transmit sufficient information to the settlement agent to allow the settlement agent to complete the “loan terms” section. The loan originator must provide the information in a format that permits the settlement agent to enter the information in the appropriate spaces on the HUD-1/1A, without having to refer to the loan documents.

Average Charge Permitted

As of January 16, 2009, an average charge may be stated on the HUD-1/1A if such average charge is computed in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.8(b)(2). All settlement service providers, including loan originators, are permitted to list the average charge for a settlement service on the HUD-1/1A Settlement Statement (and on the GFE) rather than the exact cost for that service.

The method of determining the average charge is left up to the settlement service provider. The average charge may be used as the charge for any third-party vendor charge, not for the provider’s own internal charges. The average charge also cannot be used where the charge is based on the loan amount or the value of the property.

The average charge may be used for any third-party settlement service, provided that the total amounts received from borrowers for that service for a particular class of transactions do not exceed the total amounts paid to providers of that service for that class of transactions. A class of transactions may be defined based on the period of time, type of loan and geographic area. If an average charge is used in any class of transactions defined by the loan originator, then the loan originator must use the same average charge for every transaction within that class. The average charge must be recalculated at least every six months.

A settlement service provider that uses an average charge for a particular service must maintain all documents that were used to calculate the average charge for at least three years after any settlement in which the average charge was used.

Printing and Duplication of the Settlement Statement – 12 CFR 1024.9

Financial institutions have numerous options for layout and format in reproducing the HUD-1 and HUD-1A that do not require prior CFPB approval such as size of pages; tint or color of pages; size and style of type or print; spacing; printing on separate pages, front and back of a single page or on one continuous page; use of multi-copy tear-out sets; printing on rolls for computer purposes; addition of signature lines; and translation into any language. Other changes may be made only with the approval of the CFPB.

One-Day Advance Inspection of the Settlement Statement – 12 CFR 1024.10

For closed-end reverse mortgages, and upon request by the borrower, the HUD-1 or HUD-1A must be completed and made available for inspection during the business day immediately preceding the day of settlement, setting forth those items known at that time by the person conducting the closing.

Delivery – 12 CFR 1024.10(a) and (b)

The completed HUD-1 or HUD-1A must be mailed or delivered to the borrower, the seller (if there is one), the lender (if the lender is not the settlement agent), and/or their agents at or before settlement. However, the borrower may waive the right of delivery by executing a written waiver at or before settlement. The HUD-1 or HUD-1A shall be mailed or delivered as soon as practicable after settlement if the borrower or borrower's agent does not attend the settlement.

Retention – 12 CFR 1024.10(e)

A lender must retain each completed HUD-1 or HUD-1A and related documents for five years after settlement, unless the lender disposes of its interest in the mortgage and does not service the mortgage. If the loan is transferred, the lender shall provide a copy of the HUD-1 or HUD-1A to the owner or servicer of the mortgage as part of the transfer. The owner or servicer shall retain the HUD-1 or HUD-1A for the remainder of the five-year period.

Prohibition of Fees for Preparing Federal Disclosures – 12 CFR 1024.12

For loans subject to RESPA, no fee may be charged for preparing the Settlement Statement or the Escrow Account statement or any disclosures required by TILA.

Prohibition Against Kickbacks and Unearned Fees – 12 CFR 1024.14

Any person who gives or accepts a fee, kickback, or thing of value (payments, commissions, gifts, tangible item or special privileges) for the referral of settlement business is in violation of Section 8(a) of RESPA. Any person who gives or accepts any portion, split, or percentage of a charge for real estate settlement services, other than for services actually performed, is in violation of Section 8(b) of RESPA. Appendix B of Regulation X provides guidance on the meaning and coverage of the prohibition against kickbacks and unearned fees.

RESPA Section 8(b) is not violated when a single party charges and retains a settlement service fee, and that fee is unearned or excessive.

Penalties and Liabilities

Civil and criminal liability is provided for violating the prohibition against kickbacks and unearned fees including:

- Civil liability to the parties affected, equal to three times the amount of any charge paid for such settlement service.
- The possibility that the costs associated with any court proceeding together with reasonable attorney's fees could be recovered.
- A fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year or both.

Affiliated Business Arrangements – 12 CFR 1024.15

If a loan originator (or an associate)[14] has either an affiliate relationship or a direct or beneficial ownership interest of more than one percent in a provider of settlement services and the loan originator directly or indirectly refers business to the provider it is an affiliated business arrangement. An affiliated business arrangement is not a violation of Section 8 of RESPA and of 12 CFR 1024.14 of Regulation X if the following conditions are satisfied.

Prior to the referral, the person making each referral has provided to each person whose business is referred an Affiliated Business Arrangement Disclosure Statement (Appendix D of Regulation X). This disclosure shall specify the following:

- The nature of the relationship (explaining the ownership and financial interest) between the provider and the loan originator; and
- The estimated charge or range of charges generally made by such provider.

[14] An associate includes a corporation or business entity that controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with the institution; an employer, officer, director, partner, franchisor, or franchisee of the institution; or anyone with an arrangement with the institution that enables the person to refer settlement business and benefit financially from the referrals. 12 U.S.C. 2602(8).

This disclosure must be provided on a separate piece of paper either at the time of loan application, or with the GFE, or at the time of the referral.

The loan originator may not require the use of such a provider, with the following exceptions: the institution may require a buyer, borrower, or seller to pay for the services of an attorney, credit reporting agency, or real estate appraiser chosen by the institution to represent its interest. The loan originator may only receive a return on ownership or franchise interest or payment otherwise permitted by RESPA.

Title Insurance Companies – 12 CFR 1024.16

Sellers that hold legal title to the property being sold are prohibited from requiring borrowers, either directly or indirectly, as a condition to selling the property, to use a particular title insurance company.

Escrow Accounts – 12 CFR 1024.17

On October 26, 1994, HUD issued its final rule changing the accounting method for escrow accounts, which was originally effective April 24, 1995. The final rule established a national standard accounting method, known as aggregate accounting. The final rule also established formats and procedures for initial and annual escrow account statements.

The amount of escrow funds that can be collected at settlement or upon creation of an escrow account is restricted to an amount sufficient to pay charges, such as taxes and insurance, that are attributable to the period from the date such payments were last paid until the initial payment date. Throughout the life of an escrow account, the servicer may charge the borrower a monthly sum equal to one-twelfth of the total annual escrow payments that the servicer reasonably anticipates paying from the account. In addition, the servicer may add an amount to maintain a cushion no greater than one-sixth of the estimated total annual payments from the account.

Starting April 19, 2018, a servicer must treat a confirmed successor in interest as a borrower for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.17 and for Subpart C’s provisions.

Escrow Account Analysis – 12 CFR 1024.17(c)(2) and (3) and 12 CFR 1024.17(k)

Before establishing an escrow account, a servicer must conduct an analysis to determine the periodic payments and the amount to be deposited. The servicer shall use an escrow disbursement date that is on or before the deadline to avoid a penalty and may make annual lump sum payments to take advantage of a discount.

Transfer of Servicing – 12 CFR 1024.17(e)

If the new servicer changes either the monthly payment amount or the accounting method used by the old servicer, then it must provide the borrower with an initial escrow account statement within 60 days of the date of transfer. When the new servicer provides an initial escrow account statement, it shall use the effective date of the transfer of servicing to establish the new escrow account computation year. In addition, if the new servicer retains the monthly payments and accounting method used by the old servicer, then the new servicer may continue to use the same computation year established by the old servicer or it may choose a different one, using a short year statement.

Shortages, Surpluses, and Deficiency Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.17(f)

The servicer shall conduct an annual escrow account analysis to determine whether a surplus, shortage, or deficiency exists as defined under 12 CFR 1024.17(b).

If the escrow account analysis discloses a surplus, the servicer shall, within 30 days from the date of the analysis, refund the surplus to the borrower if the surplus is greater than or equal to $50. If the surplus is less than $50, the servicer may refund such amount to the borrower, or credit such amount against the next year's escrow payments. These provisions apply as long as the borrower's mortgage payment is current at the time of the escrow account analysis.

If the escrow account analysis discloses a shortage of less than one month's escrow payments, then the servicer has three possible courses of action:

- The servicer may allow the shortage to exist and do nothing to change it,
- The servicer may require the borrower to repay the shortage amount within 30 days, or
- The servicer may require the borrower to repay the shortage amount in equal monthly payments over at least a 12-month period.

If the shortage is more than or equal to one month's escrow payment, then the servicer has two possible courses of action:

- The servicer may allow the shortage to exist and do nothing to change it, or
- The servicer may require the borrower to repay the shortage in equal monthly payments over at least a 12-month period.

If the escrow account analysis discloses a deficiency, then the servicer may require the borrower to pay additional monthly deposits to the account to eliminate the deficiency.

If the deficiency is less than one month's escrow account payment, then the servicer;

- May allow the deficiency to exist and do nothing to change it,
- May require the borrower to repay the deficiency within 30 days, or
- May require the borrower to repay the deficiency in two or more equal monthly payments.

If the deficiency is greater than or equal to one month's escrow payment, the servicer may allow the deficiency to exist and do nothing to change it, or require the borrower to repay the deficiency in two or more equal monthly payments.

These provisions apply as long as the borrower's mortgage payment is current at the time of the escrow account analysis.

A servicer must notify the borrower at least once during the escrow account computation year if a shortage or deficiency exists in the account.

Initial Escrow Account Statement – 12 CFR 1024.17(g)

After analyzing each escrow account, the servicer must submit an initial escrow account statement to the borrower at settlement or within 45 calendar days of settlement for escrow accounts that are established as a condition of the loan.

The initial escrow account statement must include the monthly mortgage payment; the portion going to escrow; itemize estimated taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges; the anticipated disbursement dates of those charges; the amount of the cushion; and a trial running balance.

Annual Escrow Account Statement – 12 CFR 1024.17(i)

A servicer shall submit to the borrower an annual statement for each escrow account within 30 days of the completion of the computation year. The servicer must conduct an escrow account analysis before submitting an annual escrow account statement to the borrower.

The annual escrow account statements must contain the account history; projections for the next year; current mortgage payment and portion going to escrow; amount of past year's monthly mortgage payment and portion that went into the escrow account; total amount paid into the escrow account during the past year; amount paid from the account for taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges; balance at the end of the period; explanation of how the surplus, shortage, or deficiency is being handled; and, if applicable, the reasons why the estimated low monthly balance was not reached.

Short-Year Statements – 12 CFR 1024.17(i)(4)

Short-year statements can be issued to end the escrow account computation year and establish the beginning date of the new computation year. Short-year statements may be provided upon the transfer of servicing and are required upon loan payoff. The statement is due to the borrower within 60 days after receiving the pay-off funds.

Timely Payments – 12 CFR 1024.17(k)

The servicer must pay escrow disbursements by the disbursement date. In calculating the disbursement date, the servicer must use a date on or before the deadline to avoid a penalty and may make annual lump sum payments to take advantage of a discount. A servicer may not purchase force-placed insurance unless it is unable to disburse funds from the borrower's escrow account to maintain the borrower's hazard insurance. A servicer is unable to disburse funds only if the servicer has a reasonable basis to believe that either the borrower's property is vacant or the borrower's hazard insurance has terminated for reasons other than non-payment. A servicer is not unable to disburse funds from the borrower's escrow account solely because the account is deficient. If a servicer advances funds to an escrow account to ensure that the borrower's hazard insurance premium charges are paid in a timely manner, a servicer may seek repayment from the borrower for the funds the servicer advanced, unless otherwise prohibited by applicable law.

Regulation X includes a limited exemption from the restriction on force-placed insurance purchases for small servicers. Subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1024.37, small servicers may purchase force-placed insurance and charge the borrower for the cost of that insurance if the cost to the borrower is less than the amount the small servicer would need to disburse from the borrower's escrow account to ensure timely payment of the borrower's hazard insurance premium charges.

An institution qualifies as a small servicer under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) if:

- The institution services, together with any affiliates, 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, for all of which the institution (or an affiliate) is the creditor or assignee;
- The institution is a Housing Finance Agency, as defined in 24 CFR 266.5 (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)); or
- The institution is a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit entity is the creditor.

The determination as to whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer is generally made based on the mortgage loans, as that term is used in 12 CFR 1026.41(a)(1), serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of that calendar year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. A servicer that ceases to qualify as a small servicer will have six months from the time it ceases to qualify or until the next January 1, whichever is later, to comply with any requirements from which the servicer is no longer exempt as a small servicer.

Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

For any application for a federally related mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.2 subject to the exemptions in 12 CFR 1024.5(b) (except for applications for reverse mortgages or timeshare loans), the lender must provide a loan applicant with a clear and conspicuous written list of homeownership counseling services in the loan applicant's location, no later than three business days after a lender, mortgage broker, or dealer receives an application or information sufficient to complete an application. The list is available on a website maintained by the CFPB, or from data made available by the CFPB or HUD.

Lenders must make sure that the list of homeownership counseling services was obtained no earlier than 30 days before they provide it to the applicant. This list may be combined with other disclosures (unless otherwise prohibited by Regulation X or Regulation Z). A mortgage broker or dealer that receives a loan application, or for whom it prepares an application, may provide the list, in which case the lender is not required to provide an additional list, though in all cases the lender remains responsible for ensuring that the list is provided to the applicant. The list may be provided in person, by mail or other means. The list may be provided in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of E-Sign.

If, before the three-day period ends, the lender denies the application or the applicant withdraws it, the lender does not have to provide the list. If the transaction involves more than one lender, the lenders should agree on which of them will provide the list. If there is more than one applicant, the list can go to any one of them that has primary liability on the loan.

Subpart C – Mortgage Servicing

Scope – 12 CFR 1024.30

Except as otherwise noted below, the provisions of Subpart C – Mortgage Servicing, 12 CFR 1024.30-41, apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31. The procedures set forth in 12 CFR 1024.39-1024.41 regarding early intervention, continuity of contact, and loss mitigation only apply to a mortgage loan secured by a property that is the borrower's principal residence. If a property ceases to be a borrower's principal residence, the procedures set forth in the early intervention provisions (12 CFR 1024.39), the continuity of contact provisions (12 CFR 1024.40), and the loss mitigation provisions (12 CFR 1024.41) do not apply to the mortgage loan secured by the property. (Comment 30(c)(2)-1). The determination of principal residence status will depend on the specific facts and circumstances regarding the property and applicable state law. For example, a vacant property may still be a borrower's principal residence. (Comment 30(c)(2)-1).

Starting April 19, 2018, a servicer must treat a confirmed successor in interest as a borrower under Subpart C's provisions and under the escrow account requirements in 12 CFR 1024.17. Further, a servicer that is a debt collector under the FDCPA with respect to a mortgage loan does not violate the FDCPA Section 805(b)'s prohibition on communicating with third parties by communicating with a confirmed successor in interest in compliance with the mortgage servicing rules because "consumer" for purposes of FDCPA Section 805 includes any person who meets the definition in this part of confirmed successor in interest. (Comment 30(d)-1).[15]

Definitions – 12 CFR 1024.31

Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.31 contains definitions that are applicable to Subpart C – Mortgage Servicing, 12 CFR 1024.30-41. Among other definitions, Regulation X provides that "mortgage loan" means "any federally related mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.2 subject to the exemptions in 12 CFR 1024.5(b), but does not include open-end lines of credit (home equity plans)." Thus, the term "mortgage loan" includes (but is not limited to) refinancing transactions, whether secured by a senior or subordinate lien.

The 2016 Servicing Rule establishes definitions of "successor in interest" and "confirmed successors in interest," and provides that the latter are considered "borrowers" for the purposes of Regulation X's mortgage servicing provisions. The 2016 Servicing Rule also adds a new definition of "delinquency."

Successors in Interest (Effective April 19, 2018)

"Successor in interest" means a person to whom an ownership interest in a property securing a mortgage loan if the transfer is:

(1) A transfer by devise, descent, or operation of law on the death of a joint tenant or tenant by the entirety;

(2) A transfer to a relative resulting from the death of a borrower;

(3) A transfer where the spouse or children of the borrower become an owner of the property;

(4) A transfer resulting from a decree of a dissolution of marriage, legal separation agreement, or from an incidental property settlement agreement, by which the spouse of the borrower becomes an owner of the property; or

(5) A transfer into an inter vivos trust in which the borrower is and remains a beneficiary and which does not relate to a transfer of rights of occupancy in the property.

"Confirmed successor in interest" means a successor in interest once a servicer has confirmed the successor in interest's identity and ownership interest in a property that secures a mortgage loan subject to Subpart C of Regulation X.

[15] See also the 2016 FDCPA Interpretive Rule (81 Fed. Reg. 71977, 71979).

Delinquency

The definition of "delinquency" applies to the servicing provisions in Subpart C of Regulation X and the provisions regarding periodic statements for mortgage loans in Regulation Z.[16] Under the definition, a borrower and a borrower's mortgage loan obligation are delinquent beginning on the date a payment sufficient to cover principal, interest, and, if applicable, escrow, becomes due and unpaid, and the borrower remains delinquent until such time as no periodic payment is due and unpaid (even if the borrower is afforded a period after the due date to pay before the servicer assesses a late fee).

If a servicer applies payments to the oldest outstanding payment, a payment by a delinquent borrower advances the date the borrower's delinquency began. For example, assume a borrower's mortgage loan requires borrower to make periodic payments of principal, interest, and escrow by the first of each month. The borrower fails to make a payment on January 1 or on any day in January, and on January 31 the borrower is 30 days delinquent. On February 3, the borrower makes a periodic payment. The servicer applies the payment it received on February 3 to the outstanding January payment. On February 4, the borrower is three days delinquent. (Comment 31-2).

Further, if a servicer chooses to accept a payment that is less than the periodic payment due without considering the borrower delinquent for purposes of any provisions in Subpart C, the borrower is not delinquent for any other provisions in the Subpart. (Comment 31-3).[17]

Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.32(a)

Disclosures required under 12 CFR 1024.30-.41 must be clear and conspicuous, in writing, and in a form that a recipient may keep. The disclosures may be provided in electronic form, subject to consumer consent and the provisions of E-Sign,[18] and a servicer may use commonly accepted or readily understandable abbreviations. Disclosures may be made in a language other than English, provided that they are made in English upon a recipient's request.

[16] For purposes of periodic statements for residential mortgage loans under Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8), the length of a consumer's delinquency is measured as of the date of the periodic statement or the date of the written notice provided under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(3)(iv). A consumer's delinquency begins on the date an amount sufficient to cover a periodic payment of principal, interest, and escrow, if applicable, becomes due and unpaid, even if the consumer is afforded a period after the due date to pay before the servicer assesses a late fee. A consumer is delinquent if one or more periodic payments of principal, interest, and escrow, if applicable, are due and unpaid. (Comment 1026.41(d)(8)-1).

[17] A creditor is not prevented from exercising a right provided by a mortgage loan contract to accelerate payment for a breach of that contract. Failure to pay the amount due after the creditor accelerates the mortgage loan obligation in accordance with the mortgage loan contract would begin or continue delinquency. (Comment 31-4).

Additional Information, Disclosures Required by Other Laws – 12 CFR 1024.32(b)

Servicers may include additional information in disclosures required under 12 CFR 1024.30-41 or combine these disclosures with any disclosure required by other law unless doing so is expressly prohibited by 12 CFR 1024.30-41, by other applicable law (such as TILA or the Truth in Savings Act), or by the terms of an agreement with a federal or state regulatory agency.

Successors in Interest – 12 CFR 1024.32(c) (Effective April 19, 2018)

Under 12 CFR 1024.32(c), servicers have the option to provide a written notice and acknowledgment form to confirmed successors in interest who have not assumed the mortgage loan and are not otherwise liable on it. Among other things, the written notice must explain that the confirmed successor in interest may be entitled to receive certain notices and communications about the mortgage loan if the servicer is not providing them to another confirmed successor in interest or borrower on the account. The notice also must explain that in order to receive such notices and communications, the successor in interest must execute and provide to the servicer the acknowledgment form.

Servicers that send this type of notice and acknowledgement form are not required to provide to the confirmed successor in interest any written disclosure required by 12 CFR 1024.17, 1024.33, 1024.34, 1024.37, or 1024.39, or to comply with the live contact requirements in 12 CFR 1024.39(a) with respect to the confirmed successor in interest until the confirmed successor in interest either assumes the mortgage loan or executes the acknowledgment form.

Regardless of whether the confirmed successor in interest executes the acknowledgment form, the written notice must state the successor in interest is entitled to submit notices of error under 12 CFR 1024.35, requests for information under 12 CFR 1024.36, and requests for a payoff statement under 12 CFR 1026.36 with respect to the mortgage loan account, and the notice must include a brief explanation of those rights and how to exercise them, including appropriate address information.

Furthermore, except as required by 12 CFR 1024.36, a servicer is not required to provide to a confirmed successor in interest any written disclosure required by 12 CFR 1024.17, 1024.33, 1024.34, 1024.37, or 1024.39(b) if the servicer is providing the same specific disclosure to another borrower on the account. A servicer is also not required to comply with the live contact requirements in 12 CFR 1024.39(a) with respect to a confirmed successor in interest if the servicer is complying with those requirements with respect to another borrower on the account. A confirmed successor in interest who does not receive servicing communications because the servicer is providing them to another borrower on the account can request additional information as needed through the request for information process under Regulation X.

Mortgage Servicing Transfer Disclosures – 12 CFR 1024.33

The disclosures related to the transfer of mortgage servicing generally are required for any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, except that the servicing disclosure statement required under 12 CFR 1024.33(a) is required only for reverse mortgage transactions.

Servicing Disclosure Statement – 12 CFR 1024.33(a)

A lender, mortgage broker who anticipates using table funding, or dealer in a first-lien dealer loan that receives an application for a reverse mortgage transaction is required to provide the servicing disclosure statement to the borrower within three days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receipt of the application. The disclosure statement must advise whether the servicing of the mortgage loan may be assigned, sold, or transferred to any other person at any time. A model disclosure statement is set forth in Appendix MS-1.

If the institution denies the borrower's application within the three-day period, it is not required to provide the disclosure statement.

Notices of Transfer of Loan Servicing – 12 CFR 1024.33(b)

When any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, is assigned, sold or transferred, the transferor (former servicer) generally must provide a disclosure at least 15 days before the effective date of the transfer. Generally, a transfer of servicing notice from the transferee (new servicer) must be provided not more than 15 days after the effective date of the transfer. Generally, both notices may be combined into one notice if delivered to the borrower at least 15 days before the effective date of the transfer. Notices provided at the time of settlement satisfy the timing requirements.

The disclosure must include:

- The effective date of the transfer;
- The name, address, and toll-free or collect-call telephone number for an employee or department of the transferee servicer that can be contacted by the borrower to obtain answers to servicing transfer inquiries;
- The name, address, and toll-free or collect-call telephone number for an employee or department of the transferor servicer that can be contacted by the borrower to obtain answers to servicing transfer inquiries;
- The date on which the transferor servicer will cease accepting payments relating to the loan, and the date on which the transferee servicer will begin to accept such payments. The dates must be either the same or consecutive dates;

- Whether the transfer will affect the terms or the availability of optional insurance and any action the borrower must take to maintain such coverage; and
- A statement that the transfer does not affect the terms or conditions of the mortgage (except as directly related to servicing).

Servicers may use the disclosure in Appendix MS-2 to comply with the mortgage servicing transfer disclosure.

The following transfers are not considered an assignment, sale, or transfer of mortgage loan servicing for purposes of this requirement if there is no change in the payee, address to which payment must be delivered, account number, or amount of payment due:

- Transfers between affiliates;
- Transfers resulting from mergers or acquisitions of servicers or subservicers; and
- Transfers between master servicers, when the subservicer remains the same.

Additionally, the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) is not required to provide a notice of transfer to the borrower where a mortgage insured under the National Housing Act is assigned to FHA.

Borrower Payments During Transfer of Servicing – 12 CFR 1024.33(c)

During the 60-day period beginning on the date of transfer, no late fee or other penalty can be imposed on a borrower who has made a timely payment to the transferor servicer (former servicer). Additionally, if the transferor servicer (former servicer) receives any incorrect payments on or after the effective date of the transfer, the transferor servicer must either transfer the payment to the transferee servicer (new servicer) or return the payment and inform the payor of the proper recipient of the payment.

Servicers must comply with requirements concerning the treatment of escrow funds, which apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31.

If the terms of a mortgage loan require the borrower to make payments to the servicer for deposit into an escrow account to pay taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges, the servicer shall make payments from the escrow account in a timely manner. A payment is made in a timely manner if it is made on or before the deadline to avoid a penalty.

Generally, the servicer must return any amounts remaining in escrow within the servicer’s control within 20 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after the borrower pays the mortgage loan in full, unless the borrower and servicer agree to credit the remaining funds towards an escrow account for certain new mortgage loans. The rule does not prohibit servicers from netting any funds remaining in an escrow account against the outstanding balance of the borrower's mortgage loan.

Error Resolution Procedures – 12 CFR 1024.35

Servicers must comply with error resolution procedures that are triggered when a borrower submits an error notice to the servicer. The requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1024.35 apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31.

The CFPB has issued an advisory opinion clarifying that, because borrowers initiate the error resolution process, a servicer's communications with a borrower regarding an error notice are not subject to the "cease communication" provision of the FDCPA unless the borrower specifically withdraws the request for action regarding the error.[19]

Notice of Error – 12 CFR 1024.35(a)

An error notice must be in writing and identify the borrower's name, information that allows the servicer to identify the borrower's account, and the alleged error. A qualified written request that asserts an error relating to the servicing of a mortgage loan is an error notice, and the servicer must comply with all of the error notice requirements with respect to such qualified written request.

The commentary clarifies that a servicer should not rely solely on the borrower's description of a submission to determine whether it is an error notice, an information request, or both. For example, a borrower may submit a letter titled "Notice of Error" that indicates that the borrower wants to receive the information set forth in an annual escrow account statement and asserts an error for the servicer's failure to provide that statement. Such a letter could be both an error notice and an information request, and the servicer must evaluate whether the letter fulfills the substantive requirements of an error notice, information request, or both.

Scope of Error Resolution – 12 CFR 1024.35(b)

The error resolution procedures apply to the following alleged errors:

- Failure to accept a payment that complies with the servicer's written requirements;
- Failure to apply an accepted payment to principal, interest, escrow, or other charges as required by the mortgage loan and applicable law;
- Failure to credit a payment to the borrower's account as of the date the servicer received it, as required by 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1);
- Failure to pay taxes, insurance premiums, or other charges by the due date, as required by 12 CFR 1024.34(a);

[19] CFPB Bulletin 2013-12.

- Failure to refund an escrow account balance within 20 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after the borrower pays the mortgage loan in full, as required by 12 CFR 1024.34(b);
- Imposition of a fee or charge without a reasonable basis to do so;
- Failure to provide an accurate payoff balance amount upon the borrower's request, as required by 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(3);
- Failure to provide accurate information to a borrower regarding loss mitigation options and foreclosure, as required by 12 CFR 1024.39;
- Failure to transfer accurate and timely information relating to servicing to a transferee servicer;
- Making the first notice or filing for a judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process before the time periods allowed by 12 CFR 1024.41(f) and (j);
- Moving for foreclosure judgment or order of sale or conducting a foreclosure sale in violation of 12 CFR 1024.41(g) or (j); and
- Any other error relating to the servicing of a borrower's mortgage loan.

The commentary gives examples of errors not covered by 12 CFR 1024.35(b), such as errors relating to: (i) the origination of a mortgage loan; (ii) the underwriting of a mortgage loan; (iii) a subsequent sale or securitization of a mortgage loan; and (iv) a determination to sell, assign, or transfer the servicing of a mortgage loan (unless it concerns the failure to transfer accurate and timely information relating to the servicing of the borrower's mortgage loan account to a transferee servicer).

Contact Information – 12 CFR 1024.35(c)

If the servicer establishes an address to which borrowers must send error notices, the servicer must provide written notice of the address to the borrower with specified content. The commentary states that the servicer must also include this address on the following communications: (i) any periodic statement or coupon book required under 12 CFR 1026.41; (ii) any website the servicer maintains in connection with the servicing of the loan; and (iii) any notice required pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.39 (early intervention) or 12 CFR 1024.41 (loss mitigation) that includes contact information for assistance. The servicer must use the same address for receiving information requests under 12 CFR 1024.36(b), and provide written notice to the borrower before changing the address to which the borrower must send error notices.

Acknowledgement of Receipt – 12 CFR 1024.35(d)

The servicer generally must provide a written acknowledgment to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the error notice.

Response to an Error Notice – 12 CFR 1024.35(e)

A servicer generally has 30 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) from receipt of the error notice to investigate and respond to the notice, except that a servicer may extend this period by an additional 15 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) if, prior to the expiration of the original 30-day period, it notifies the borrower in writing of the extension and the reasons for it.

A servicer must respond within seven days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) if the alleged error is a failure to provide an accurate payoff balance amount, and a servicer must respond by the earlier of 30 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) or the date of a foreclosure sale if the error involves either (i) making the first notice or filing for a judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process before the time periods allowed by 12 CFR 1024.41(f) or (j), or (ii) moving for foreclosure judgment or order of sale or conducting a foreclosure sale in violation of 12 CFR 1024.41(g) or (j).

In response to the notice of error, the servicer must either correct the error or conduct a reasonable investigation and determine that no error occurred. The servicer must also send a written response to the borrower that accomplishes one of the following:

- If the servicer corrects the alleged error. The servicer must advise the borrower of the correction and when the correction took effect, and provide contact information, including phone number, for further assistance;

- If the servicer determines that it committed an error or errors different than or in addition to those identified by the borrower. The servicer must correct the error and advise the borrower of the correction and when the correction took effect, and provide contact information, including phone number, for further assistance; or

- If the servicer determines after a reasonable investigation that no error occurred. The servicer must state that it determined that no error occurred, the reasons for its determination, and the borrower's right to request documents relied upon by the servicer in reaching its determination and how the borrower can make such a request, and provide contact information, including phone number, for further assistance. If the borrower requests those documents, the servicer generally must provide them within 15 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) at no cost to the borrower. The servicer need not provide documents that constitute confidential, proprietary, or privileged information.

Furthermore, servicers responding to a notice of error request for documentation may omit location, contact, and personal financial information (other than information about the terms, status, and payment history of the mortgage loan) if: (i) the information pertains to a potential or confirmed successor in interest who is not the requester; or (ii) the requester is a confirmed successor in interest and the information pertains to any borrower who is not the requester. (Effective April 19, 2018).

As a part of its investigation of the asserted error, the servicer may request supporting documentation from the borrower, but the servicer must conduct a reasonable investigation even if the borrower does not provide supporting documentation.

Early Correction or Error Asserted Before Foreclosure Sale – 12 CFR 1024.35(f)

A servicer is not required to provide the five-day acknowledgement notice (12 CFR 1024.35(d)) or the response notice (12 CFR 1024.35(e)) if either:

- The servicer corrects the asserted errors and notifies the borrower of the correction within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the error notice; or
- The servicer receives the error notice seven or fewer days before a foreclosure sale and the asserted error concerns the timing of the foreclosure process under 12 CFR 1024.35(b)(9) or (10). In this instance, the servicer must make a good faith attempt to respond to the borrower, either orally or in writing, and either correct the error or state the reason the servicer has determined that no error occurred.

Requirements Not Applicable – 12 CFR 1024.35(g)

A servicer does not need to provide the five-day acknowledgement notice (12 CFR 1024.35(d)), provide the response notice (12 CFR 1024.35(e)), or refrain from providing adverse information to credit reporting agencies for 60 days (12 CFR 1024.35(i)), if the servicer reasonably determines any of the following apply:

- Duplicative notice of error. The asserted error is substantially the same as a previously-asserted error for which the servicer complied with the obligation to respond, unless the borrower provides new and material information to support the asserted error. New and material information is information that is reasonably likely to change the servicer's prior determination about the error;
- Overbroad notice of error. The error notice is overbroad if the servicer cannot reasonably determine the specific alleged error. The commentary provides examples of overbroad notices, including those that assert errors regarding substantially all aspects of the mortgage loan (including origination, servicing, and foreclosure), notices that resemble legal pleadings and demand a response to each numbered paragraph, or notices that are not reasonably understandable or contain voluminous tangential information such that a servicer cannot reasonably identify from the notice any error that requires a response. Note that if a servicer concludes an error notice as submitted is overbroad, the servicer must still provide a five-day acknowledgment notice and a subsequent response to the extent the servicer can identify an appropriate error notice within the submission; or

- Untimely notice of error. The error notice is sent more than one year after either the mortgage loan was discharged or the servicer receiving the notice of error transferred the mortgage loan to another servicer. For purposes of this provision, a mortgage loan is discharged when both the debt and all corresponding liens have been extinguished or released, as applicable.

If a servicer determines that any of these three exceptions apply, it must provide written notice to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after making that determination, including the basis relied upon.

Payment Requirements Prohibited – 12 CFR 1024.35(h)

A servicer may not charge a fee or require a borrower to make any payments as a condition to responding to an error notice.

Effect on Servicer Remedies – 12 CFR 1024.35(i)

In the 60-day period after receiving an error notice, a servicer may not furnish adverse information to any consumer reporting agency regarding any payment that is the subject of the error notice.

Requests for Information – 12 CFR 1024.36

Servicers must follow certain procedures in response to a borrower's written request for information with respect to the borrower's mortgage loan. The request must include the borrower's name, information that allows the servicer to identify the borrower's account, and the requested information related to the borrower's mortgage loan. The request can be from the borrower or the borrower's agent; a servicer may undertake reasonable procedures to determine if an alleged agent has authority from the borrower to act as the borrower's agent. A qualified written request that requests information relating to the servicing of a mortgage loan is an information request, and the servicer must comply with all of the information request requirements with respect to such a qualified written request.

The requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1024.36 apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31.

The CFPB has issued an advisory opinion clarifying that, because borrowers initiate requests for information, a servicer's communications with a borrower regarding such a request for information are not subject to the FDCPA's "cease communication" provision, unless the borrower specifically withdraws the information request.[20]

Contact Information – 12 CFR 1024.36(b)

If the servicer establishes an address to which borrowers must send information requests, the servicer must provide written notice of the address to the borrower with specified information. The commentary states that the servicer must also include this address on the following communications: (i) any periodic statement or coupon book required under 12 CFR 1026.41; (ii) any website the servicer maintains in connection with the servicing of the loan; and (iii) any notice required pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.39 (early intervention) or 12 CFR 1024.41 (loss mitigation) that includes contact information for assistance. The servicer must use the same address for receiving error notices under 12 CFR 1024.35(b), and provide written notice to the borrower before changing the address to which the borrower must send information requests.

Acknowledgement of Receipt – 12 CFR 1024.36(c)

The servicer generally must provide a written acknowledgment to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the information request.

Response to Information Request – 12 CFR 1024.36(d)

A servicer generally must respond in writing to an information request within 30 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) of receipt, except that a servicer may extend this period by an additional 15 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) if, prior to the expiration of the original 30-day period, it notifies the borrower in writing of the extension and the reasons for it. A servicer must respond within 10 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the request, if the borrower requested the identity or contact information for the owner or assignee of a mortgage loan.

The servicer must respond in writing by either:

- Providing the requested information and contact information, including phone number, for further assistance; or

- Conducting a reasonable search for the information and advising the borrower that the servicer has determined that the requested information is not available to it, the basis for the servicer's determination, and contact information, including phone number, for further assistance.

Information is not available if it is not in the servicer's control or possession, or the servicer cannot retrieve it in the ordinary course of business through reasonable efforts. The commentary gives examples of when information is or is not available.

In its response to a request for information, a servicer may omit location, contact, and personal financial information (other than information about the terms, status, and payment history of the mortgage loan) if: (i) the information pertains to a potential or confirmed successor in interest who is not the requester; or (ii) the requester is a confirmed successor in interest and the information pertains to any borrower who is not the requester. (12 CFR 1024.36(d)(3)). (Effective April 19, 2018).

Early Response – 12 CFR 1024.36(e)

The five-day receipt acknowledgement (12 CFR 1024.36(c)) and the response (12 CFR 1024.36(d)) requirements do not apply if the servicer provides the requested information and contact information, including phone number, for further assistance within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the information request.

Requirement Not Applicable – 12 CFR 1024.36(f)

The five-day receipt acknowledgement (12 CFR 1024.36(c)) and the response notice (12 CFR 1024.36(d)) requirements also do not apply if the servicer reasonably determines any of the following exceptions apply:

- The information requested is substantially the same information that the borrower previously requested.
- The information requested is confidential, proprietary, or privileged.
- The information requested is not directly related to the borrower's mortgage loan account. The commentary provides examples of irrelevant information, including information related to the servicing of mortgage loans other than the borrower's loan and investor instructions or requirements for servicers regarding the negotiation or approval of loss mitigation options.
- The information request is overbroad or unduly burdensome. A request is overbroad if the borrower requests that the servicer provide an unreasonable volume of documents or information. A request is unduly burdensome if a diligent servicer could not respond within the time periods set forth in 12 CFR 1024.36(d)(2) or would incur costs (or have to dedicate resources) that would be unreasonable in light of the circumstances. The commentary provides examples of overbroad or unduly burdensome requests, such as requests that seek documents relating to substantially all aspects of mortgage origination, mortgage servicing, mortgage sale or securitization, and foreclosure, as well as requests that require servicers to provide information in a specific format or seek information that is not reasonably likely to assist the borrower. If an information request as submitted is overbroad or unduly burdensome, the servicer must still provide the five-day acknowledgment of receipt and subsequent response if the servicer can reasonably identify an appropriate information request within the submission.
- The information request is sent more than one year after either the mortgage loan was discharged or the servicer receiving the information request transferred the mortgage loan to another servicer. For purposes of this provision, a mortgage loan is discharged when both the debt and all corresponding liens have been extinguished or released, as applicable.

If a servicer determines that any of these five exceptions apply, it must provide written notice to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after making that determination, including the basis relied on.

Payment Requirement Limitations – 12 CFR 1024.36(g)

A servicer generally may not charge a fee, or require a borrower to make any payment that may be owed on a borrower's account, as a condition of responding to an information request. A servicer may charge for providing a beneficiary notice under applicable state law, if such a fee is not otherwise prohibited by applicable law.

Potential Successors in Interest – 12 CFR 1024.36(i) (Effective April 19, 2018)

A servicer must respond to a written request from a person indicating that the person may be a successor in interest if the request includes the name of the transferor borrower from whom the person received an ownership interest and information that enables the servicer to identify the mortgage loan. The response must generally provide a written description of the documents the servicer reasonably requires to confirm the person's identity and ownership interest in the property as well as contact information, including a telephone number, for further assistance. With respect to the written request, a servicer must treat the potential successor in interest as a borrower for the purposes of 12 CFR1024.36(c) through 1024.36(g).

A servicer must respond to such a request not later than the time limits set forth in 12 CFR 1024.36(d)(2) for information requests. Depending on the facts and circumstances of the request, responding promptly may require a servicer to respond more quickly than the time limits established in 12 CFR 1024.36(d)(2). (Comment 36(i)-2).

Under 12 CFR 1024.38(b)(1)(vi)(B), a servicer, other than a small servicer, must maintain policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to promptly facilitate communication with potential successors in interest and promptly confirm a potential successor in interest's identity and ownership interest in the property securing the mortgage loan.

Servicers must comply with restrictions on obtaining and assessing charges and fees for force-placed insurance, defined as hazard insurance that a servicer obtains on behalf of the owner or assignee to insure the property securing the mortgage loan (but does not include (i) flood insurance required by the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973, (ii) hazard insurance obtained by a borrower but renewed by the borrower's servicer in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.17(k)(1), (2), or (5), or (iii) hazard insurance obtained by a borrower but renewed by the borrower's servicer with the borrower's agreement). The requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1024.37 apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31.

The CFPB has issued an advisory opinion clarifying that, because the Dodd-Frank Act specifically mandates certain disclosures regarding force-placed insurance without any mention of the FDCPA's "cease communication" provisions, a servicer acting as a debt collector does not violate the FDCPA's "cease communication" provision by providing the notices required under 12 CFR 1024.37.[21]

Requirements Before Charging For Force-placed Insurance – 12 CFR 1024.37(b), (c), (d)

Servicers may not assess charges or fees for force-placed insurance unless the servicer satisfies four requirements.

First, the servicer must have a reasonable basis to believe that the borrower has failed to maintain required hazard insurance. The commentary states that information about a borrower's hazard insurance received by the servicer from the borrower, the borrower's insurance provider, or the borrower's insurance agent, may provide a servicer with a reasonable basis. If a servicer receives no such information, the servicer may satisfy the reasonable basis standard if the servicer acts with reasonable diligence to ascertain the borrower's hazard insurance status and does not receive evidence of hazard insurance.

Second, the servicer must mail or deliver an initial written notice to the borrower at least 45 days before assessing a charge or fee related to force-placed insurance. The servicer's notice must identify the following:

- The date of the notice;
- The servicer's name and mailing address;
- The borrower's name and mailing address;
- A statement requesting that the borrower provide hazard insurance information for the borrower's property and identifying the property by its physical address;
- A statement that the borrower's hazard insurance has expired, is expiring, or provides insufficient coverage, as applicable; that the servicer lacks evidence that the borrower has hazard insurance coverage past the expiration date or lacks evidence of sufficient coverage, as applicable; and if applicable, identifies the type of hazard insurance lacking;
- A statement that hazard insurance is required on the borrower's property and that the servicer has purchased or will purchase insurance at the borrower's expense;
- A request that the borrower promptly provide the servicer with insurance information;
- A description of the requested insurance information and how the borrower may provide such information, and if applicable, that the requested information must be in writing;

[21] CFPB Bulletin 2013-12.

- A statement that the insurance coverage the servicer has purchased or will purchase may cost significantly more than, and provide less coverage than, hazard insurance purchased by the borrower;
- The servicer's phone number for borrower inquiries; and
- A statement advising that the borrower review additional information provided in the same transmittal (if applicable).

The servicer cannot provide any information on the initial notice other than the specific statements listed above and, at the servicer's option, the loan account number. The servicer, however, can provide additional information on separate pages of paper contained in the same mailing. Certain information must be provided in bold text. Appendix MS-3(A) contains a form notice that servicers may use.

Third, the servicer must send a reminder notice at least 30 days after the initial notice is mailed or delivered and at least 15 days before the servicer assesses charges or fees. If the servicer has received no hazard insurance information in response to the initial notice described above, the reminder notice must contain the date of the reminder notice and all of the other information provided in the initial notice, as well as (i) advise that it is a second and final notice, and (ii) identify the annual cost of force-placed insurance, or if unknown, a reasonable estimate of that cost.

If the servicer has received hazard insurance information but not evidence that sufficient coverage has been in place continuously, the reminder notice must identify the following:

- The date of the notice;
- The servicer's name and mailing address;
- The borrower's name and mailing address;
- A statement requesting that the borrower provide hazard insurance information for the borrower's property and that identifies the property by its physical address;
- A statement that the insurance coverage the servicer has purchased or will purchase may cost significantly more than, and provide less coverage than, hazard insurance purchased by the borrower;
- The servicer's phone number for borrower inquiries;
- A statement advising that the borrower review additional information provided in the same transmittal (if applicable);
- A statement that it is the second and final notice;
- The annual cost of force-placed insurance, or if unknown, a reasonable estimate of that cost;

- A statement that the servicer has received the hazard insurance information that the borrower provided;
- A request that the borrower provide the missing information; and
- A statement that the borrower will be charged for insurance the servicer purchases during the time period in which the servicer cannot verify coverage.

The servicer cannot provide any additional information on the reminder notice other than specific statements listed above and, at the servicer's option, the loan account number. The servicer, however, can provide additional information on separate pages of paper contained in the same transmittal. Certain information must be provided in bold text. Appendix MS-3 contains sample reminder notices at forms MS-3(B) and MS-3(C). If a servicer receives new information about a borrower's hazard insurance after the required written notice has been put into production, the servicer is not required to update the notice if the written notice was put into production a reasonable time prior to the servicer delivering the notice to the borrower or placing the notice in the mail. For purposes of 12 CFR 1024.37(d)(5), five days (excluding legal holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) is a reasonable time. (Comment 37(d)(5)-1).

Fourth, by the end of the 15-day period beginning on the date the servicer delivers the reminder notice or places it in the mail, the servicer must not have received evidence that the borrower has had required hazard insurance continuously in place. As evidence, the servicer may require a copy of the borrower's hazard insurance policy declaration page, the borrower's insurance certificate, the borrower's insurance policy, or other similar forms of written confirmation.

Renewing Force-Placed Insurance – 12 CFR 1024.37(e)

A servicer must comply with two requirements before assessing charges or fees on a borrower to renew or replace existing force-placed insurance.

First, the servicer must provide written notice at least 45 days before assessing a premium charge or fee. This renewal notice must provide the following information:

- The date of the renewal notice;
- The servicer's name and mailing address;
- The borrower's name and mailing address;
- A request that the borrower update the hazard insurance information and that identifies the property by its physical address;
- A statement that the servicer previously purchased force-placed insurance at the borrower's expense because the servicer did not have evidence that the borrower had hazard insurance coverage;

- A statement that the force-placed insurance is expiring or has expired and that the servicer intends to renew or replace it because hazard insurance is required on the property;
- A statement that the insurance coverage the servicer has purchased or will purchase may cost significantly more than, and provide less coverage than, hazard insurance purchased by the borrower, and identifying the annual cost (or if unknown, a reasonable estimate) of force-placed insurance;
- A statement that if the borrower purchases hazard insurance, the borrower should promptly advise the servicer;
- A description of the requested insurance information and how the borrower may provide such information, and if applicable, that the requested information must be in writing;
- The servicer's telephone number for borrower inquiries; and
- A statement advising the borrower to review additional information provided in the same transmittal (if applicable).

The servicer cannot provide any additional information on the renewal notice other than the specific statements listed above, and, at the servicer's option, the loan account number. The servicer, however, can provide additional information on separate pages of paper contained in the same transmittal. Certain information must be provided in bold text. Appendix MS-3(D) contains a form notice that servicers may use.

Second, by the end of the 45-day period beginning on the date the written notice was delivered or placed in the mail, the servicer must not have received evidence demonstrating that the borrower has purchased required hazard insurance coverage.

Notwithstanding these two requirements, if not prohibited by state or other applicable law, if the servicer receives evidence that the borrower lacked insurance for some period of time after the existing force-placed insurance expired, the servicer may promptly assess a premium charge or fee related to renewing or replacing the existing force-placed insurance for that period of time.

The servicer must mail or deliver the renewal notice before each anniversary of purchasing force-placed insurance, though the servicer need not send the renewal notice more than once per year.

Mailing the Notices – 12 CFR 1024.37(f)

If the servicer mails the initial notice, the reminder notice, or the renewal notice, the servicer must use at least first-class mail.

Canceling Force-Placed Insurance – 12 CFR 1024.37(g)

If the servicer receives evidence that the borrower has had required hazard insurance coverage in place, then the servicer has 15 days to cancel the force-placed insurance, refund force-placed insurance premium charges and fees for the period of overlapping insurance coverage, and remove all force-placed charges and fees from the borrower's account for that period.

Limitations on Force-Placed Insurance – 12 CFR 1024.37(h)

All charges that a servicer assesses on a borrower related to force-placed insurance must be bona fide and reasonable, except for charges subject to state regulation and charges authorized by the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973. A bona fide and reasonable charge is one that is reasonably related to the servicer's cost of providing the service and is not otherwise prohibited by law.

General Servicing Policies, Procedures, and Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.38

Servicers must maintain policies and procedures reasonably designed to achieve certain servicing-related objectives, and are subject to requirements regarding record retention and the ability to create servicing files.

These requirements apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, except that they do not apply to (i) small servicers, (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, or (iii) mortgage loans for which the servicer is a qualified lender.

As noted above, an institution qualifies as a small servicer under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) if it (a) services, together with any affiliates, 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, for all of which the institution (or an affiliate) is the creditor or assignee, (b) is a Housing Finance Agency, as defined in 24 CFR 266.5, or (c) is a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit entity is the creditor.

The determination as to whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer is generally made based on the mortgage loans, as that term is used in 12 CFR 1026.41(a)(1), serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of that calendar year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year.

A servicer that ceases to qualify as a small servicer will have six months from the time it ceases to qualify or until the next January 1, whichever is later, to comply with any requirements from which the servicer is no longer exempt as a small servicer.

As specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

Qualified lenders are those defined to be qualified lenders under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and the Farm Credit Administration's accompanying regulations set forth at 12 CFR 617.7000 et seq.[22]

Reasonable Policies and Procedures – 12 CFR 1024.38(a)

Servicers must maintain policies and procedures reasonably designed to meet the objectives identified in 12 CFR 1024.38(b). Servicers may determine the specific policies and procedures they will adopt and the methods for implementing them in light of the size, nature, and scope of the servicers' operations, including, for example, the volume and aggregate unpaid principal balance of mortgage loans serviced, the credit quality (including the default risk) of the mortgage loans serviced, and the servicer's history of consumer complaints. "Procedures" refer to the servicer's actual practices for achieving the objective.

Objectives – 12 CFR 1024.38(b)

Servicers are required to maintain policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to achieve the following objectives.

1. Accessing and providing timely and accurate information. The servicer's policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer can:

    a. Provide accurate and timely disclosures to the borrower.

    b. Investigate, respond to, and make corrections in response to borrowers' complaints. These policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer can promptly obtain information from service providers to facilitate investigation and correction of errors resulting from actions of service providers.

    c. Provide a borrower with accurate and timely information and documents in response to the borrower's request for information with respect to the borrower's mortgage loan.

[22] 12 CFR 617.7000 defines a qualified lender as (i) a system institution (except a bank for cooperatives) that extends credit to a farmer, rancher, or producer or harvester of aquatic products for any agricultural or aquatic purpose and other credit needs of the borrower, and (ii) other financing institutions with respect to loans discounted or pledged under Section 1.7(b)(1)(B) of the Farm Credit Act.

d. Provide owners and assignees of mortgage loans with accurate information and documents about all the mortgage loans that they own. This includes information about a servicer's evaluations of borrowers for loss mitigation options and a servicer's loss mitigation agreements with borrowers, including loan modifications. Such information includes, for example: (a) a loan modification's date, terms, and features; (b) the components of any capitalized arrears; (c) the amount of any servicer advances; and (d) any assumptions regarding the value of property used in evaluating any loss mitigation options.

e. Submit documents or filings required for a foreclosure process, including documents or filings required by a court, that reflect accurate and current information and that comply with applicable law.

f. 1. Upon notification of a borrower's death, promptly identify and facilitate communication with the borrower's successor in interest concerning the secured property. (Effective until April 19, 2018).

2. Upon receiving notice of a borrower's death or of any transfer of the secured property, promptly facilitate communication with any potential or confirmed successors in interest regarding the property. (Effective April 19, 2018).

g. Upon receiving notice of the existence of a potential successor in interest, promptly determine the documents the servicer reasonably requires to confirm the person's identity and ownership interest in the property (see commentary to 12 CFR 1024.38(b)(1)(vi) for illustrative examples) and promptly provide to the potential successor in interest a description of those documents and how the person may submit a written request under 12 CFR 1024.36(i). (Effective April 19, 2018).

h. Upon the receipt of such documents, promptly make a confirmation determination and promptly notify the person, as applicable, that the servicer has confirmed the person's status, has determined that additional documents are required (and what those documents are), or has determined that the person is not a successor in interest. (Effective April 19, 2018).

2. Properly evaluating loss mitigation applications. The servicer's policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer can:

- Provide accurate information regarding loss mitigation options available to the borrower from the owner or assignee of the borrower's loan.
- Identify specifically all loss mitigation options available to a borrower from the owner or assignee of the borrower's mortgage loan. This includes identifying, with respect to each owner or assignee all of the loss mitigation options the servicer may consider when evaluating a borrower, as well as the criteria the servicer should apply for each option. The policies and procedures should be reasonably designed to address how the servicer will apply any specific thresholds for eligibility for particular loss mitigation options established by an owner or assignee of a mortgage loan (e.g., if the owner requires that a particular option be limited to a certain percentage of loans, then the policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to determine in advance how the servicer will apply that threshold). The policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that such information is readily accessible to the servicer's loss mitigation personnel.

- Provide the loss mitigation personnel assigned to the borrower's mortgage loan with prompt access to all of the documents and information that the borrower submitted in connection with a loss mitigation option.
- Identify the documents and information a borrower must submit to complete a loss mitigation application, and facilitate compliance with the notice required pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B).
- In response to a complete loss mitigation application, properly evaluate the borrower for all eligible loss mitigation options pursuant to any requirements established by the owner or assignee of the mortgage loan, even if those requirements are otherwise beyond the requirements of 12 CFR 1024.41. For example, an owner or assignee may require that the servicer review a loss mitigation application submitted less than 37 days before a foreclosure sale or re-evaluate a borrower who has demonstrated a material change in financial circumstances.
- Promptly identify and obtain documents or information not in the borrower's control that the servicer requires to determine which loss mitigation options, if any, to offer the borrower in accordance with the requirements of 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4).

3. Facilitating oversight of, and compliance by, service providers. The servicer's policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer can:

- Provide appropriate personnel with access to accurate and current documents and information concerning service providers' actions.
- Facilitate periodic reviews of service providers.
- Facilitate the sharing of accurate and current information regarding the status of any evaluation of a borrower's loss mitigation application and any foreclosure proceeding among appropriate servicer personnel, including the loss mitigation personnel assigned the borrower's mortgage loan, and appropriate service provider personnel, including service provider personnel responsible for handling foreclosure proceedings.
    - Further, a servicer's policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that servicer personnel promptly inform service provider personnel handling foreclosure proceedings that the servicer has received a complete loss mitigation application and promptly instruct foreclosure counsel to take any step required by 12 CFR 1024.41(g)—which generally sets forth limitations on moving for judgment or order of sale, or conducting a foreclosure sale—sufficiently timely to avoid violating the prohibition against moving for judgment or order of sale, or conducting a foreclosure sale. (Comment 38(b)(3)(iii)-1).

4. Facilitating transfer of information during servicing transfers.

- Transferor Servicer. The servicer's policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that when it transfers a mortgage loan to another servicer, it (i) timely and accurately transfers all information and documents in its possession and control related to a transferred mortgage loan to the transferee servicer, and (ii) transfers the information and documents in a form and manner that ensures their accuracy and that allows the transferee to comply with the terms of the mortgage loan and applicable law. For example, where data is transferred electronically, a transferor servicer must have policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that data can be properly and promptly boarded by a transferee servicer's electronic systems. The information that must be transferred includes information reflecting the current status of discussions with the borrower concerning loss mitigation options, any loss mitigation agreements entered into with the borrower, and analysis the servicer performed with respect to potential recovery from a non-performing mortgage loan.

- Transferee Servicer. The servicer's policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that when it receives a mortgage loan from another servicer, it can (i) identify necessary documents or information that may not have been transferred, and (ii) obtain such documentation or information from the transferor servicer. The servicer's policies and procedures must also be reasonably designed to address obtaining missing information regarding loss mitigation from the transferor servicer before attempting to obtain it from the borrower. For example, if a servicer receives information indicating that a borrower has made payments consistent with a trial or permanent loan modification but the servicer has not received information about the actual modification, the servicer must have policies and procedures reasonably designed to identify whether any such modification agreement exists and to obtain any such agreement from the transferor servicer.

5. Informing borrowers of the written error resolution and information request procedures.

- The servicer must have policies and procedures reasonably designed to inform borrowers of the procedures for submitting written error notices under 12 CFR 1024.35 and written information requests under 12 CFR 1024.36. A servicer may comply with these requirements by informing borrowers of these procedures by notice (mailed or delivered electronically) or a website. For example, a servicer may comply with this provision by including a statement in the 12 CFR 1026.41 periodic statement advising borrowers that they have certain rights under federal law related to resolving errors and requesting information, that they may learn more about their rights by contacting the servicer, and directing borrowers to a website.

- A servicer's policies and procedures also must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer provides borrowers who are dissatisfied with the servicer's response to oral complaints or information requests with information about submitting a written error notice or written information request.

- The commentary addresses the circumstance in which a borrower incorrectly submits an error notice to any address given to the borrower in connection with the submission of a loss mitigation application or continuity of contact. A servicer's policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer informs a borrower of the correct procedures for submitting written error notices under such circumstances, including the correct address. Alternatively, the servicer could redirect the error notice to the correct address.

Standard Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.38(c)

Servicers must also retain certain records and maintain particular documents in a manner that facilitates compiling such documents and data into a servicing file.

Record Retention – 12 CFR 1024.38(c)(1)

Servicers must retain records that document any actions the servicer took with respect to a borrower's mortgage loan account until one year after the loan is discharged or the servicer transfers servicing for the mortgage loan. Servicers may use any retention method that reproduces records accurately (such as computer programs) and that ensures that a servicer can access the records easily (such as a contractual right to access records another entity holds).

Servicing File – 12 CFR 1024.38(c)(2)

Servicers must maintain the following documents and data in a manner that facilitates compiling such documents and data into a servicing file within five days: a schedule of all credits and debits to the account (including escrow accounts and suspense accounts), a copy of the security instrument establishing the lien securing the mortgage, any notes created by servicer personnel concerning communications with the borrower, a report of the data fields created by the servicer's electronic systems relating to the borrower's account (if applicable), and copies of any information or documents provided by the borrower in connection with error notices or loss mitigation.

For purposes of this section, a report of data fields relating to a borrower's account means a report listing the relevant data fields by name, populated with any specific data relating to the borrower's account. Examples of such data fields include fields used to identify the terms of the borrower's mortgage loan, the occurrence of automated or manual collection calls, the evaluation of borrower for a loss mitigation option, the owner or assignee of a mortgage loan, and any credit reporting history.

These requirements apply only to information created on or after January 10, 2014.

Early Intervention Requirements for Certain Borrowers – 12 CFR 1024.39

Servicers must engage in certain efforts to contact delinquent borrowers. These requirements apply to only those mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, that are secured by the borrower's principal residence. The requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, or (iii) mortgage loans for which the servicer is a qualified lender.

As noted above, an institution qualifies as a small servicer under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii) if it (a) services, together with any affiliates, 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, for all of which the institution (or an affiliate) is the creditor or assignee, (b) is a Housing Finance Agency, as defined in 24 CFR 266.5, or (c) is a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit entity is the creditor.

The determination as to whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer is generally made based on the mortgage loans, as that term is used in 12 CFR 1026.41(a)(1), serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of that calendar year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. A servicer that ceases to qualify as a small servicer will have six months from the time it ceases to qualify or until the next January 1, whichever is later, to comply with any requirements from which the servicer is no longer exempt as a small servicer.

As specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

Qualified lenders are those defined to be qualified lenders under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and the Farm Credit Administration's accompanying regulations set forth at 12 CFR 617.7000 et seq.

For purposes of this section, a borrower who is performing under a loss mitigation agreement is not considered delinquent and is not covered by this section.

Live Contact – 12 CFR 1024.39(a)

Servicers must make good faith efforts to establish live contact with a borrower no later than the 36th day of delinquency. The servicer's live contact requirement is continuous so long as the borrower remains delinquent.

Under 12 CFR 1024.31, "delinquency" for Subpart C's provisions means a period of time during which a borrower and a borrower's mortgage loan obligation are delinquent. A borrower and a borrower's mortgage loan obligation are delinquent beginning on the date a periodic payment sufficient to cover principal, interest, and, if applicable, escrow becomes due and unpaid, until such time as no periodic payment is due and unpaid. See also the related commentary to 1024.31 for more on the delinquency definition. Borrowers are not delinquent for purposes of early intervention requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39 if they are performing as agreed according to the terms of a loss mitigation plan designed to bring the borrower current on a previously missed payment, but they may be considered delinquent for other purposes under the servicing rules and may also become delinquent for purposes of early intervention requirements if and when they fail to make a payment required under such a plan.

The commentary also states that good faith efforts to establish live contact consist of "reasonable steps, under the circumstances," and these efforts "may include telephoning the borrower on more than one occasion or sending written or electronic communication encouraging the borrower to establish live contact with the servicer."

Promptly after establishing live contact, the servicer must inform the borrower of any loss mitigation options, if appropriate. It is within the servicer's reasonable discretion to determine whether it is appropriate under the circumstances to inform a borrower of the availability of loss mitigation options. Examples of a servicer making a reasonable determination include a servicer informing a borrower about loss mitigation options after the borrower notifies the servicer during live contact of a material adverse change in financial circumstances that is likely to cause a long-term delinquency for which loss mitigation options may be available, or a servicer not providing information about loss mitigation options to a borrower who has missed a January 1 payment and notified the servicer that the full late payment will be transmitted to the servicer by February 15.

If the servicer has established and is maintaining ongoing contact with the borrower under the loss mitigation procedures in 12 CFR 1024.41, including during the borrower's completion of a loss mitigation application or the servicer's evaluation of the borrower's complete loss mitigation application, or if the servicer has sent the borrower a notice pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)(ii) that the borrower is not eligible for any loss mitigation options, the servicer complies with its live contact requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(a) and need not otherwise establish or make good faith efforts to establish live contact. A servicer must resume compliance with the live contact requirements for a borrower who becomes delinquent again after curing a prior delinquency. (Comment 39(a)-6).

Servicers must send a borrower a written notice within 45 days after the borrower becomes delinquent and again no later than 45 days after each payment due date so long as the borrower remains delinquent. The written notice must encourage the borrower to contact the servicer, provide the servicer's telephone number and address to access assigned loss mitigation personnel, describe examples of loss mitigation options that may be available (if applicable), provide loss mitigation application instructions or advise how to obtain more information about loss mitigation options such as contacting the servicer (if applicable), and list either the CFPB's or HUD's website to access a list of homeownership counselors or counseling organization and HUD's toll-free number to access homeownership counselors or counseling organizations.

Appendix MS-4 contains model clauses at MS-4(A), MS-4(B), MS-4(C), and MS-4(D) that servicers subject to the FDCPA can use to comply with a new disclosure requirement for the written notice, as discussed more below.

A servicer is not required to provide the written notice under this section to a borrower more than once in any 180-day period. For example, a servicer who provided the written notice to the borrower within 45 days after the borrower became delinquent on January 1 would not be required to send another written notice if the borrower failed to make the February 1 payment. If a borrower is 45 days or more delinquent at the end of any 180-day period after the servicer has provided the written notice, a servicer must provide the written notice again no later than 180 days after the provision of the prior written notice. If the borrower is less than 45 days delinquent at the end of that period, a servicer must provide the notice again no later than 45 days after the payment due date for which the borrower remains delinquent.

A transferee servicer is required to provide the written notice to the borrower regardless of whether the transferor servicer provided a written notice in the preceding 180-day period. However, a transferee servicer is not required to provide a written notice if the transferor servicer provided one within 45 days of the transfer date. For example, assume a borrower has monthly payments, with a payment due on March 1. The transferor servicer provides the notice required by 12 CFR 1024.39(b) on April 10. The loan is transferred on April 12. Assuming the borrower remains delinquent, the transferee servicer is not required to provide another written notice until 45 days after May 1, the first post-transfer payment due date—i.e., by June 15. (Comment 39(b)(1)-5).

Borrowers in bankruptcy – 12 CFR 1024.39(c))

Partial Exemption

Servicers are exempt from complying with the live contact obligations under 12 CFR 1024.39(a) while any borrower on a mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the United States Code, with regard to that mortgage loan. Servicers are also exempt from providing the written notice under 12 CFR 1024.39(b) while any borrower on a mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the United States Code, with regard to that mortgage loan, if no loss mitigation option is available or if any borrower on the mortgage loan has provided a cease communication notice under the FDCPA with respect to that mortgage loan (and the servicer is subject to the FDCPA for that loan).

If the above conditions relating to the written notice exemption are not met, and any borrower on the mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy, then the servicer must comply with modified written notice requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(b):

- Content:
  - The notice may not contain a request for payment.

- Timing:
  - If a borrower is delinquent when the borrower becomes a debtor in bankruptcy, the servicer must provide the written notice not later than the 45th day after the borrower files a bankruptcy petition under Title 11 of the United States Code.
  - However, if the borrower is not delinquent at the time of the bankruptcy petition filing, but subsequently becomes delinquent while a debtor in bankruptcy, the servicer must provide the written notice not later than the 45th day of the borrower's delinquency.
  - A servicer must comply with these timing requirements regardless of whether the servicer provided the written notice in the preceding 180-day period.
  - A servicer is not required to provide the written notice more than once during a single bankruptcy case.

Resuming Compliance

A servicer that was exempt from the live contact and written early intervention notice requirements must resume compliance with such requirements after the next payment due date that follows the earliest of the following events:

- The bankruptcy case is dismissed,
- The bankruptcy case is closed, and
- The borrower reaffirms personal liability for the mortgage loan.

A servicer is not required to resume compliance with the live contact requirements with respect to a mortgage loan for which the borrower has discharged personal liability pursuant to Sections 727, 1141, 1228, or 1328 of Title 11 of the United States Code, but must resume compliance with the written notice requirement if the borrower has made any partial or periodic payment on the mortgage loan after the commencement of the borrower's bankruptcy case.

Fair Debt Collections Practices Act Partial Exemption – 12 CFR 1024.39(d)

If a mortgage servicer is a debt collector under the FDCPA with regard to a borrower's mortgage loan, 12 CFR 1024.39(d) clarifies the servicer's early intervention obligations when that borrower has invoked cease communication protections by providing a notification pursuant to Section 805(c) of the FDCPA.

For such borrowers invoking their FDCPA cease communication protections, servicers are exempt from the live contact requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(a).

Servicers are also exempt from the written notice requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(b) when such a borrower on the loan has invoked the FDCPA cease communication protections and either of the following applies: (1) no loss mitigation option is available or (2) any borrower on the mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the United States Code. However, servicers are required to comply with modified written notice requirements if the borrower has invoked FDCPA cease communication protections and these conditions are not met (e.g., a loss mitigation option is available or no borrower on that loan is a debtor in bankruptcy):

- Content:
    - The modified written notice must include a statement that the servicer may or intends to invoke its remedy of foreclosure.
    - The written notice, however, may not contain a request for payment.

Servicers subject to the FDCPA can use MS-4(D) to comply with a new disclosure requirement for the written notice.

- Timing:
    - A servicer is prohibited from providing the written notice more than once during any 180-day period. If a borrower is 45 days or more delinquent at the end of any 180-day period after the servicer has provided the written notice, a servicer must provide the written notice again no later than 190 days after the provision of the prior written notice. If a borrower is less than 45 days delinquent at the end of any 180-day period after the servicer has provided the written notice, a servicer must provide the written notice again no later than 45 days after the payment due date for which the borrower remains delinquent or 190 days after the provision of the prior written notice, whichever is later.[23]

Further, such servicers do not violate FDCPA Section 805(c) with respect to the mortgage loan when providing the written early intervention notice required by 12 CFR 1024.39(b)(3), as modified by 12 CFR 1024.39(d)(3), to a borrower who has invoked the cease communication rights.[24] Nor does a servicer violate FDCPA Section 805(c) by providing loss mitigation information or assistance in response to a borrower-initiated communication after the borrower has invoked the cease communication rights.[25] A servicer subject to the FDCPA, however, must continue to comply with all other applicable provisions of the FDCPA, including restrictions on communications and prohibitions on harassment or abuse, false or misleading representations, and unfair practices.[26]

Continuity of Contact – 12 CFR 1024.40

Servicers must maintain policies and procedures to facilitate continuity of contact between the borrower and the servicer.

These requirements apply to only those mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, that are secured by the borrower's principal residence. The requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, or (iii) mortgage loans for which the servicer is a qualified lender.

As noted above, an institution qualifies as a small servicer if it (a) services, together with any affiliates, 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, for all of which the institution (or an affiliate) is the creditor or assignee, (b) is a Housing Finance Agency, as defined in 24 CFR 266.5, or (c) is a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit entity is the creditor. The determination as to whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer is generally made based on the mortgage loans, as that term is used in 12 CFR 1026.41(a)(1), serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of that calendar year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. A servicer that ceases to qualify as a small servicer will have six months from the time it ceases to qualify or until the next January 1, whichever is later, to comply with any requirements from which the servicer is no longer exempt as a small servicer.

As specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

General Continuity of Contact Policies and Procedures – 12 CFR 1024.40(a)

Servicers must have policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to assign personnel (one or more persons) to a delinquent borrower at the time the servicer provides the borrower with the written notice required under 12 CFR 1024.39(b), and in any event, not later than the 45th day of the borrower's delinquency. The assigned personnel should be available by telephone to answer the borrower's questions and assist the borrower with available loss mitigation options until the borrower makes two consecutive timely payments under a permanent loss mitigation agreement. If the borrower contacts the assigned personnel and does not receive an immediate live response, the servicer must have policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure the servicer can provide a live response in a timely manner.

Functions of Servicer Personnel – 12 CFR 1024.40(b)

The servicer must also maintain policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that the assigned personnel can perform certain functions, including: providing the borrower with accurate information about (1) loss mitigation options available to the borrower from the owner or assignee of the borrower's loan, (2) actions the borrower must take to be evaluated for such options, including the steps the borrower needs to take to submit a complete loss mitigation application and appeal a denial of a loan modification option (if applicable), (3) the status of any loss mitigation application the borrower has submitted, (4) the circumstances under which the servicer may refer the borrower's account to foreclosure, and (5) any loss mitigation deadlines.

The servicer must also have policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that assigned personnel are able to (1) timely retrieve a complete record of the borrower's payment history and all written information the borrower has provided to the servicer (or prior servicers) in connection with a loss mitigation application, (2) provide these documents to other people required to evaluate the borrower for loss mitigation options, if applicable, and (3) provide the borrower with information about submitting an error notice or information request under 12 CFR 1024.35 or 12 CFR 1024.36.

Servicers must comply with certain loss mitigation procedures. The procedures differ depending on how far in advance of foreclosure a borrower submits a loss mitigation application. Regulation X does not impose a duty on a servicer to provide any borrower with any specific loss mitigation option.

The requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1024.41 apply to only those mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, that are secured by the borrower's principal residence. Except as noted below in 12 CFR 1024.41(j), the requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, or (iii) mortgage loans for which the servicer is a qualified lender.

As noted above, an institution qualifies as a small servicer if it (a) services, together with any affiliates, 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, for all of which the institution (or an affiliate) is the creditor or assignee, (b) is a Housing Finance Agency, as defined in 24 CFR 266.5 or (c) is a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit entity is the creditor. The determination as to whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer is generally made based on the mortgage loans, as that term is used in 12 CFR 1026.41(a)(1), serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of that calendar year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. A servicer that ceases to qualify as a small servicer will have six months from the time it ceases to qualify or until the next January 1, whichever is later, to comply with any requirements from which the servicer is no longer exempt as a small servicer.

As specified in12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

Qualified lenders are those defined to be qualified lenders under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and the Farm Credit Administration's accompanying regulations set forth at 12 CFR 617.7000 et seq.

The CFPB issued an interpretive rule clarifying, among other things, that when a servicer that is a debt collector under the FDCPA with respect to a borrower's mortgage loan responds to a borrower-initiated communication concerning loss mitigation after the borrower's invocation of FDCPA Section 805(c)'s cease communication protections with regard to that loan, the servicer does not violate FDCPA Section 805(c) with respect to such communications as long as the servicer's response is limited to a discussion of any potentially available loss mitigation option.[27] Only if the borrower provides a communication to the servicer specifically withdrawing the request for loss mitigation does the cease communication prohibition apply to communicating about the specific loss mitigation action.

A servicer that receives a loss mitigation application at least 45 days before a foreclosure sale must take two steps. First, the servicer must promptly review the application to determine if it is complete. Second, the servicer must notify the borrower in writing within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) that, among other things, it has received the application and state whether it is complete or incomplete.

A loss mitigation application includes an oral or written request by the borrower where the borrower expresses an interest in applying for a loss mitigation option and provides information a servicer would evaluate in connection with a loss mitigation application. A loss mitigation application is considered expansively and includes any "prequalification" for a loss mitigation option. For example, if a borrower requests that a servicer determine whether the borrower is "prequalified" for a loss mitigation program by evaluating the borrower against preliminary criteria to determine eligibility for a loss mitigation option, the request constitutes a loss mitigation application. A loss mitigation application does not include oral inquiries about loss mitigation options where the borrower does not provide any information that the servicer would use to evaluate an application, including where the borrower requests information only about the application process but does not provide any information to the servicer.

Complete Loss Mitigation Application – 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1)

An application is complete when it contains all the information the servicer requires from the borrower to evaluate an application for loss mitigation options. (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1)). Upon receiving an application that is not complete, a servicer is generally required to exercise reasonable diligence[28] in obtaining documents and information to complete the application. A servicer has flexibility to establish its own application requirements, but, with certain exceptions, a servicer is generally prohibited from offering a loss mitigation based on an evaluation of any information provided by a borrower in connection with an incomplete loss mitigation application.

Review of Loss Mitigation Application Submission – 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)

As stated above, if the servicer receives a loss mitigation application 45 days or more before a foreclosure sale, the servicer must notify the borrower in writing within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) that it has received the application and state whether it is complete or incomplete. If the application is incomplete, the notice must advise (i) what additional documents or information are needed, and (ii) a reasonable date by which the borrower must submit them.

Generally, 30 days from the date the servicer provides the written notice is a "reasonable date." (Comment 41(b)(2)(ii)-1). Furthermore, the reasonable date must be no later than the earliest of:

- The date by which any document or information submitted by a borrower will be considered stale or invalid pursuant to any requirements applicable to any loss mitigation option available to the borrower,
- The date that is the 120th day of the borrower's delinquency,
- The date that is 90 days before a foreclosure sale,
- The date that is 38 days before a foreclosure sale.

(Comment 41(b)(2)(ii)-2).

A reasonable date, however, must never be less than seven days from the date on which the servicer provides the written notice. (Comment 41(b)(2)(ii)-3).

As explained above, servicers must exercise reasonable diligence in obtaining documents and information to complete an incomplete loss mitigation application (e.g., promptly contacting the borrower to obtain missing information or determining whether information exists in the servicer's files already that may provide the information missing from the borrower's application). (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1)).

In the course of gathering documents and information from a borrower to complete a loss mitigation application, a servicer may stop collecting documents and information for a particular loss mitigation option after receiving information confirming that, pursuant to any requirements established by the owner or assignee of the borrower's mortgage loan, the borrower is ineligible for that option. A servicer may not stop collecting documents and information for any loss mitigation option based solely upon the borrower's stated preference. The servicer, however, may stop collecting documents and information for any loss mitigation option based on the borrower's stated preference in conjunction with other information, as prescribed by any requirements established by the owner or assignee. A servicer must continue to exercise reasonable diligence to obtain documents and information from the borrower that the servicer requires to evaluate the borrower as to all other loss mitigation options available to the borrower. (Comment 41(b)(1)-1).

For example, assume applicable requirements established by the owner or assignee provide that a borrower is not eligible for home retention options if the borrower states a preference for a short sale and provides evidence of another applicable hardship, such as military Permanent Change of Station orders or a specified employment transfer more than 50 miles away. If the borrower indicates a preference for a short sale, the servicer may not stop collecting documents and information pertaining to available home retention options solely because the borrower has indicated the preference. The servicer, however, may stop collecting such documents and information once it receives information confirming that the borrower meets the applicable hardship standards.

If a servicer has informed a borrower that the application was complete (or identified particular information needed to complete the application), and the servicer subsequently determines that additional information or corrected documents are required, the servicer must promptly request such information or documents from the borrower and treat the application as complete under 12 CFR 1024.41(f)(2) and (g) until the borrower is given a reasonable opportunity to complete the application.

Calculating Time Periods and Determining Protections – 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(3)

12 CFR 1024.41 provides borrowers certain protections depending on whether the servicer received a complete loss mitigation application at least a specified number of days before a foreclosure sale. See, e.g., 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1) (37 days); 12 CFR 1024.41(e) and (h) (90 days). These time periods are calculated as of the date the servicer receives a complete loss mitigation application. Thus, scheduling or rescheduling a foreclosure sale after the servicer receives the complete loss mitigation application will not affect the borrower's protections.

If no foreclosure sale is scheduled as of the date the servicer receives a complete loss mitigation application, the application is considered received more than 90 days before a foreclosure sale.

Evaluation of a Loss Mitigation Application – 12 CFR 1024.41(c)

Evaluation of a Timely Complete Loss Mitigation Application – 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)

A servicer that receives a complete loss mitigation application more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale must take two steps within 30 days:

- First, the servicer must evaluate the borrower for all loss mitigation options available to the borrower from the owner or investor of the borrower's mortgage loan. The criteria on which a servicer offers or does not offer a loss mitigation option need not meet any particular standard. Nonetheless, a servicer's failure to follow requirements imposed by an owner or investor may demonstrate the servicer's failure to comply with the 12 CFR 1024.38(b)(2)(v) requirement that the servicer must maintain policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer can properly evaluate a borrower for all loss mitigation options for which the borrower may be eligible pursuant to any requirements established by the mortgage loan's owner or assignee; and

- Second, the servicer must provide the borrower with a written notice stating which loss mitigation options, if any, the servicer will offer to the borrower. The notice must state the amount of time the borrower has to accept or reject an offered loss mitigation option pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(e), and, if applicable, that the borrower has the right to appeal a denial of a loan modification option as well as the time period and any requirements for making an appeal pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(h).

Evaluation of Incomplete Loss Mitigation Application – 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(i)-(iii)

With limited exceptions, a servicer may not offer a loss mitigation option based on an evaluation of an incomplete application.

1. Offers permitted if not based on an evaluation of an incomplete application. Regulation X does not prohibit a servicer from offering loss mitigation options to a borrower who has not submitted a loss mitigation application. Further, nothing prohibits a servicer from offering a loss mitigation option to a borrower who has submitted an incomplete loss mitigation application where the offer of the loss mitigation option is not based on any evaluation of information submitted by the borrower in connection with such application.

2. Reasonable Time Exception. If the servicer has exercised reasonable diligence in obtaining documents and information to complete the application but the application still remains incomplete for a significant period of time without further progress by the borrower, the servicer may evaluate an incomplete application and offer the borrower a loss mitigation option. What qualifies as a significant period of time may depend on the timing of the foreclosure process. For example, 15 days may be a more significant period of time if the borrower is less than 50 days before a foreclosure sale than if the borrower is less than 120 days delinquent. The requirements in 12 CFR 1024.41 do not apply to this evaluation, and it is not considered an evaluation of a complete loss mitigation application for purposes of determining whether a request for a loss mitigation evaluation is duplicative under 12 CFR 1024.41(i).

3. Short-Term Loss Mitigation Options Exception. A servicer may offer a short-term payment forbearance program or a short-term repayment plan to a borrower based upon an evaluation of an incomplete loss mitigation application. Promptly after offering a payment forbearance program or a repayment plan, unless the borrower has rejected the offer, the servicer must provide the borrower a written notice stating:

    - The specific payment terms and duration of the program or plan,
    - That the servicer offered the program or plan based on an evaluation of an incomplete application,
    - That other loss mitigation options may be available, and
    - That the borrower has the option to submit a complete loss mitigation application to receive an evaluation for all loss mitigation options available to the borrower regardless of whether the borrower accepts the program or plan.

If the borrower is performing pursuant to the terms of a forbearance program or repayment plan offered under this provision, a servicer may not make the first notice or filing required by applicable law for any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process, and it may not move for foreclosure judgment or an order of sale or conduct a foreclosure sale. A servicer may also offer a short-term payment forbearance program in conjunction with a short-term repayment plan.

A servicer must comply with the remaining loss mitigation requirements in 12 CFR 1024.41 with respect to the incomplete application, such as the requirement in 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2) to review the application to determine if it is complete, the requirement in 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1) to exercise reasonable diligence in obtaining documents and information to complete a loss mitigation application, and the requirement in 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) to provide the borrower with written notice that the servicer acknowledges the receipt of the application and has determined that the application is incomplete. (Comment 41(c)(2)(iii)-2).

For instance, a servicer must exercise reasonable diligence as clarified in part in Comment 41(b)(1)-4.iii. The comment states that, if a borrower is complying with a short-term payment forbearance program or short-term repayment plan and the borrower does not request further assistance, the servicer may suspend reasonable diligence efforts until near the end of the program or plan. However, if the borrower fails to comply with the short-term loss mitigation option or requests further assistance, the servicer must immediately resume reasonable diligence efforts. Additionally, near the end of a short-term payment forbearance program, and prior to the end of the forbearance period, if the borrower remains delinquent, a servicer must contact the borrower to determine if the borrower wishes to complete the loss mitigation application and proceed with a full loss mitigation evaluation. (Comment 41(b)(1)-4.iii).

If the borrower completes the loss mitigation application, the servicer must comply with all of the loss mitigation procedure requirements in 12 CFR 1024.41 even if the servicer has offered a short-term payment forbearance program or short-term repayment plan based on an evaluation of an incomplete application. (Comment 41(c)(2)(iii)-3).

Facially Complete Applications – 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iv)

A loss mitigation application is facially complete when (i) the servicer's initial notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(b) advised the borrower that the application was complete, (ii) the servicer's initial notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(b) requested additional information from the borrower to complete the application and the borrower submits such additional information, or (iii) the servicer is required to provide the borrower a written notice of a complete application under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3)(i).

If the servicer later discovers that additional information or corrections to a previously submitted document are required to complete the facially complete application, the servicer must promptly request the missing information or corrected documents and treat the application as complete for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.41(f)(2) and (g) until the borrower is given a reasonable opportunity to complete the application. A reasonable opportunity depends on the particular facts and circumstances, but must provide the borrower sufficient time to gather the necessary information and documents.

If the borrower completes the application within this period, the application is considered complete as of the date it was actually complete for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.41(c), and the application is considered complete as of the date it was facially complete for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.41(d), (e), (f)(2), (g), and (h).

If the borrower does not complete the application within this period, the application is considered incomplete.

Notice of Complete Application – 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3)

Within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the borrower's complete loss mitigation application, the servicer shall provide the borrower a written notice setting forth the following information:

- That the loss mitigation application is complete;
- The date the servicer received the complete application;
- That the servicer expects to complete its evaluation within 30 days of the date it received the complete application;
- That the borrower is entitled to certain foreclosure protections because the servicer has received the complete application, and, as applicable, either:

  - If the servicer has not made the first foreclosure notice or filing required by applicable law, that the servicer cannot make the first notice or filing to commence a foreclosure before evaluating the borrower's complete application; or
  - If the servicer has made the first foreclosure notice or filing, that the servicer has begun the foreclosure process and that the servicer cannot conduct a foreclosure sale before evaluating the borrower's complete application.

- That the servicer may need additional information at a later date; and
- That the borrower may be entitled to additional protections under state or federal law.

A servicer is not required, however, to provide a notice of complete application if:

- The servicer has already provided the borrower a notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) informing the borrower the application is complete and the servicer has not requested any additional information;
- The application was not complete more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale; or
- The servicer has already provided the borrower a notice regarding its determination of the borrower's application under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)(ii).

Information not in the Borrower's Control – 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)

If a servicer requires documents or information not in the borrower's control to determine which loss mitigation options, if any, it will offer to the borrower, the servicer must exercise reasonable diligence in obtaining such documents or information. A servicer must not deny a complete loss mitigation application solely because the servicer lacks required documents or information not in the borrower's control, unless the servicer has been unable to obtain the documents and information for a significant period of time following the 30-day evaluation period provided under Section 1024.41(c)(1) and is unable to make a determination on the complete application. However, a servicer is permitted to offer a borrower a loss mitigation option, even if the servicer does not obtain the requested documents or information.

The servicer lacking third-party information must provide the borrower a written notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)(B) informing the borrower:

- That the servicer has not received the third-party documents or information that the servicer requires to determine which loss mitigation options, if any, it will offer to the borrower;
- Of the specific documents or information that the servicer lacks;
- That the servicer has requested such documents or information; and
- That the servicer will complete its evaluation of the borrower for all available loss mitigation options promptly upon receiving the documents or information.

If a servicer has exercised reasonable diligence to obtain the third-party information, but the servicer has been unable to do so for a significant period of time and cannot complete its determination without the required documents or information, the servicer may deny the application and provide the borrower with a written notice in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)(ii). In conjunction with such notice, the servicer must provide a copy of the written notice provided under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)(B).

Denial of any Loss Mitigation Option – 12 CFR 1024.41(d)

If the servicer denies a loss mitigation application for any trial or permanent loan modification option, the notice provided to the borrower must also state the servicer's specific reason or reasons for denying each trial or permanent loan modification option, and, if applicable, that the borrower was not evaluated on other criteria. Certain disclosures are required when a servicer denies an application for the following reasons or using the following procedures:

- Investor criteria and use of a waterfall.
  - If the servicer denies a loan modification option based upon investor criteria, the servicer must identify the owner or assignee of the mortgage loan and the specific criteria that the borrower failed to satisfy.
  - When an owner or assignee has established an evaluation criteria that sets an order ranking for evaluation of loan modification options (commonly known as a "waterfall") and a borrower has qualified for a particular loan modification option in the waterfall, it is sufficient for the servicer to inform the borrower, with respect to other loan modification options ranked below any such option offered to a borrower, that the investor's requirements include the use of such a waterfall and that an offer of a loan modification option necessarily results in a denial for any other loan modification options below the option for which the borrower is eligible in the ranking.
- Net present value calculation. If the denial was based upon a net present value calculation, the servicer must disclose the inputs used in the calculation.
- Reasons listed. The following applies if the servicer uses a hierarchy of eligibility criteria and, after reaching the first criterion that causes a denial, does not evaluate whether the borrower would have satisfied the remaining criteria. In this instance, the servicer need only (i) provide the specific reason or reasons why the borrower was actually rejected, and (ii) notify the borrower that the borrower was not evaluated on other criteria. A servicer is not required to determine or disclose whether a borrower would have been denied based on other criteria if the servicer did not actually evaluate these additional criteria.

Borrower Response – 12 CFR 1024.41(e)

A servicer offering a loss mitigation option must provide the borrower with a minimum period of time to accept or reject the option, depending on when the servicer receives a complete application. If the application was complete 90 days or more before a foreclosure sale, the servicer must give the borrower at least 14 days to decide. If it was complete fewer than 90 but more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale, the servicer must give the borrower at least seven days to decide.

A borrower's failure to respond on time can be treated as a rejection of the loss mitigation options, with two exceptions. First, a borrower who is offered a trial loan modification plan and submits payments that would have been owed under that plan before the deadline for accepting must be given a reasonable time to fulfill any remaining requirements of the servicer for acceptance of the trial loan modification plan. Second, a servicer must give a borrower who has a pending appeal until 14 days after the servicer provides notice of its determination regarding resolution of that appeal to decide whether to accept any offered loss mitigation option.

A servicer cannot make the first foreclosure notice or filing for any judicial or non-judicial process until (i) the borrower is more than 120 days delinquent, (ii) the foreclosure is based on a borrower's violation of a due-on-sale clause, or (iii) the servicer is joining a superior or subordinate lienholder's foreclosure action. The commentary states that whether a document qualifies as the first notice or filing depends on the foreclosure process at issue:

- Judicial foreclosure. Where foreclosure procedure requires a court action or proceeding, the first notice or filing is the earliest document required to be filed with a court or other judicial body to commence the action or proceeding. Depending on the particular foreclosure process, examples of these documents could be a complaint, petition, order to docket, or notice of hearing;

- Non-judicial foreclosure – recording or publication requirement. Where foreclosure procedure does not require an action or court proceeding (such as under a power of sale), the first notice or filing is the earliest document required to be recorded or published to initiate the foreclosure process; or

- Non-judicial foreclosure – no recording or publication requirement. Where foreclosure procedure does not require an action or court proceeding, and also does not require any document to be recorded or published, the first notice or filing is the earliest document that establishes, sets, or schedules a date for the foreclosure sale.

The commentary further states that a document provided to the borrower but not initially required to be filed, recorded, or published is not considered the first notice or filing on the sole basis that the documents must later be included as an attachment accompanying another document that is required to be filed, recorded, or published to carry out a foreclosure.

If a borrower submits a complete loss mitigation application before the 120th day of delinquency or before the servicer makes the first foreclosure notice or filing, then the servicer cannot make the first foreclosure notice or filing unless one of the following occurs: (i) the servicer sends a notice to the borrower stating that the borrower is ineligible for any loss mitigation option and if an appeal is available, either the borrower did not timely appeal, or the appeal has been denied;

(ii) the borrower rejects all the offered loss mitigation options; or (iii) the borrower fails to perform under a loss mitigation agreement.

Prohibition on Foreclosure Sale – 12 CFR 1024.41(g)

If a borrower submits a complete loss mitigation application after the servicer has made the first foreclosure notice or filing but more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale, the servicer cannot conduct a foreclosure sale or move for foreclosure judgment or order of sale. The servicer must instruct foreclosure counsel promptly not to make a dispositive motion for foreclosure judgment or order of sale; to avoid a ruling on the motion or issuance of an order of sale where such a dispositive motion is pending; and, where a sale is scheduled, to prevent conduct of a foreclosure sale, except as provided below. The servicer may move forward with those specific foreclosure proceedings (or need not instruct foreclosure counsel as provided above) if one of the following occurs: (i) the servicer sends a notice to the borrower stating that the borrower is ineligible for any loss mitigation option and the appeal process is inapplicable, the borrower did not timely appeal, or the appeal has been denied; (ii) the borrower rejects all the offered loss mitigation options; or (iii) the borrower fails to perform under a loss mitigation agreement. A servicer is not relieved of its obligations because foreclosure counsel's actions or inaction caused a violation. Absent one of the specified circumstances, conduct of the sale violates the regulation, even if a person other than the servicer administers or conducts the foreclosure sale proceedings.

Appeal Process – 12 CFR 1024.41(h)

A borrower has the right to appeal a servicer's denial of a loss mitigation application for any trial or permanent loan modification available to the borrower if the borrower submitted a complete application 90 days or more before a foreclosure sale (or during the pre-foreclosure period set forth in 12 CFR 1024.41(f)). The borrower must commence the appeal within 14 days after the servicer provides the notice stating the servicer's determination of which loss mitigation options, if any, it will offer to the borrower.

Within 30 days of the borrower making the appeal, the servicer must provide a notice to the borrower stating: (i) whether it will offer the borrower a loss mitigation option based on the appeal, and (ii) if applicable, how long the borrower has to accept or reject this loss mitigation option or a previously offered loss mitigation option. If the servicer offers a loss mitigation option after an appeal, the servicer must provide the borrower at least 14 days to decide whether to accept the offered loss mitigation option.

The servicer's personnel who evaluated the borrower's application cannot also evaluate the appeal, although personnel who supervised the initial evaluation may evaluate the appeal so long as they were not directly involved in the initial evaluation.

Duplicative Requests – 12 CFR 1024.41(i)

A servicer must comply with these loss mitigation procedures for a borrower's loss mitigation application, unless the servicer has previously complied with the loss mitigation requirements for a complete loss mitigation application submitted by the borrower and the borrower has been delinquent at all times since submitting the prior complete application.

Thus, for example, if the borrower has previously submitted a complete loss mitigation application and the servicer complied fully with 12 CFR 1024.41 for that application, but the borrower then ceased to be delinquent and later became delinquent again, the servicer is required to again comply with 12 CFR 1024.41 for any subsequent loss mitigation application submitted by the borrower.

Small Servicer Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.41(j)

Although small servicers are exempt from most of the policy-and-procedure requirements (12 CFR 1024.38), continuity of contact requirements (12 CFR 1024.40), and loss mitigation requirements (12 CFR 1024.41) of Regulation X, certain provisions still apply to them. Small servicers cannot make the first foreclosure notice or filing required by any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process until (i) the borrower is more than 120 days delinquent, (ii) the foreclosure is based on a borrower's violation of a due-on-sale clause, or (iii) the servicer is joining a superior or subordinate lienholder's foreclosure action. If the borrower is performing according to the terms of a loss mitigation agreement, a small servicer also cannot make the first foreclosure notice or filing, move for a foreclosure judgment or order of sale, or conduct a foreclosure sale.

Servicing Transfers – 12 CFR 1024.41(k)

When a transferee servicer acquires the servicing of a mortgage loan for which there is a loss mitigation application pending as of the transfer date, it must comply with 12 CFR 1024.41(k), which addresses and clarifies how loss mitigation procedures and timelines apply to these pending loss mitigation applications. A loss mitigation application is considered pending if the application is subject to the loss mitigation rules but was not fully resolved prior to the transfer date. (Comment 41(k)-1). The transfer date is defined for these provisions as the date on which the transferee servicer will begin accepting payments relating to the mortgage loan, as disclosed on the notice of transfer of loan servicing pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.33(b)(4)(iv).

Specifically:

- Subject to the exceptions below, for loss mitigation applications pending as of the transfer date, a transferee servicer must comply with the loss mitigation requirements within the same timeframes that applied to the transferor servicer based on the date the transferor servicer received the loss mitigation application;
    - A transferor servicer must timely transfer, and a transferee servicer must obtain from the transferor servicer, documents and information submitted by a borrower in connection with a loss mitigation application.
    - Subject to the modifications of timing requirements below, a borrower's rights and protections under the loss mitigation procedures to which the borrower was entitled to before a transfer continue to apply post-transfer.

- In the transfer context, reasonable diligence under 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1) includes ensuring that a borrower is informed of any changes to the application process, such as a change in address to which the borrower should submit documents and information to complete the application, as well as ensuring that the borrower is informed about which documents and information are necessary to complete the application.

- Within 10 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) of the transfer date, a transferee servicer must provide the borrower an acknowledgement notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) if the prior transferor had not provided such notice and the applicable period to provide the notice has not expired as of the transfer date;
  - If a transferee servicer is required to provide the acknowledgment notice as described above, the transferee servicer is prohibited from making the first foreclosure notice or filing required by applicable law for any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process until a date that is after the reasonable date disclosed in the acknowledgment notice.
  - If a borrower submits a complete loss mitigation application to the transferee or transferor servicer 37 or fewer days before the foreclosure sale but on or before the reasonable date disclosed in the acknowledgement notice, the servicer must evaluate the application in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.41(c) and provide a denial notice in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.41(d) (if applicable), and is prohibited from moving for foreclosure judgment or sale in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.41(g).
- For a complete application pending as of the transfer date, the transferee servicer must evaluate the application within 30 days of the transfer date;
- A transferee servicer must make a determination on appeals pending as of the transfer date if it is able to do so or, if unable to do so, must treat the appeal as a pending complete loss mitigation application;
  - If the transferee servicer is required to make a determination on an appeal, the servicer must complete the determination and provide the notice required under 12 CFR 1024.41(h)(4) within the later of 30 days of the transfer date or 30 days of the date the borrower made the appeal.
- A transfer does not affect a borrower’s ability to accept or reject a pending loss mitigation offer if the time period to accept or reject has not expired as of the transfer date. In this instance, the transferee servicer must allow the borrower to accept or reject the offer during the unexpired balance of the applicable time period.

Loss Mitigation Applications from Potential Successors in Interest (Effective April 19, 2018)

If a servicer receives a loss mitigation application from a potential successor in interest before confirming that person's identity and ownership interest in the property, the servicer may, but need not, review and evaluate the loss mitigation application in accordance with the procedures set forth in 12 CFR 1024.41. (Comment 41(b)-1.i).

If a servicer receives a loss mitigation application from a potential successor in interest and elects not to review and evaluate the loss mitigation application before confirming that person's identity and ownership interest in the property, the servicer must preserve the loss mitigation application and all documents submitted in connection with the application. Upon confirmation of the successor in interest's status, the servicer must review and evaluate the loss mitigation application in accordance with the procedures set forth in 12 CFR 1024.41 if the property is the confirmed successor in interest's principal residence and the loss mitigation procedures are otherwise applicable. For purposes of 12 CFR 1024.41, the servicer must treat the loss mitigation application as if it had been received on the date that the servicer confirmed the successor in interest's status. If the loss mitigation application is incomplete at the time of confirmation because documents submitted by the successor in interest became stale or invalid after they were submitted and confirmation is 45 days or more before a foreclosure sale, the servicer must identify the stale or invalid documents that need to be updated in a notice pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2). Consumer Financial Protection Bureau Regulation 12 CFR Part 1024, Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (Regulation X)

Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act

Examination Objectives

- To determine the financial institution’s compliance with the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) and Regulation X.
- To initiate corrective action when policies or internal controls are deficient, or when violations of law or regulation are identified.

Examination Procedures

Each examination should be risk-based and may not require an examiner to address all of the procedures below. In addition, each supervising agency may have its own supervisory strategy that will dictate which examination procedures are required to be completed.

If the financial institution has loans covered by RESPA, determine whether the institution’s policies, practices, and procedures ensure compliance with RESPA and Regulation X.

General Procedures

1. Review the types of loans covered by RESPA, applicable exemptions, loan policies, and operating procedures in connection with federally related mortgage loans. 12 CFR 1024.5 provides RESPA’s general coverage and applicable exemptions, though other RESPA and Regulation X provisions include additional exemptions.

2. Assess whether mortgage personnel are knowledgeable about the requirements of RESPA and Regulation X.

3. Determine whether the loan disclosure and timing requirements of Regulation X (rather than Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)) apply to the loans being reviewed (generally for closed-end reverse mortgages).

4. Review the Special Information Booklet, good faith estimate (GFE) form, Uniform Settlement Statement form (HUD-1 or HUD-1A), and mortgage servicing transfer disclosure forms for compliance with the requirements of Regulation X. Review standardized and model forms and clauses in the appendices to the regulation.

5. Review the affiliated business arrangement disclosure form for compliance with the requirements of Regulation X. Review standardized and model forms and clauses in the appendices to the regulation.

6. If electronic disclosures are provided, determine whether the institution has policies and procedures to provide electronic delivery in accordance with the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign).

7. Through reviewing written loan policies and operating procedures in connection with federally related mortgage loans that are not partially exempt under 12 CFR 1024.5(d) (i.e., reverse mortgages) and by discussing them with institution personnel, or through other appropriate methods, determine whether the financial institution has policies and procedures that address the following:

   - The information that will be collected from applicants in connection with issuing a GFE, and what information will be relied on to issue a GFE.
   - Provision of a revised GFE in the event of changed circumstances, both in the course of a new home purchase and in other kinds of transactions.
   - To cure a tolerance violation by reimbursing the borrower the amount by which the tolerance was exceeded within 30 calendar days from date of settlement.
   - To cure a technical or inadvertent error on the HUD-1/1A by providing a revised settlement statement to the borrower within 30 calendar days of settlement.

8. Through interviews with mortgage lending personnel or other appropriate methods, determine:

   - The identity of persons or entities referring federally related mortgage loan business;
   - The nature of services provided by referral sources, if any;
   - Settlement service providers used by the institution; and
   - Any providers whose services are required by the institution.

9. Through interviews with mortgage lending personnel or other appropriate methods, assess how the institution complies with the general servicing policies and procedures required by Regulation X, as applicable, including:

   - How and for how long the institution maintains documentation and information related to a mortgage loan account and the institution's process for aggregating such information into a servicing file within five days;
   - How the institution determines whether to engage third-party service providers, including the criteria the institution considers to evaluate potential service providers;
   - How the institution monitors the performance of third-party service providers;
   - How the institution ensures that it receives all necessary documentation and information concerning mortgage loan files that are transferred to it by another institution; and

- How the institution ensures that it sends all necessary documentation and information concerning mortgage loan files to another institution when it transfers files to that institution.

10. Determine if the institution is a small servicer. (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) and (iii)). Small servicers are exempt from a number of Regulation X requirements.

    NOTE: A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for all of which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

Special Information Booklet – 12 CFR 1024.6

11. For mortgages that are not subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule under 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), other than reverse mortgages, determine through appropriate methods such as discussions with management and reviewing credit files whether the Special Information Booklet, if required, is provided within three business days after the financial institution or broker receives a written application for a loan (12 CFR 1024.6(a)(1)).

    NOTE: The Special Information Booklet may be required under 12 CFR 1026.19(g) for closed-end mortgage loans subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule.

Good Faith Estimate – 12 CFR 1024.7

12. For closed-end reverse mortgages (see 12 CFR 1024.5(d)), determine whether the financial institution provides a GFE of charges for settlement services, if required, within three business days after receipt of a written application (12 CFR 1024.7(a)).

13. Review the GFE to determine if it appears exactly as set forth in Appendix C to Part 1024.

14. Review a sample of loan files that include GFEs to determine the following:

    - Whether the financial institution followed GFE application requirements.
    - Whether the institution provided revised GFEs to applicants when warranted due to changed circumstances.
    - If the institution provided a revised GFE to the applicant due to changed circumstances, determine whether the institution followed regulatory requirements for issuing a revised GFE due to changed circumstances.
    - Whether the GFE was completed as required in the regulations and instructions (12 CFR 1024.7 and Appendix C to 12 CFR Part 1024) and whether it included the following information:
        - Interest rate expiration date;
        - Settlement charges expiration date;
        - Rate lock period;
        - Number of days before settlement the interest rate must be locked, if applicable;
        - Summary of loan information;
        - Escrow account information;
        - Estimates for settlement charges; and
        - Left hand column on trade-off table completed for loan in the GFE.
    - Whether, for no cost loans, all third-party fees paid by the financial institution are itemized and listed in the appropriate blocks on the second page of the GFE.
    - Whether a separate sheet was provided with the GFE that identifies the settlement service providers for the services listed on the GFE.

Uniform Settlement Statement Form (HUD-1 and HUD-1A) – 12 CFR 1024.8

15. Using the same sample of loan files as used for the review of the GFE (i.e., for reverse mortgages), review the Uniform Settlement Statement (HUD-1 or HUD-1A, as appropriate) (12 CFR 1024.8 and Appendix A to 12 CFR Part 1024) to determine whether:

    - Charges are properly itemized in accordance with the instructions for completion of the HUD-1 or HUD-1A (Appendix A to 12 CFR Part 1024);
    - All charges paid by the borrower and the seller are itemized and include the name of the recipient (12 CFR 1024.8(b), Appendix A);
    - Average charges for settlement services are calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.8(b)(2); and
    - Charges required by the financial institution but paid outside of closing are itemized on the settlement statement, marked as "paid outside of closing" or "P.O.C.," but not included in cost totals (12 CFR 1024.8(b); Appendix A).

16. If the financial institution conducts the settlement, determine whether:

    - The borrower, upon request, is allowed to inspect the HUD-1 or HUD-1A at least one business day prior to settlement (12 CFR 1024.10(a));
    - The HUD-1 or HUD-1A is provided to the borrower and seller at or before settlement (except where the borrower has waived the right to delivery and in the case of exempt transactions) (12 CFR 1024.10(b)); or
    - In cases where the right to delivery is waived or the transaction is exempt, the HUD-1/1A is mailed as soon as practicable after settlement (12 CFR 1024.10(b), (c), and (d)).

17. Determine whether, in the case of an inadvertent or technical error on the HUD-1/1A, the financial institution provides a revised HUD-1/1A to the borrower within 30 calendar days after settlement (12 CFR 1024.8(c)).

18. Review the HUD-1 or HUD-1A form prepared in connection with each GFE reviewed to determine if the amount stated for any itemized service exceeds the amount shown on the GFE for that service. If the amount stated on the HUD-1 exceeds the amount shown on the GFE and such overcharge violates the tolerance for that category of settlement services, determine whether the financial institution cured the tolerance violation by reimbursing to the borrower the amount by which the tolerance was exceeded, at settlement or within 30 calendar days from date of settlement (12 CFR 1024.7(i)).

19. Determine whether HUD-1 and HUD-1A forms are retained for five years after settlement if the institution retains its interest in the mortgage and/or services. If the financial institution disposes of its interest in the mortgage and does not service the loan, determine whether the HUD-1 or HUD-1A form is transferred to the new asset owner with the loan file (12 CFR 1024.10(e)).

Homeownership Counseling Organization List – 12 CFR 1024.20

20. Determine whether the lender (or a mortgage broker or dealer) provided a clear and conspicuous written list of homeownership counseling services in the applicant's location no later than three business days after the lender, mortgage broker or dealer received the application or information sufficient to complete an application (for RESPA-covered loans except for reverse mortgages or timeshare loans) (12 CFR 1024.20(a) and (c)). The written list does not need to be provided if, within the three-business-day period, the lender denies the application or the applicant withdraws it (12 CFR 1024.20(a)(5)).

21. Determine whether the lender obtained the list from either the website maintained by the CFPB or data made available by the CFPB or HUD for lenders complying with this requirement, no earlier than 30 days prior to the time it was provided to the applicant (12 CFR 1024.20(a)).

No Fees for RESPA Disclosures – 12 CFR 1024.12

22. Determine whether the financial institution charges a fee specifically for preparing and distributing the HUD-1 forms, escrow statements, or documents required under TILA (12 CFR 1024.12).

23. If any fee is charged before providing a GFE in a reverse mortgage transaction, determine whether such fee is limited to the cost of a credit report (12 CFR 1024.7(a)(4)).

Purchase of Title Insurance – 12 CFR 1024.16

24. When the financial institution owns the property being sold, determine whether it requires that title insurance be purchased from a particular company (12 CFR 1024.16).

Payment or Receipt of Referral or Unearned Fees – 12 CFR 1024.14

25. Through interviews with institution management and reviews of audits, policies, and procedures, or other appropriate methods, determine if management is aware of the prohibition against payment and receipt of any fee, kickback, or thing of value in return for the referral of settlement services business (12 CFR 1024.14).

26. Through interviews with institution management and reviews of audits, policies, and procedures, or other appropriate methods, determine if management is aware of the prohibition against unearned fees where a charge for settlement services is divided between two or more parties.

27. Through interviews with institution management and personnel; file reviews; review of: good faith estimates and HUD-1 or HUD-1A (for closed-end reverse mortgages), the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures (for other closed-end mortgages secured by a dwelling); or other appropriate methods, determine if federally related mortgage loan transactions are referred to the institution by brokers, affiliates, or other parties. Also, identify persons or entities to which the institution refers settlement services business in connection with a federally related mortgage transaction.

    - Identify the types of services rendered by the broker, affiliate, or service provider.
    - By a review of the institution's general ledger or otherwise determine if fees were paid to the institution or any parties identified.
    - Determine whether any fees paid or received by the institution are for goods or facilities actually furnished or services actually performed and are not kickbacks or referral fees (12 CFR 1024.14(b)). This includes payments by the institution to an affiliate or the affiliate's employees in connection with real estate settlements.
    - In cases where a fee is split between the institution and one or more other parties, determine whether each party actually performed services for that fee (12 CFR 1024.14(c)). This includes payments by the institution to an affiliate or the affiliate's employees in connection with real estate settlements.

28. Determine from the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures (or the HUD-1 or HUD-1A for reverse mortgages) and from interviews with institution management, or through other appropriate methods, if the institution referred a borrower to a settlement service provider with which the institution was affiliated or in which the institution had a direct or beneficial ownership interest of more than one percent (hereinafter, an "affiliated business arrangement").

29. If the financial institution had an affiliated business arrangement, determine whether the affiliated business arrangement disclosure statement (Appendix D to Part 1024) was provided as required by 12 CFR 1024.15(b)(1).

30. Other than an attorney, credit reporting agency, or appraiser representing the lender, if the financial institution referred a borrower to a settlement service provider, determine whether the institution required the use of the provider (12 CFR 1024.15(b)(2)).

31. Determine if compensation received by the lender in connection with an affiliated business arrangement is limited to a return on an ownership interest or other amounts permissible under RESPA (12 CFR 1024.15(b)(3)).

Escrow Accounts – 12 CFR 1024.17

If the institution maintains escrow accounts in connection with a federally related mortgage loan, complete the following procedures. (NOTE: Effective April 19, 2018, a servicer must treat a confirmed successor in interest, as defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, as a borrower for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.17).

32. Determine whether the institution performed an initial escrow analysis (12 CFR 1024.17(c)(2)) and provided the initial escrow statement required by 12 CFR 1024.17(g). The statement must contain the following:

    - Amount of monthly payment,
    - Portion of the monthly payment being placed in escrow,
    - Charges to be paid from the escrow account during the first 12 months,
    - Disbursement dates, and
    - Amount of cushion.

33. If the institution is a transferee (new) servicer and changed either the monthly payment amount or the accounting method used by the transferor (old) servicer, determine whether the institution provided a borrower with an initial escrow account statement within 60 days of the date of the servicing transfer (12 CFR 1024.17(e)(1)). A transferee servicer providing an initial escrow statement must use the effective date of transfer of servicing to establish the new escrow account computation year (12 CFR 1024.17(e)(1)(i)).

34. If the institution is a transferee servicer and retains the monthly payments and accounting method used by the prior servicer, but chooses to change the computation year, determine whether the institution provided a short-year statement to the borrower. (12 CFR 1024.17(e)(1)(ii)). See also procedures related to 12 CFR 1024.17(i)(4).

    NOTE: Where the new servicer retains the monthly payments and accounting method used by the transferor servicer, then the new servicer may continue to use the escrow account computation year established by the transferor servicer or may choose to establish a different computation year using a short-year statement. At the completion of the escrow account computation year or any short year, the new servicer shall perform an escrow analysis and provide the borrower with an annual escrow account statement 12 CFR 1024.17(e)(1)(ii).

35. Determine whether the institution treats shortages, surpluses, and deficiencies in the escrow account according to the procedures set forth in 12 CFR 1024.17(f).

36. Determine if the statement was given to the borrower at settlement or within 45 days after the escrow account was established. This statement may be incorporated into the HUD-1 statement (12 CFR 1024.17(g)(1) and (2)).

37. Determine whether the institution performs an annual analysis of the escrow account (12 CFR 1024.17(c)(3) and (7), and 1024.17(i)).

38. Determine whether the annual escrow account statement is provided to the borrower within 30 days of the end of the computation year (12 CFR 1024.17(i)).

39. Determine if the annual escrow statement contains the following:

    - Amount of monthly mortgage payment and portion placed in escrow;
    - Amount of past year's monthly mortgage payment and portion that went into escrow;
    - Total amount paid into escrow during the past computation year;
    - Total amount paid out of escrow account during same period for taxes, insurance, and other charges;
    - Balance in the escrow account at the end of the period;
    - How a surplus, shortage, or deficiency is to be paid/handled; and
    - If applicable, the reason why the estimated low monthly balance was not reached (12 CFR 1024.17(i)(1)).

40. Determine whether the servicer complied with the requirements relating to short-year statements in 12 CFR 1024.17(i)(4) within 60 days from the end of the short year or within 60 days after receiving funds that pay off the loan.

41. Determine whether monthly escrow payments following settlement are within the limits of 12 CFR 1024.17(c).

Timely Payment of Hazard Insurance; Force-Placed Insurance

NOTE: The procedures in this section do not apply to small servicers.[1] In addition to the information provided in this section, examiners should also refer to 12 CFR 1024.37, which sets forth further requirements relating to force-placed insurance.

In addition, the procedures related to 12 CFR 1024.34 and 1024.37 may be applicable to escrow accounts and fees or charges for force-placed insurance.

42. If the institution purchased force-placed insurance for a borrower who had established an escrow account for the payment of hazard insurance, determine whether the institution was permitted to do so under 12 CFR 1024.17(k)(5). Under that provision, an institution may not purchase force-placed insurance unless (i) the borrower was more than 30 days delinquent, and (ii) the institution was unable to disburse funds from the escrow account to ensure that the borrower's hazard insurance premium charges were paid in a timely manner.

    An institution is unable to disburse funds if it has a reasonable basis to believe that either (a) the borrower's property is vacant, or (b) the borrower's hazard insurance has terminated for reasons other than non-payment of the premium charges. An institution is not unable to disburse funds from the borrower's escrow account solely because the account has insufficient funds for paying hazard insurance premium charges (12 CFR 1024.17(k)(5)(ii)).

43. Small servicer exception. Notwithstanding the above, a small servicer may charge borrowers for force-placed insurance. If the institution is a small servicer and charged borrowers for force-placed insurance, determine whether the cost to each borrower of the force-placed insurance was less than the amount the institution would have needed to disburse from the borrower's escrow account to ensure that hazard insurance charges were paid in a timely manner (12 CFR 1024.17(k)(5)(iii)).

[1] Refer to 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)) and (iii). A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for all of which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

Subpart C – Mortgage Servicing

Applicability: Except as otherwise noted below, the provisions of Subpart C – Mortgage Servicing, 12 CFR 1024.30-41, apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31. Effective April 19, 2018, a servicer must treat confirmed successors in interest as borrowers under the provisions of Subpart C. (12 CFR 1024.30(d)).

General Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.32(c) (Effective April 19, 2018)

Successors in Interest

44. For servicers providing the optional written notice and acknowledgment form under 12 CFR 1024.32(c) to confirmed successors in interest who have not assumed the mortgage loan and are otherwise liable on it:

    - Determine whether the written notice explains that the confirmed successor in interest may be entitled to receive certain notices and communications about the mortgage loan if the servicer is not providing them to another confirmed successor in interest or borrower on the account. The notice also must explain that in order to receive such notices and communications, the successor in interest must execute and provide to the servicer the acknowledgment form.

      NOTE: Servicers that send this type of notice and acknowledgement form are not required to provide to the confirmed successor in interest any written disclosure required by 12 CFR 1024.17, 1024.33, 1024.34, 1024.37, or 1024.39, or to comply with the live contact requirements in 12 CFR 1024.39(a) with respect to the confirmed successor in interest until the confirmed successor in interest either assumes the mortgage loan or executes the acknowledgment form.

    - Determine whether the servicer stated in the written notice that, regardless of whether the successor in interest executes the acknowledgement form, the successor in interest is entitled to submit notices of error under 12 CFR 1024.35, requests for information under 12 CFR 1024.36, and requests for a payoff statement under 12 CFR 1026.36. The notice must include a brief explanation of those rights and how to exercise them, including appropriate address information.

Mortgage Servicing Transfer Disclosures – 12 CFR 1024.33

Reverse Mortgage Disclosure Statement

Complete the following if the institution received an application for a reverse mortgage loan, as defined in 12 CFR 1024.31.

45. Determine whether the lender, mortgage broker who anticipates using table funding, or dealer in a first-lien dealer loan provided a proper servicing disclosure statement to the borrower within three days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receipt of the application. The disclosure statement must advise whether the servicing of the mortgage loan may be assigned, sold, or transferred to any other person at any time. A model disclosure statement is set forth in Appendix MS-1 (12 CFR 1024.33(a)).

    Additionally, the disclosure statement is not required if the institution denied the application within the three-day period.

Transfers of Mortgage Servicing Rights – Disclosures

Complete the following if the institution has transferred or received mortgage servicing rights. The following are generally not considered transfers: (1) transfers between affiliates; (2) transfers resulting from mergers or acquisitions of servicers or subservicers; and (3) transfers between master servicers, when the subservicer remains the same. Additionally, the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) is not required to provide a notice of transfer to the borrower where a mortgage insured under the National Housing Act is assigned to FHA (12 CFR 1024.33(b)).

46. If the institution has transferred mortgage servicing rights, determine whether notice to the borrower was given at least 15 days prior to the transfer (12 CFR 1024.33(b)(3)). This notice may be combined with the transferee's notice (discussed below) into one notice if delivered to the borrower at least 15 days before the effective date of the transfer. Notices provided at the time of settlement satisfy the timing requirements.

47. If the institution has received mortgage servicing rights, determine whether notice was given to the borrower within 15 days after the transfer (12 CFR 1024.33(b)(3)). This notice may be combined with the transferor's notice (discussed above) into one notice if delivered to the borrower at least 15 days before the effective date of the transfer. Notices provided at the time of settlement satisfy the timing requirements.

48. Determine whether the notice sent by the institution includes the following information (12 CFR 1024.33(b)(4)). Sample language for the notice of transfer is contained in Appendix MS-2 to 12 CFR Part 1024.

    - The effective date of the transfer

- The name, address, and toll-free or collect-call telephone number for an employee or department of the transferee servicer that can be contacted by the borrower to obtain answers to servicing transfer inquiries
- The name, address, and toll-free or collect-call telephone number for an employee or department of the transferor servicer that can be contacted by the borrower to obtain answers to servicing transfer inquiries
- The date on which the transferor servicer will cease accepting payments relating to the loan and the date on which the transferee servicer will begin to accept such payments. The dates must either be the same or consecutive dates
- Whether the transfer will affect the terms or the availability of optional insurance and any action the borrower must take to maintain such coverage and
- A statement that the transfer does not affect the terms or conditions of the mortgage (except as directly related to servicing) (Appendix MS-2 to 12 CFR Part 1024)

49. Determine whether the notice by the transferor and transferee was sent to the borrower's address listed in the mortgage loan documents, unless the borrower notified the institution of a new address pursuant to the institution's requirements (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.33(b)(3)-1).

Transfers of Mortgage Servicing Rights – Treatment of Post-Transfer Payments

Complete the following if the institution has transferred or received mortgage servicing rights.

50. If the borrower sent any payments to the transferor servicer within the 60 days following a transfer of servicing rights, determine whether the institution imposed late fees or otherwise treated such payments as late (12 CFR 1024.33(c)(1)).

51. If the borrower sent any payments to the transferor servicer within the 60 days following a transfer of servicing rights, determine whether the transferor servicer either (a) forwarded the payment to the transferee servicer, or (b) returned the payment and informed the payor of the proper recipient of the payment (12 CFR 1024.33(c)(2)).

Complete the following if the terms of a borrower's mortgage loan, as defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, require the borrower to make payments to the institution for deposit into an escrow account to pay taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges for the mortgaged property.

52. Determine whether the institution made payments from the escrow account in a timely manner (12 CFR 1024.34). A "timely manner" means on or before the deadline to avoid a penalty, as governed by the requirements in 12 CFR 1024.17(k).

53. Determine whether the institution returned amounts remaining in escrow within 20 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after the borrower paid the mortgage loan in full (12 CFR 1024.34(b)). The institution does not need to return this amount if it and the borrower agree to credit the remaining funds towards an escrow account for certain new mortgage loans.

Error Resolution Procedures – 12 CFR 1024.35

Complete the following based upon a review of a sample of mortgage loan (as defined in 12 CFR 1024.31) files that included written error notices from borrowers or through other appropriate methods.

Address for Error Notices

54. If the institution designates an address or addresses to which borrowers must send error notices, complete the following:

- Determine whether the institution provided written notice of the address to the borrower, along with a statement that the borrower must use that address to assert errors (12 CFR 1024.35(c)).
- Determine whether the institution also provided that address to the borrower in each of the following three types of communications:
  - Any periodic statement or coupon book required under 12 CFR 1026.41;
  - Any website the institution maintains in connection with the servicing of the loan; and
  - Any notice required pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.39 (early intervention) or .41 (loss mitigation) that includes contact information for assistance (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.35(c)-2).
- Determine whether the institution designated the same address for receiving information requests pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.36(b) (12 CFR 1024.35(c)).
- If the institution establishes an electronic method for submitting error notices that is its exclusive online intake process, determine whether this electronic process was in addition to, and not in lieu of, any process for receiving error notices by mail (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.35(c)-4).

55. If the institution does not establish a specific address to which to send error notices, determine whether the institution responds to error notices sent to any of its offices (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.35(c)-1).

Acknowledgement of Error Notices

56. Determine whether:

- The institution properly acknowledged the error notice by providing written acknowledgement of the error notice to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving an error notice (12 CFR 1024.35(d)); or
- Acknowledgment was not required because:
  - The institution corrected the errors asserted and notified the borrower in writing within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) of receiving the error notice (12 CFR 1024.35(f));
  - The institution determined that it was not required to respond and provided written notice, with the basis for its decision not to take any action, to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after making that determination (12 CFR 1024.35(g)); or
  - The error notice related to violations of certain loss mitigation procedures under 12 CFR 1024.35(b)(9) or (10) and was received by the institution seven or fewer days before a foreclosure sale. With respect to such error notices, the institution must make a good faith attempt to respond orally or in writing to the borrower and either correct the error or state the reason the institution determined that no error occurred (12 CFR 1024.35(f)(2)).

Response to Error Notices

57. Determine whether:

- The institution properly responded to a borrower's written error notice by:
  - Correcting the errors identified by the borrower as well as any different or additional errors that were discovered during the investigation and providing written notice to the borrower of the corrections, the date the corrections took effect, and contact information for further assistance; or
  - Conducting a reasonable investigation and providing the borrower with a written notice stating that the institution has determined that no error occurred, the reasons for its determination, the borrower's right to request documents relied upon by the institution in reaching its determination and how to do so, and contact information for further assistance (12 CFR 1024.35(e)); AND

- Undertaking one of the above within the following time frames:

  - If the alleged error was a failure to provide an accurate payoff balance amount, the institution responded within seven days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(3)(A));

  - If the alleged error was either (1) making the first notice or filing for a judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process in violation of 12 CFR 1024.41(f) or (j), or (2) moving for foreclosure judgment or order of sale or conducting a foreclosure sale in violation of 12 CFR 1024.41(g) or (j), the institution responded by the earlier of 30 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) or the date of a foreclosure sale (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(3)(B)). However, if the institution received the error notice seven or fewer days before a foreclosure sale, the institution is not required to respond in writing, but must nevertheless make a good faith attempt to respond orally or in writing to the borrower and either correct the error or state the reason the institution determined that no error occurred (12 CFR 1024.35(f)(2));

  - For all other alleged errors, the institution responded within 30 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) unless, prior to the expiration of that 30-day period, the institution extended the time for responding by an additional 15 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) by notifying the borrower in writing of the extension and the reasons for it (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(3)); OR

- The above responses were not required because:

  - The institution corrected the errors asserted and notified the borrower in writing within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) of receiving the error notice (12 CFR 1024.35(f));

  - The institution determined that it was not required to respond and provided written notice, with the basis for its decision not to take any action, to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after making that determination (12 CFR 1024.35(g)); or

  - The error notice related to violations of certain loss mitigation procedures under 12 CFR 1024.35(b)(9) or (10) and was received by the institution seven or fewer days before a foreclosure sale. With respect to such error notices, the institution must make a good faith attempt to respond orally or in writing to the borrower and either correct the error or state the reason the institution determined that no error occurred (12 CFR 1024.35(f)(2)).

Determination that No Error Occurred

58. If the institution stated that no error occurred and the borrower requested supporting documentation, determine whether the institution provided the documents that it relied upon to determine that no error occurred within 15 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(4)). If the institution withheld documents that constituted confidential, proprietary, or privileged information, determine whether it provided written notification to the borrower within 15 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(4)).

    - NOTE: A servicer responding to a notice of error request for documentation may omit location, contact, and personal financial information (other than information about the terms, status, and payment history of the mortgage loan) if: (i) the information pertains to a potential or confirmed successor in interest who is not the requester; or (ii) the requester is a confirmed successor in interest and the information pertains to any borrower who is not the requester. (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(5)) (Effective April 19, 2018).

Determination that No Response was Required

59. If the institution determined that it was exempt from the requirement to respond, determine whether the institution reasonably determined that one of the following three exemptions applied:

    - The error asserted is substantially the same as an error previously asserted by the borrower for which the institution complied with 12 CFR 1024.35(d) and (e), unless the borrower provides new and material information to support the error;

    - The error notice was overbroad. An error notice is overbroad if the institution cannot reasonably determine from the error notice the specific error that has occurred on a borrower's account; or

    - The error notice was untimely. An error notice is untimely if it is delivered to the institution more than one year after either (i) the institution transferred servicing responsibility to another institution, or (ii) the mortgage loan was discharged (12 CFR 1024.35(g)(1)). A mortgage loan is discharged when both the debt and all corresponding liens have been extinguished or released, as applicable.

Asserted Errors Related to Non-Bona Fide Fees

60. If the borrower asserted that the institution charged a fee without a reasonable basis to do so, determine whether the institution in fact had a reasonable basis to impose the fee (12 CFR 1024.35(b)(5)). An institution lacks a reasonable basis to impose fees that are not bona fide, such as (i) a late fee for a payment that was not late, (ii) a charge for a service that a service provider did not actually provide, (iii) a default management fee for borrowers who are not delinquent, or (iv) a charge for force-placed insurance that is not permitted by 12 CFR 1024.37 (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.35(b)-2).

Impermissible Fees and Conditions and Other Restrictions

61. Determine whether the institution conditioned its investigation of the asserted error on the borrower providing supporting documentation (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(2)(i)).

62. Determine whether the institution determined that no error occurred because the borrower failed to provide any requested information without conducting a reasonable investigation (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(2)(ii)).

63. Determine whether the institution charged a fee or required the borrower to make any payments as a condition to responding to an error notice (12 CFR 1024.35(h)).

64. Determine whether the institution furnished adverse information to any consumer reporting agency regarding a payment that was the subject of an error notice within 60 days after receiving the notice (12 CFR 1024.35(i)).

Requests for Information – 12 CFR 1024.36

Complete the following based upon a review of a sample of mortgage loan (as defined in 12 CFR 1024.31) files that included written information requests from borrowers or other appropriate methods.

Address for Information Requests

65. If the institution designates an address or addresses to which borrowers must send information requests, complete the following:

    - Determine whether the institution provided written notice of the address to the borrower, along with a statement that the borrower must use that address to request information (12 CFR 1024.36(b)).

    - Determine whether the institution also provided that address to the borrower in each of the following three communications:

        - Any periodic statement or coupon book required under 12 CFR 1026.41;

        - Any website the institution maintains in connection with the servicing of the loan; and

        - Any notice required pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.39 (early intervention) or .41 (loss mitigation) that includes contact information for assistance (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(c)-2).

    - Determine whether the institution designated the same address for receiving information requests pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.35(c) (12 CFR 1024.36(b)).

- If the institution establishes an electronic method for submitting information requests that is its exclusive online intake process, determine whether this electronic process was in addition to, and not in lieu of, any process for receiving information requests by mail (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(c)-4).

66. If the institution does not establish a specific address to which to send information requests, determine whether the institution responds to information requests sent to any of its offices (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(b)-1).

Acknowledgement of Information Requests

67. Determine whether:

- The institution properly acknowledged the information request by providing written acknowledgement to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the information request (12 CFR 1024.36(c)); or
- Acknowledgement was not required because:
  - The institution provided the borrower with the information requested and contact information (including telephone number) for further assistance within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) (12 CFR 1024.36(e)); or
  - The institution determined that it was not required to respond and provided written notice with the basis for its determination not to respond to the request to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after making that determination (12 CFR 1024.36(f)).

Response to Information Requests

68. Determine whether:

- The institution properly responded to the information request by:
  - Providing the requested information and contact information for further assistance (12 CFR 1024.36(d)(1)(i)); or
  - Conducting a reasonable search for the requested information and providing the borrower with a written notice advising the borrower that the institution has determined that the requested information is not available to it, the basis for the institution’s determination, and contact information for further assistance (12 CFR 1024.36(d)(1)(ii)). Information is not available to the institution if the information is not in the institution’s control or possession or if it cannot be retrieved in the ordinary course of business through reasonable efforts such as, for example, if electronic back-up media is not normally accessible to the institution’s personnel and would take an extraordinary effort to identify and restore. Information stored offsite but which personnel can access upon request is available to the institution; AND

- o Undertaking one of the above within the following time frames:
  - – If the borrower requested the identity of or contact information for the owner or assignee of a mortgage loan, responding within 10 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays);
  - – For all other information requests, responding within 30 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) unless, prior to the expiration of that 30-day period, the institution extended the time for responding by an additional 15 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) by notifying the borrower in writing of the extension and the reasons for it (12 CFR 1024.36(d)); OR

- The above responses were not required because:
  - o The institution provided the borrower with the information requested and contact information (including telephone number) for further assistance within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) (12 CFR 1024.36(e)); or
  - o The institution determined that it was not required to respond and provided written notice with the basis for its determination not to respond to the request to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after making that determination (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(2)).

NOTE: A servicer in its response to a request for information may omit location, contact, and personal financial information (other than information about the terms, status, and payment history of the mortgage loan) if: (i) the information pertains to a potential or confirmed successor in interest who is not the requester; or (ii) the requester is a confirmed successor in interest and the information pertains to any borrower who is not the requester. (12 CFR 1024.36(d)(3)) (Effective April 19, 2018).

Information Requests Regarding the Identity or Contact Information of the Owner or Assignee of a Mortgage Loan

69. For a borrower’s information request regarding the owner or assignee of a mortgage loan, when a loan is not held in trust for which an appointed trustee receives payments on behalf of the trust, determine whether the institution complied by identifying the person on whose behalf the institution receives payments (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(a)-2.i).

    However, when the loan is held in a trust for which an appointed trustee receives payments on behalf of the trust, determine first what specific information is being requested, and second whether the servicer complied with the requirements clarified in 12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(a)-2.ii:

- For loans held in trust in which the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) or the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac) is not the owner of the loan or the trustee, determine that the institution complied by identifying the name of the trust, and the name, address, and appropriate contact information for the trustee. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(a)-2.ii.A)

- For loans held in a trust in which Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac is the owner of the loan or trustee, determine that the institution complied by providing the following information:

  1. If the request did not expressly request the name or number of the trust or pool, the name and contact information for Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac, as applicable. The institution does not need to provide the name of the trust.

  2. If the request did expressly request the name or number of the trust or pool, the name of the trust, and the name, address, and appropriate contact information for the trustee. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(a)-2(ii)(B)-(C)).

NOTE: Comment 36(a)-2 clarifies that a servicer is not the owner or assignee for purposes of information requests under 12 CFR 1024.36 if the servicer holds title to the loan, or title is assigned to the servicer, solely for the administrative convenience of the servicer in servicing the mortgage loan obligation. It also states that the Government National Mortgage Association (Ginnie Mae) is not the owner or assignee for purposes of such requests for information solely as a result of its role as the guarantor of the security in which the loan serves as the collateral. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(a)-2).

Determination that No Response was Required

70. If the institution determined that it was exempt from the requirement to respond, determine whether the institution reasonably determined that one of the following five exemptions applied:

- The information requested is substantially the same as information the borrower previously requested for which the institution has already complied with the requirements for responding to written information requests (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(1)(i));

- The information requested is confidential, proprietary, or privileged (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(1)(ii));

- The information requested is not directly related to the borrower's mortgage loan account (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(1)(iii));

- The information request is overbroad or unduly burdensome. A request is overbroad if the borrower requests that the institution provide an unreasonable volume of documents or information. A request is unduly burdensome if a diligent institution could not respond within the time periods set forth in 12 CFR 1024.46(d)(2) or would incur costs (or have to dedicate resources) that would be unreasonable in light of the circumstances (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(1)(iv)); or

- The information request is sent more than one year after either the mortgage loan balance was discharged or the institution transferred the mortgage loan to another servicer (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(1)(v)). A mortgage loan is discharged when both the debt and all corresponding liens have been extinguished or released, as applicable.

Determination that Information Request was Overbroad

71. If the institution determined that a submitted request was overbroad or unduly burdensome, determine whether the institution could reasonably have identified a valid information request in the submission and whether the institution did so (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(1)(iv)).

Impermissible Fees and Conditions

72. Determine whether the institution charged a fee, or required a borrower to make any payment that was owed on the borrower's account, as a condition of responding to an information request (12 CFR 1024.36(g)).

Potential Successors in Interest (Effective April 19, 2018)

73. In response to a written request from a potential successor in interest, determine whether the servicer provided the potential successor in interest with a written description of the documents the servicer reasonably required to confirm the person's identity and ownership interest in the property as well as contact information, including a telephone number, for further assistance (12 CFR 1024.36(i)(1)).

74. With respect to the written request, determine whether the servicer treated the potential successor in interest as a borrower for purposes of the requirements in 12 CFR 1024.36 (c)-(g), including responding to the request not later than the time limits set forth in 12 CFR 1024.36(d)(2). (12 CFR 1024.36(i)(1); 12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(i)-2).

Applicability: Servicers must comply with restrictions on purchasing, renewing, and assessing fees for "force-placed insurance," which is defined as hazard insurance that a servicer obtains on behalf of the owner or assignee to insure the property securing the mortgage loan (but does not include (i) flood insurance required by the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973; (ii) hazard insurance obtained by a borrower but renewed by the borrower's servicer in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.17(k)(1), (2), or (5); or (iii) hazard insurance obtained by a borrower but renewed by the borrower's servicer at its discretion with the borrower's agreement).

The provisions of 12 CFR 1024.37 regulate when an institution may assess a premium charge or fee on borrowers related to force-placed insurance. These provisions apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31.

Assessing Charges or Fees Related to Force-Placed Insurance

Complete the following if the institution assessed a charge or fee on a borrower related to force-placed insurance.

Reasonable Basis

75. Determine whether the institution had a reasonable basis to believe that the borrower has failed to comply with the mortgage loan contract's requirement to maintain hazard insurance (12 CFR 1024.37(b)). An institution's "reasonable basis" may be based upon information about a borrower's hazard insurance which the institution receives from the borrower, the borrower's insurance provider, or the borrower's insurance agent. If the institution receives no such information, the institution may satisfy the "reasonable basis" standard if it acts with reasonable diligence to ascertain the borrower's hazard insurance status and does not receive evidence of hazard insurance. A servicer that complies with the initial and reminder notice requirements (below) has acted with reasonable diligence (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I, Comment 1024.37(b)-1).

Initial Notice

76. Determine whether the institution provided the initial written notice to the borrower at least 45 days before assessing a fee or charge (12 CFR 1024.37(c)).

77. Determine whether the initial notice included the following information (12 CFR 1024.37(c)). Sample language for the initial notice is contained in Appendix MS-3(A) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

    - The date of the notice;
    - The institution's name and mailing address;
    - The borrower's name and mailing address;
    - A statement that requests the borrower provide hazard insurance information for the borrower's property and that identifies the property by its physical address;
    - A statement that the borrower's hazard insurance has expired, is expiring, or provides insufficient coverage (as applicable), that the institution lacks evidence that the borrower has hazard insurance coverage past the expiration date or lacks evidence that the borrower has hazard insurance that provides sufficient coverage (as applicable), and (if applicable) that identifies the type of hazard insurance lacking. (12 CFR 1024.37(c)(2)(v));

- A statement that hazard insurance is required on the borrower's property and that the institution has purchased or will purchase insurance at the borrower's expense;
- A request that the borrower promptly provide the institution with insurance information;
- A description of the requested insurance information, how the borrower may provide such information, and (if applicable) that the requested information must be in writing;
- A statement that the insurance coverage the institution has purchased or will purchase may cost significantly more than, and provide less coverage than, hazard insurance purchased by the borrower;
- The institution's phone number for borrower inquiries; and
- A statement advising that the borrower review additional information provided in the same transmittal (if applicable).

78. Determine whether the initial notice was in the correct form. The notice must provide certain information in bold text and, other than the specific statements listed above and the loan number, the institution cannot provide any information on the initial notice (though the institution can provide additional information on separate pages of paper contained in the same transmittal) (12 CFR 1024.37(c)(3)-(4)). A sample notice is contained in Appendix MS-3(A) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

Reminder Notice

79. If the institution received no hazard insurance information or did not receive evidence of continuous coverage, determine whether the institution provided a reminder notice (i) at least 30 days after mailing or delivering the initial notice, and (ii) at least 15 days before assessing any charges or fees for force-placed insurance (12 CFR 1024.37(d)(1)).

80. For borrowers who did not provide hazard insurance information, determine whether the reminder notice (i) contains the date of the reminder notice and all of the other information provided in the initial notice; (ii) advises that it is a second and final notice; and (iii) identifies the annual cost of force-placed insurance or, if unknown, a reasonable estimate (12 CFR 1024.37(d)(2)(i)). Sample language for the reminder notice is contained in Appendix MS-3(B) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

81. When the institution receives hazard insurance information but does not receive evidence of continuous sufficient coverage, determine whether the reminder notice includes the following information (12 CFR 1024.37(d)(2)(ii)). Sample language for the reminder notice is contained in Appendix MS-3(C) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

- The date of the reminder notice;
- The institution's name and mailing address;
- The borrower's name and mailing address;
- A statement requesting that the borrower provide hazard insurance information for the borrower's property and that identifies the property by its physical address;
- A statement that the insurance coverage the servicer has purchased or will purchase may cost significantly more than, and provide less coverage than, hazard insurance purchased by the borrower;
- The institution's phone number for borrower inquiries;
- A statement advising that the borrower review additional information provided in the same transmittal (if applicable);
- A statement that it is the second and final notice;
- The annual cost of force-placed insurance, or if unknown, a reasonable estimate;
- A statement that the institution has received the hazard insurance information that the borrower provided;
- A request that the borrower provide the missing information; and
- A statement that the borrower will be charged for insurance the institution purchases for the time period in which the institution cannot verify coverage.

82. Determine whether the reminder notice was in the correct form. The notice must provide certain information in bold text and, other than the specific statements listed above and the loan number, the institution cannot provide any information on the reminder notice (though the institution can provide additional information on separate pages of paper contained in the same transmittal) (12 CFR 1024.37(d)(3)-(4)). Sample notices are contained in Appendix MS-3(B) and (C) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

83. Determine whether, by the end of the 15-day period after the institution sent the reminder notice, the borrower provided evidence that it has had hazard insurance that complies with the loan contract continuously in place. As evidence, the institution may require a copy of the borrower's hazard insurance policy declaration page, the borrower's insurance certificate, the borrower's insurance policy, or other similar forms of written confirmation (12 CFR 1024.37(c)(1)(iii) and 12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I, Comment 1024.37(c)(1)(iii)-2).

Assessing Charges or Fees for Renewing or Replacing Force-Placed Insurance

If the institution assessed a charge or fee on a borrower for renewing or replacing force-placed insurance, complete the following.

84. Determine whether the institution provided a written renewal notice to the borrower at least 45 days before assessing any fee or charge (12 CFR 1024.37(e)(1)(i)).

85. Determine whether the renewal notice includes the following information (12 CFR 1024.37(e)(2)). Sample language for the renewal of force-placed insurance notice is contained in Appendix MS-3(D) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

    - The date of the renewal notice;
    - The institution’s name and mailing address;
    - The borrower’s name and mailing address;
    - A statement that requests the borrower to update the hazard insurance information for the borrower’s property and that identifies the property by its physical address;
    - A statement that the institution previously purchased force-placed insurance at the borrower’s expense because the institution did not have evidence that the borrower had hazard insurance coverage;
    - A statement that the force-placed insurance has expired or is expiring, as applicable, and that the institution intends to renew or replace it because hazard insurance is required on the property;
    - A statement that the insurance coverage the institution has purchased or will purchase may cost significantly more than, and provide less coverage than, insurance purchased by the borrower, and identifying the annual premium cost of force-placed insurance or a reasonable estimate;
    - A statement that if the borrower purchases hazard insurance, the borrower should promptly provide the institution with insurance information;
    - A description of the requested insurance information and how the borrower may provide such information, and if applicable, that the requested information must be in writing;
    - The institution’s telephone number for borrower inquiries; and
    - A statement advising the borrower to review additional information provided in the same mailing (if applicable).

86. Determine whether the renewal notice was in the correct form. The notice must provide certain information in bold text and, other than the specific statements listed above and the loan number, the institution cannot provide any information on the renewal notice (though the institution can provide additional information on separate pages of paper contained in the same transmittal) (12 CFR 1024.37(e)(3)-(4)). A sample notice is contained in Appendix MS-3(D) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

87. Determine whether in the 45 days after sending the renewal notice the institution received evidence demonstrating that the borrower had purchased hazard insurance coverage (12 CFR 1024.37(e)(1)(ii)). As evidence, the institution may require a copy of the borrower's hazard insurance policy declaration page, the borrower's insurance certificate, the borrower's insurance policy, or other similar forms of written confirmation.

General Mailing Requirements, Canceling Force-Placed Insurance, and Bona Fide and Reasonable Fee Requirements

88. If the institution mailed any of the written initial, reminder, or renewal notices (12 CFR 1024.37(c)(1)(i), (c)(1)(ii), or (e)(1)), determine whether the servicer used a class of mail not less than first-class mail (12 CFR 1024.27(f)).

89. If the institution received evidence that the borrower had required hazard insurance coverage in place, determine whether the institution did the following within 15 days:

    - Canceled the force-placed insurance,
    - Refunded force-placed insurance premiums charges and fees for the period of overlapping coverage, and
    - Removed all force-placed charges and fees from the borrower's account for the period of overlapping coverage (12 CFR 1024.37(g)).

90. Determine whether all fees or charges assessed on the borrower related to force-placed insurance are bona fide and reasonable (except for charges subject to State regulation and charges authorized by the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973). A "bona fide and reasonable charge" is one that is reasonably related to the institution's cost of providing the service and is not otherwise prohibited by law (12 CFR 1024.37(h)).

General Servicing Policies, Procedures, and Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.38

Applicability: The general servicing policies, procedures, and requirements apply to all mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, except that the requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii);[2] (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.33(a); and (iii) qualified lenders, as defined under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and accompanying regulations.

Policies and Procedures – Accessing and Providing Timely and Accurate Information

91. Determine whether the institution has policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure that it has access to and provides timely and accurate information (12 CFR 1024.38(a) and (b)(1)). This includes policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure the following:

    - Providing accurate and timely disclosures to the borrower;
    - Investigating, responding to, and making corrections in response to borrowers' complaints, including promptly obtaining information from service providers to investigate and if applicable correct errors resulting from actions of service providers;
    - Providing borrowers with accurate and timely information and documents in response to borrower requests for information with respect to the borrower's mortgage loan;
    - Providing owners and assignees of mortgage loans with accurate and current information and documents about all the mortgage loans they own, including information about the institution's evaluations of borrowers for loss mitigation options and loss mitigation agreements with borrowers;
    - Submitting accurate and current information and documents that comply with applicable law during the foreclosure process;

[2] Refer to 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)) and (iii). A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for all of which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

- Upon notification of a borrower's death, promptly communicating with the borrower's successor in interest concerning the secured property (Effective until April 19, 2018);
- Upon receiving notice of a borrower's death or of any transfer of the secured property, promptly facilitating communication with any potential or confirmed successors in interest regarding the property (Effective April 19, 2018);
- Upon receiving notice of the existence of a potential successor in interest, promptly determining the documents the servicer reasonably requires to confirm the person's identity and ownership interest in the property (see commentary to 12 CFR 1024.38(b)(1)(vi) for illustrative examples) and promptly providing to the potential successor in interest a description of those documents and how the person may submit a written request under 12 CFR 1024.36(i) (Effective April 19, 2018); and
- Upon the receipt of such documents, promptly making a confirmation determination and promptly notifying the person, as applicable, that the servicer has confirmed the person's status, has determined that additional documents are required (and what those documents are), or has determined that the person is not a successor in interest (Effective April 19, 2018).

Policies and Procedures – Proper Evaluation of Loss Mitigation Applications

92. Determine whether the institution has policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure that its personnel properly evaluate loss mitigation applications (12 CFR 1024.38(a) and (b)(2)). This includes policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure the following:

- Providing accurate information regarding available loss mitigation options from the owner or assignee of the borrower's loan;
- Identifying with specificity all loss mitigation options for which a borrower may be eligible, including identifying, with respect to each owner or assignee, all of the loss mitigation options the institution may consider when evaluating a borrower, as well as the criteria the institution should apply for each option;
- Providing the loss mitigation personnel assigned to the borrower's mortgage loan pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.40 with prompt access to all of the documents and information that the borrower submitted in connection with a loss mitigation option;
- Identifying the documents and information a borrower must submit to complete a loss mitigation application;
- In response to a complete loss mitigation application, properly evaluating the borrower for all eligible loss mitigation options pursuant to any requirements established by the owner or assignee of the mortgage loan, even if those requirements are otherwise beyond the requirements of 12 CFR 1024.41; and

- Promptly identifying and obtaining documents or information not in the borrower's control that the servicer requires to determine which loss mitigation options, if any, to offer the borrower in accordance with the requirements of 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4).

Policies and Procedures – Oversight of Servicer Providers

93. Determine whether the institution has policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to facilitate oversight of, and compliance by, service providers (12 CFR 1024.38(a) and (b)(3)). This includes policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure the following:

- Providing appropriate personnel with access to accurate and current documents and information concerning the service providers' actions;

- Facilitating periodic reviews of service providers; and

- Facilitating the sharing of accurate and current information regarding the status of a borrower's loss mitigation application and any foreclosure proceeding among appropriate institution personnel, including the loss mitigation personnel assigned to the borrower's mortgage loan, and appropriate service provider personnel, including service provider personnel responsible for handling foreclosure proceedings.
  - For instance, the policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer promptly informs service provider personnel handling foreclosure proceedings that the servicer has received a complete loss mitigation application and promptly instructs foreclosure counsel to take any step required by 12 CFR 1024.41(g) sufficiently timely to avoid violating the prohibition against moving for judgment or order of sale, or conducting a foreclosure sale.

Policies and Procedures – Transfer of Information

94. Determine whether the institution has policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to facilitate the transfer of information during servicing transfers (12 CFR 1024.38(a) and (b)(4)). This includes policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure the following:

- For a transferor servicer, the timely and accurate transfer of all information and documents in its possession and control related to a transferred mortgage loan to the transferee servicer in a manner that ensures its accuracy and that allows the transferee to comply with the terms of the mortgage loan and applicable law, including any information about the status of any loss mitigation agreements or discussions with the borrower and any analysis performed with respect to potential recovery from non-performing mortgage loans; and

- For a transferee servicer, identifying necessary documents or information that may not have been transferred, obtaining such missing documentation or information from the transferor servicer (for documents and information related to loss mitigation, the transferee's policies and procedures must address obtaining missing documents from the transferor servicer before attempting to obtain such documents from the borrower).

Policies and Procedures – Notifying Borrowers of Error Notice and Information Request Procedures

95. Determine whether the institution has policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to inform borrowers of procedures for submitting written error notices and written information requests (12 CFR 1024.38(a) and (b)(5)). This includes policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that the institution informs borrowers who are dissatisfied with the institution's response to oral complaints or information requests of the procedures for submitting written error notices under 12 CFR 1024.35 and written information requests under 12 CFR 1024.36.

Record Retention – Accurate Records

96. For any mortgage loan, determine if the institution is retaining accurate records that document actions with respect to the mortgage loan account (which includes any mortgage loan that has been transferred or paid in full). The institution must retain these records until one year after the loan is discharged or the institution transfers servicing for the mortgage loan to a transferee servicer. (12 CFR 1024.38(c)(1)).

Servicing File – Facilitating Aggregation of Information

97. For documents or information created on or after January 10, 2014, determine whether the institution maintains the following five items for each mortgage loan file in a manner that allows the institution to aggregate these items into a servicing file within five days:

    - A schedule of all credits and debits to the account (including escrow accounts and suspense accounts);
    - A copy of the security instrument that establishes the lien securing the mortgage loan;
    - Any notes created by institution personnel reflecting communications with the borrower concerning the account;
    - A report of the data fields relating to the borrower's account created by the institution's electronic systems (if applicable); and
    - Copies of any information or documents provided by the borrower to the institution in connection with written error notices or loss mitigation (12 CFR 1024.38(c)(2)).

Early Intervention Requirements for Certain Borrowers – 12 CFR 1024.39

Applicability: The early intervention requirements apply to only those mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, that are secured by the borrower's principal residence (12 CFR 1024.30(c)(2)). The requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii),[3] (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.33(a), and (iii) qualified lenders, as defined under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and accompanying regulations (12 CFR 1024.30(b)). Refer to 12 CFR 1024.39(c)-(d) and associated commentary for an institution's obligation to comply with the live contact requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(a) and written notice requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(b) for borrowers in bankruptcy and for borrowers who have invoked cease communication rights under the FDCPA.

Complete the following for any delinquent borrowers.

NOTE: Delinquency for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.39 (and certain other sections in Regulation X) means a period of time during which a borrower and a borrower's mortgage loan obligation are delinquent. A borrower and a borrower's mortgage loan obligation are delinquent beginning on the date a periodic payment sufficient to cover principal, interest, and, if applicable, escrow becomes due and unpaid, until such time as no periodic payment is due and unpaid. (12 CFR 1024.31). For purposes of 12 CFR 1024.39, this definition does not include borrowers performing as agreed under a loss mitigation agreement designed to bring the borrower current on a previously missed payment. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.39(a)-1.ii).

Live Contact

98. Determine whether the institution made good faith efforts to establish live contact with the borrower within 36 days after each time the borrower became delinquent (12 CFR 1024.39(a)).

[3] Refer to 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)) and (iii). A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for all of which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

99. After the institution established live contact, determine whether the institution promptly informed the borrower of loss mitigation options, if appropriate (as determined based on the institution's reasonable discretion) (12 CFR 1024.39(a)).

Written Notice

100. Determine whether the institution sent a written notice to the borrower within 45 days after the borrower became delinquent (12 CFR 1024.39(b)(1)). The institution generally does not need to send the notice to a borrower more than once in a 180-day period. Different timing requirements might apply when a borrower has filed for bankruptcy (see 12 CFR 1024.39(c)) or has provided a cease communication notice pursuant to Section 805(c) of the FDCPA (see 12 CFR 1024.39(d)).

101. Determine whether the notice included the following items (12 CFR 1024.39(b)(2)). Sample language for the notice is contained in Appendix MS-4(A), MS-4(B), MS-4(C), and MS-4(D) (that servicers subject to the FDCPA can use to comply with a new disclosure requirement for the written notice) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

- A statement encouraging the borrower to contact the institution;
- The telephone number to access assigned loss mitigation personnel;
- A brief description of examples of loss mitigation options that may be available to the borrower (if applicable);
- Loss mitigation application instructions or instructions as to how to obtain more information about loss mitigation options (such as by contacting the institution), if applicable;
- Either the CFPB's or HUD's website to access homeownership counselors or counseling organizations list and HUD's toll-free number to access homeownership counselors or counseling organizations; and
- If a mortgage servicer is a debt collector under the FDCPA with regard to a borrower's mortgage loan, a statement that the servicer may or intends to invoke its specified remedy of foreclosure.

Borrowers in Bankruptcy

102. Determine whether the institution is exempt under 12 CFR 1024.39(c)(1)(i) for purposes of the live contact requirements or exempt under 12 CFR 1024.39(c)(1)(ii) for purposes of the written notice requirements.

103. For servicers that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1024.39(c)(1)(i) or (ii), determine whether the servicer complied with, as applicable, the live contact requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(a) or the written notice requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(b) as modified by 12 CFR 1024.39(c)(1)(iii).

104. For servicers that were exempt under 12 CFR 1024.39(c)(1)(i) and (ii) (unless they have discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan through bankruptcy), determine whether the servicer resumed compliance with the live contact and written notice requirements after the next payment due date that followed the earliest of the following events: (i) the bankruptcy case is dismissed; (ii) the bankruptcy case is closed; or (iii) the borrower reaffirms personal liability for the mortgage loan. (12 CFR 1024.39(c)(2)(i)).

105. With respect to a mortgage loan for which the borrower has discharged personal liability under Sections 727, 1141, 1228, or 1328 of Title 11 of the United States Code, determine whether the servicer resumed compliance with the written notice requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(b) if the borrower has made any partial or periodic payment on the mortgage loan after the commencement of the borrower's bankruptcy case. (12 CFR 1024.39(c)(2)(ii)). (The servicer need not resume compliance with the live contact requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(a) if the borrower has discharged personal liability as set forth above.)

Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA)

NOTE: Servicers subject to the FDCPA can use MS-4(D) to comply with a new disclosure requirement for the written notice.

106. If a mortgage servicer was a debt collector under the FDCPA with regard to a borrower's mortgage loan for which any borrower has invoked cease communication rights pursuant to Section 805(c) of the FDCPA:

- Determine whether the servicer was exempt from the written notice requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(b) because either:
  - No loss mitigation option was available; or
  - A borrower on the mortgage loan was a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the United States Code. (12 CFR 1024.39(d)(2)).
- Determine whether the servicer was required to provide a modified written early intervention notice and that notice complied with the following:
  - Content:
    - The modified written notice included a statement that the servicer may or intends to invoke its remedy of foreclosure.

    - The written notice did not contain a request for payment.

- Timing:
    - The servicer did not provide the written notice more than once during any 180-day period.
        - If a borrower was 45 days or more delinquent at the end of any 180-day period after the servicer had provided the written notice, determine whether the servicer provided the written notice again no later than 190 days after the provision of the prior written notice.
        - If a borrower was less than 45 days delinquent at the end of any 180-day period after the servicer has provided the written notice, determine whether the servicer provided the written notice again no later than 45 days after the payment due date for which the borrower remained delinquent or 190 days after the provision of the prior written notice, whichever was later.

(12 CFR 1024.39(d)(3)).

NOTE: A mortgage servicer that is a debt collector under the FDCPA with regard to a borrower's mortgage loan for which any borrower has invoked cease communication rights pursuant to Section 805(c) of the FDCPA institution is exempt from the live contact requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(a).

Continuity of Contact – 12 CFR 1024.40

Applicability: The continuity of contact requirements apply to only those mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, that are secured by the borrower's principal residence (12 CFR 1024.30(c)(2)). The requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii),[4] (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined

[4] Refer to 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)) and (iii). A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for all of which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer in 12 CFR 1026.33(a), and (iii) qualified lenders, as defined under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and accompanying regulations (12 CFR 1024.30(b)).

107. Determine whether the institution had policies and procedures reasonably designed to assign personnel to a delinquent borrower by the time the written early intervention notice was provided, and in any event, within 45 days after the borrower became delinquent (12 CFR 1024.40(a)).

108. Determine whether the institution had policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that the assigned personnel were available, via telephone, to answer the borrower's questions and (as applicable) assist the borrower with available loss mitigation options until the borrower has made, without incurring a late charge, two consecutive mortgage payments in accordance with the terms of a permanent loss mitigation agreement (12 CFR 1024.40(a)(2)).

109. Determine whether the institution had policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that, if a borrower contacts the assigned personnel and does not immediately receive a live response, the institution can provide a live response in a timely manner (12 CFR 1024.40(a)(3)).

110. Determine whether the institution maintains policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that the assigned personnel can perform, among others, the following tasks:

- Provide the borrower with accurate information about available loss mitigation options, including the steps the borrower must take to be evaluated for such options, including how to complete a loss mitigation application or appeal a denial of a loan modification option (if applicable);
- Provide the borrower with accurate information about the status of any loss mitigation application submitted;
- Provide the borrower with accurate information about the circumstances under which the institution may refer the account to foreclosure;
- Provide the borrower with accurate information about applicable loss mitigation deadlines;
- Timely retrieve a complete record of the borrower's payment history and all written information the borrower has provided to the institution (or the institution's predecessors) in connection with a loss mitigation application, and provide these does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

documents to other persons required to evaluate the borrower for available loss mitigation options; and

- Provide the borrower with information about submitting a written error notice or written request for information (12 CFR 1024.40(b)).

Loss Mitigation Procedures – 12 CFR 1024.41

Applicability: The loss mitigation procedure requirements apply to only those mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, that are secured by the borrower's principal residence (12 CFR 1024.30(c)(2)). Except for the requirements of 12 CFR 1024.41(j), the loss mitigation procedure requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii),[5] (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.33(a), and (iii) qualified lenders, as defined under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and accompanying regulations (12 CFR 1024.30(b)). A servicer must comply with the loss mitigation procedures for subsequent loss mitigation applications, unless the servicer previously complied with the requirements for a complete loss mitigation application from a borrower and the borrower has been delinquent at all times since submitting the prior complete application. (12 CFR 1024.41(i)).

Calculating Time Periods: 12 CFR 1024.41 provides borrowers certain protections if the institution receives a complete loss mitigation application at least a specified number of days before a foreclosure sale. See, e.g., 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1) (37 days), and 12 CFR 1024.41(e) and (h) (90 days). These time periods are calculated as of the date the servicer receives a complete loss mitigation application. Thus, scheduling or rescheduling a foreclosure sale after the servicer receives the complete loss mitigation application will not affect the borrower's protections (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(3)-2). (However, scheduling the sale is not necessarily the same as making the first notice or filing. If the servicer has not made the first notice or filing required by applicable law by the time it receives a complete application, it is generally prohibited from doing so before evaluating the application, pursuant to 1024.41(c).) If no foreclosure sale is scheduled as of the date the servicer receives a complete loss mitigation application, the application is considered received more than 90 days before a foreclosure sale (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(3)-1).

Definition of First Notice or Filing: 12 CFR 1024.41 includes certain prohibitions on making the first notice or filing for a judicial or non-judicial foreclosure and provides borrowers certain protections depending on whether such a notice or filing has been made at the time the servicer receives a complete application. Whether a particular document qualifies as the first notice or filing depends on the foreclosure process under the applicable state law at issue:

- Judicial foreclosure. Where foreclosure procedure requires a court action or proceeding, the first notice or filing is the earliest document required to be filed with a court or other judicial body to commence the action or proceeding. Depending on the particular foreclosure process, examples of these documents could be a complaint, petition, order to docket, or notice of hearing;

- Non-judicial foreclosure – recording or publication requirement. Where foreclosure procedure does not require an action or court proceeding (such as under a power of sale), the first notice or filing is the earliest document required to be recorded or published to initiate the foreclosure process; or

- Non-judicial foreclosure – no recording or publication requirement. Where foreclosure procedure does not require an action or court proceeding, and also does not require any document to be recorded or published, the first notice or filing is the earliest document that establishes, sets, or schedules a date for the foreclosure sale.

Note that a document provided to the borrower but not initially required to be filed, recorded, or published is not considered the first notice or filing on the sole basis that the documents must later be included as an attachment accompanying another document that is required to be filed, recorded, or published to carry out a foreclosure (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(f)-1).

Review of an application received at least 45 days before a foreclosure sale (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2))

111. If the institution received a loss mitigation application at least 45 days before a foreclosure sale, determine that the institution:

    - Promptly upon receipt of a loss mitigation application, reviewed the loss mitigation application to determine if the loss mitigation application was complete. (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(A); 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1)).

NOTE:

- o A loss mitigation application that would trigger this requirement is viewed expansively and includes oral inquiries by the borrower where the borrower also provides information the institution would use to evaluate loss mitigation applications, or where a borrower requests that the institution determines whether the borrower is "prequalified" for a loss mitigation application by evaluating the borrower against preliminary criteria (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(1)-2).
- o A complete loss mitigation application means an application in connection with which a servicer has received all the information that the servicer requires from a borrower in evaluating applications for the loss mitigation options available to the borrower (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1)).
- o If no foreclosure sale has been scheduled as of the date a servicer receives a loss mitigation application, the servicer must treat the application as having been received 45 days or more before any foreclosure sale (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(2)(i)-1).

- Notified the borrower in writing within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the loss mitigation application that the servicer acknowledged receipt of the loss mitigation application and determined that the loss mitigation application was either complete or incomplete (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)).
  - o If the application is complete, determine that the written acknowledgement stated that the application was complete and included a statement that the borrower should consider contacting servicers of any other mortgage loans secured by the same property to discuss available loss mitigation options (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) and (b)(2)(ii)).
  - o If a loss mitigation application is incomplete, stated, in the notice: (i) the additional documents and information the borrower must submit to make the loss mitigation application complete, (ii) the reasonable date by which the borrower must submit such documents or information, and (iii) a statement that the borrower should consider contacting servicers of any other mortgage loans secured by the same property to discuss available loss mitigation options (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)).

  NOTE: For the reasonable date deadline, 30 days from the date the servicer provides the written notice is generally reasonable. The reasonable date, however, must be no later than the earliest of following milestones, but not less than seven days from the date of the notice: (a) the date by which any document or information submitted by the borrower will be stale or invalid, (b) the 120th day of the borrower's delinquency, (c) 90 days before a foreclosure sale; or (d) 38 days before a foreclosure sale (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comments 1024. 41(b)(2)(ii)-1 through .41(b)(2)(ii)-3).

112. If the institution received an incomplete loss mitigation application, determine whether the institution exercised reasonable diligence to collect information needed to complete the application after receiving the loss mitigation application. (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1); 12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comments 1024.41(b)(1)-1, and .41(b)(1)-4) .

NOTE:

- Examples of reasonable diligence include: (a) where the institution requires additional information from the borrower (such as an address or telephone number to verify employment), promptly contacting the borrower to obtain the information; and (b) where the borrower's loan is transferred to the institution from another servicer, reviewing documents the institution received from the prior servicer to determine if the required information is contained in those documents (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comments 1024.41(b)(1)-4i and .41(b)(1)-4ii).
- For borrowers offered short-term payment forbearance programs or short-term repayment plans on the basis of an incomplete application under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iii), refer to Comment 1024.41(b)(1)-4.iii for guidance relating to a servicer's reasonable diligence obligations (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(2)(ii)).

113. If the institution stopped collecting documents and information for a particular loss mitigation option, determine whether its decision was based on receiving information confirming that, pursuant to requirements established by the owner or assignee of the borrower's mortgage loan, the borrower was ineligible for that option (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(1)-1).

NOTE: A servicer may not stop collecting documents and information for any loss mitigation option based solely upon the borrower's stated preference but may stop collecting documents and information for any loss mitigation option based on the borrower's stated preference in conjunction with other information, as prescribed by any requirements established by the owner or assignee (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(1)-1).

Complete loss mitigation application evaluation (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1))

114. If the institution received a complete loss mitigation application more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale, determine whether the institution, within 30 days of receiving the complete loss mitigation application:

- Evaluated the borrower for all loss mitigation options available to the borrower (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)(i)); and

- Provided the borrower with a written notice of the institution's determination stating:
    - o Which loss mitigation options (if any) the institution would offer the borrower,
    - o The amount of time the borrower has to accept or reject an offered loss mitigation option pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(e), and
    - o If applicable, that the borrower has the right to appeal a denial of a loan modification option and the time period for making any appeal pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(h)

Incomplete loss mitigation application evaluation (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(i)-(iii))

115. If the borrower submitted an incomplete application and the institution has offered a loss mitigation option, determine whether the institution's offer was permitted because:

- The offer of the loss mitigation option was not based on any evaluation of information submitted by the borrower in connection with such application (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(c)(2)(i)-1);
- The institution offered a loss mitigation option upon the evaluation of an incomplete application after it exercised reasonable diligence in obtaining documents and information to complete the loss mitigation application, but the application remained incomplete for a significant period of time under circumstances without any further progress by the borrower to complete the application (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(ii)); or

  NOTE: Any such evaluation and offer is not subject to the requirements of this section and shall not constitute an evaluation of a single complete loss mitigation application for purposes of the duplicative request exception in 12 CFR 1024.41(i)

- The institution offered a short-term payment forbearance program or a short-term repayment plan based upon an evaluation of an incomplete application (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iii).

116. If the institution offered the borrower a short-term payment forbearance plan or short-term repayment plan based upon information contained in an incomplete loss mitigation application, determine whether the institution promptly provided the borrower, unless the borrower rejected the offer, a written notice stating:

- The specific payment terms and duration of the program or plan;
- That the servicer offered the program or plan based on an evaluation of an incomplete application,

- That other loss mitigation options may be available, and
- That the borrower has the option to submit a complete loss mitigation application to receive an evaluation for all loss mitigation options available to the borrower regardless of whether the borrower accepts the program or plan.

(12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iii)).

NOTE:

- A short-term payment forbearance program for these purposes allows a borrower to forgo making certain payments or portions of payments due over a period of no more than six months (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(c)(2)(iii)-1).
- A short-term repayment plan for these purposes is a loss mitigation option with terms under which a borrower would repay all past due payments over a specified period of time to bring the mortgage loan account current. A short-term repayment plan allows for the repayment of no more than three months of past due payments and allows a borrower to repay the arrearage over a period lasting no more than six months (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(c)(2)(iii)-4).

117. If the institution offered the borrower a short-term payment forbearance plan or short-term repayment plan based upon information contained in an incomplete loss mitigation application, determine whether the institution improperly (a) made the first notice or filing for any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process, (b) moved for foreclosure judgment or an order of sale, or (c) conducted a foreclosure sale while the borrower was performing under such plan (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iii)).

Facially Complete Application – Additional Information or Corrected Documents Required (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iv))

118. If the application was facially complete but the servicer later discovered that additional information or corrected documents were required to complete the application, determine whether:

- The institution (i) promptly requested the missing information or corrected documents, and (ii) gave the borrower a reasonable opportunity to complete the application (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iv)).

NOTE:

A loss mitigation application is facially complete when (i) the institution's initial notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) advised the borrower that the application was complete, (ii) the institution's initial notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) requested additional information from the borrower to complete the application and the borrower submits such additional information; or (iii) the servicer is required to provide the borrower a written notice of a complete application under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3)(i).

A reasonable opportunity depends on the particular facts and circumstances, but must provide the borrower sufficient time to gather the necessary information and documents (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(c)(2)(iv)-1).

119. In this same scenario, determine whether the institution treated the borrower's application as complete for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.41(f)(2) ("Application received before foreclosure referral") and 12 CFR 1024(g) ("Prohibition on foreclosure sale") until the borrower is given a reasonable opportunity to submit additional information or corrected documents (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iv)).

Notice of Complete Application (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3))

120. If none of the exceptions to the notice of complete application requirement listed in 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3)(ii) apply (see Note below), determine whether the institution has provided a written notice that the application is complete in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3)(i). The notice of complete application must be provided within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving a borrower's complete loss mitigation application and must include the following information:

- That the loss mitigation application is complete;
- The date the servicer received the complete application;
- That the servicer expects to complete its evaluation within 30 days of the date it received the complete application;
- That the borrower is entitled to certain foreclosure protections because the servicer has received the complete application, and, as applicable, either:
  - If the servicer has not made the first notice or filing required by applicable law for any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process, that the servicer cannot make the first notice or filing required to commence or initiate the foreclosure process under applicable law before evaluating the borrower's complete application; or
  - If the servicer has made the first notice or filing required by applicable law for any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process, that the servicer has begun the foreclosure process, and that the servicer cannot conduct a foreclosure sale before evaluating the borrower's complete application;
- That the servicer may need additional information at a later date to evaluate the application, in which case the servicer will request that information from the borrower and give the borrower a reasonable opportunity to submit it, the evaluation process may take longer, and the foreclosure protections could end if the servicer does not receive the information as requested; and

- That the borrower may be entitled to additional protections under state or federal law.

NOTE: Under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3)(ii), a servicer is not required to provide a notice of complete application if:

- o The servicer has already provided the borrower an acknowledgement notice under 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) stating the application is complete and the servicer has not subsequently requested additional information or corrected versions of previously submitted documents;
- o The application was not complete or facially complete more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale; or
- o The servicer has already provided the borrower a notice of its determination under 1024.41(c)(1)(ii).

Information not in the borrower's control (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4))

121. Determine whether the servicer exercised reasonable diligence in obtaining information not in the borrower's control that the servicer needs to determine which loss mitigation options to offer the borrower (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(i)).

122. Determine whether the servicer improperly denied the borrower's complete loss mitigation application solely because the servicer lacks required documents or information not in the borrower's control, (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)(A)(i), unless it was unable to obtain the documents and information for a significant period of time following the 30-day evaluation period and was unable to make a determination on the complete application. (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)(A)(2)). If this is the case, determine whether the servicer provided the written denial notice in accordance with 12 CFR1024.41(c)(1)(ii) and the written notice required under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)(B) (see question below).

    NOTE: A servicer, however, is permitted to offer a borrower a loss mitigation option, even if the servicer does not obtain the requested documents or information. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)-2).

123. If the servicer is unable to make a determination within 30 days of receiving a borrower's complete loss mitigation application due to the lack of the third-party information, review whether the servicer provided the written required notice to the borrower under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)(B) containing the following information:

    - That the servicer has not received the third-party documents or information that the servicer requires to determine which loss mitigation options, if any, it will offer to the borrower;

- The specific documents or information that the servicer lacks;
- That the servicer has requested such documents or information; and
- That the servicer will complete its evaluation of the borrower for all available loss mitigation options promptly upon receiving the documents or information.

Denial of loan modification options (12 CFR 1024.41(d))

124. If the institution denied the borrower's complete application for any trial or permanent loan modification option available to the borrower, determine whether the notice provided to the borrower pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)(ii) also stated the specific reason or reasons for denying each such option, and, if applicable, that the borrower was not evaluated on other criteria (12 CFR 1024.41 (d)). Specifically:

- If the institution denied an application for a loan modification option due to a failure to meet investor guidelines, determine whether the institution identified in its notice to the borrower (i) the owner or assignee of the mortgage loan, and (ii) the specific criteria the borrower failed to meet (12 CFR 1024.41(d); 12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(d)-1).
- NOTE: If the borrower's application was evaluated under an investor's waterfall and the borrower qualified for a particular option, it is sufficient for the institution to inform the borrower that the investor's requirements include a ranking of options and that an offer of a loan modification option necessarily results in a denial of any other options ranked below the option for which the borrower is eligible (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(d)-1).
- If the institution denied the application due to a net present value calculation, determine whether the institution disclosed the inputs used in that calculation (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(d)-2).
- If the institution established a hierarchy of eligibility criteria and, after reaching the first criterion that causes a denial, did not evaluate whether the borrower would have satisfied the remaining criteria, determine whether the institution identified in the notice: (i) the specific reason or reasons why the borrower was actually rejected, and (ii) that the borrower was not evaluated on other criteria. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(d)-4).

  NOTE: An institution is not required to determine or disclose whether a borrower would have been denied based on other criteria if the servicer did not actually evaluate these additional criteria (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(d)-4).

Borrower response (12 CFR 1024.41(e))

125. If institution received the complete application at least 90 days before a foreclosure sale and offered a loss mitigation option, determine whether the institution provided the borrower with at least 14 days to accept or reject any offered loan modification option after the servicer provided notice of the offer to the borrower (12 CFR 1024.41(e)(1)).

NOTE:

- If no foreclosure sale was scheduled when the servicer received the application, the application is considered to have been received more than 90 days before any foreclosure sale. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(b)(3)-1).
- The acceptance period can be extended if, within 14 days, the borrower makes an appeal of a denial of any loan modification option pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(h). (12 CFR 1024.41(e)(2)(iii)). In the event of an appeal, the borrower's time for acceptance is extended to 14 days after the institution provides a notice of its determination of the appeal. (12 CFR 1024.41(e)(2)(iii)).

126. If institution received the complete application fewer than 90 days before a foreclosure sale but more than 37 days before the sale and offered a loss mitigation option, determine whether the institution provided the borrower with at least seven days to accept or reject any offered loss mitigation options after the servicer provided notice of the offer to the borrower (12 CFR 1024.41(e)(1)).

127. If the institution offered a borrower a trial loan modification plan and the borrower did not respond within seven or 14 days (as applicable under 12 CFR 1024.41(e)(1)), determine (i) whether the borrower submitted payments in accordance with the offered plan, and (ii) if so, whether the institution gave the borrower a reasonable period of time to fulfill any remaining requirements to accept the plan (12 CFR 1024.41(e)(2)(ii)).

Prohibition on foreclosure referral and sale (12 CFR 1024.41(f) and 1024.41(g))

128. Determine whether the institution made the first judicial or non-judicial foreclosure notice or filing without meeting one of the following conditions: (i) the borrower was more than 120 days delinquent; (ii) the foreclosure is based on a borrower's violation of a due-on-sale clause; or (iii) the institution is joining the foreclosure action of a subordinate or superior lienholder (12 CFR 1024.41(f)(1)). (Note that this requirement as applicable to small servicers is addressed below.)

129. If the institution received a complete loss mitigation application either within the first 120 days of delinquency or before the institution made the first judicial or non-judicial foreclosure notice or filing, determine whether the institution made the first foreclosure notice or filing only after one of the following occurred: (i) the institution notified the borrower that the borrower is ineligible for any loss mitigation option and if an appeal is available, either the appeal period expired or the appeal had been denied; (ii) the borrower rejected all the offered loss mitigation options; or (iii) the borrower failed to perform under a loss mitigation agreement (12 CFR 1024.41(f)(2)).

130. If the institution received a complete loss mitigation application after the institution made the first foreclosure notice or filing required under applicable law but more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale, determine whether the institution improperly conducted a foreclosure sale or moved for foreclosure judgment or order of sale before one of the following occurred: (i) the institution notified the borrower that it had denied the loss mitigation application for any loss mitigation option and if an appeal is available, either the appeal period had expired or the appeal had been denied; (ii) the borrower rejected all the offered loss mitigation options; or (iii) the borrower fails to perform under a loss mitigation agreement (12 CFR 1024.41(g)).

NOTE: A servicer must instruct foreclosure counsel promptly not to make a dispositive motion for foreclosure judgment or order of sale; where such a dispositive motion is pending, to avoid a ruling on the motion or issuance of an order of sale; and, where a sale is scheduled, to prevent conduct of a foreclosure sale, unless one of the conditions in 12 CFR 1024.41(g)(1) through (3) is met. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(g)-3). A servicer is not relieved of its obligations because foreclosure counsel's actions or inaction caused a violation. Absent one of the specified circumstances, conduct of the sale violates the regulation, even if a person other than the servicer administers or conducts the foreclosure sale proceedings.

Complete the following if (a) the institution denied a complete loss mitigation application for any trial or permanent loan modification option, and (b) the institution received that complete application (i) before the borrower was more than 120 days delinquent, (ii) before the institution made the first judicial or non-judicial foreclosure notice or filing, or (iii) at least 90 days before a foreclosure sale.

131. For any borrower who timely appealed a denial of an available loan modification option, determine whether the institution provided a notice to the borrower within 30 days stating (i) whether it will offer the borrower a loss mitigation option based on the appeal, and (ii) if applicable, how long the borrower has to accept or reject this loss mitigation option or a previously offered loss mitigation option (12 CFR 1024.41(h)(4)).

132. For any appeal that the institution granted, determine whether the institution afforded the borrower 14 days to accept or reject any offered loan modification option (12 CFR 1024.41(h)(4)).

133. Determine whether the institution used different personnel to evaluate the appeal than the personnel who had evaluated the borrower's loss mitigation application (12 CFR 1024.41(h)(3)).

Duplicative Requests (12 CFR 1024.41(i))

134. Determine whether the institution complied with the loss mitigation procedures for all loss mitigation applications, unless the servicer previously complied for a complete loss mitigation application from a borrower and the borrower has been delinquent at all times since submitting the prior complete application.

Small Servicers (12 CFR 1024.41(j))

135. If the institution is a small servicer, determine whether the institution made the first foreclosure notice or filing before (i) the borrower was more than 120 days delinquent, (ii) the foreclosure is based on a borrower's violation of a due-on-sale clause, or (iii) the institution is joining a subordinate or superior lienholder's foreclosure action (12 CFR 1024.41(j)).

136. If the institution is a small servicer and the borrower is performing according to the terms of a loss mitigation agreement, determine whether the institution (i) made the first foreclosure notice or filing, (ii) moved for a foreclosure judgment or order of sale, or (iii) conducted a foreclosure sale (12 CFR 1024.41(j)).

137. If the transferee (new) servicer acquired the servicing of a mortgage loan with a pending loss mitigation application as of the transfer date, determine whether the transferee servicer complied with the requirements of the loss mitigation procedures within the applicable timeframes. (The transfer date is defined for these provisions as the date on which the transferee servicer will begin accepting payments relating to the mortgage loan, as disclosed on the notice of transfer of servicing pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.33(b)(4)(iv). (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(1)(ii)).)

     NOTE: In general, subject to the modifications below, the institution must comply within the timeframes that were applicable to the transferor (previous) servicer based on the date the transferor servicer received the loss mitigation application. A borrower continues to retain the rights and protections under 12 CFR 1024.41(c) through (h) to which a borrower was entitled before the servicing was transferred. (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(1)(i)). A loss mitigation application is considered pending if the application is subject to the loss mitigation rules but was not fully resolved prior to the transfer date (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(k)-1).

     a. If a transferee servicer acquired the servicing of a mortgage loan for which the period to provide the acknowledgement notice required by 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) had not expired as of the transfer date and the transferor did not provide the acknowledgement notice, determine whether the transferee servicer provided the acknowledgment notice within 10 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) of the transfer date. (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(2)(i)).

b. If a transferee servicer was required to provide the acknowledgment notice as discussed in the previous question:

   i. Determine that the servicer did not make the first notice or filing for any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process prior to the reasonable date disclosed in the acknowledgment notice to submit documents and information necessary to complete the application, notwithstanding the exceptions contained in 12 CFR 1024.41(f)(1). (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(2)(ii)(A)).

   ii. And the borrower submitted a complete loss mitigation application to the transferee or transferor servicer 37 or fewer days before the foreclosure sale but on or before the reasonable date disclosed in the acknowledgment notice, determine whether the servicer complied with the requirements regarding the evaluation of the loss mitigation application (12 CFR 1024.41(c)); denial of loan modification options (12 CFR 1024.41(d), and prohibition on foreclosure sale (1024.41(g)). (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(2)(ii)(B)).

c. For pending complete loss mitigation applications as of the transfer date, determine whether the transferee servicer complied with the applicable requirements regarding complete loss mitigation applications (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)) and information not in the borrower's control (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)) within 30 days of the transfer date (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(3)).

d. For applications subject to the appeal process, if a transferee servicer acquired the servicing of a mortgage loan for which an appeal of a transferor servicer's determination pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(h) had not been resolved by the transferor servicer as of the transfer date or was timely filed after the transfer date, determine whether:

   i. The transferee servicer made a determination on the appeal, if it was able to do so, and provided the required appeal determination notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(h)(4) within 30 days of the transfer date or 30 days of the date the borrower made the appeal, whichever is later (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(4)(i)).

e. If a transferee servicer was unable to make a determination on an application subject to the appeal process, determine whether the servicer complied with the loss mitigation provisions, including evaluating the borrower for all loss mitigation options available to the borrower from the transferee servicer (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(4)(ii)).

f. Determine whether the transferee servicer allowed the borrower to accept or reject a pending loss mitigation offer during the unexpired balance of the applicable time period as required by 12 CFR 1024.41(k)(5).

Applications Received from Successors in Interest (Effective April 19, 2018)

138. If the servicer receives a loss mitigation application from a confirmed successor in interest, determine whether the servicer is treating a confirmed successor in interest as a borrower for purposes of the loss mitigation procedures and complying with the relevant requirements (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)-1.i).

139. If the servicer receives a loss mitigation application from a potential successor in interest and elects not to review and evaluate the loss mitigation application before confirming the person's identity and ownership interest in the property:

    - Determine whether the servicer has preserved the loss mitigation application and all documents submitted in connection with the application (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)-1.ii).

    - Upon confirmation of the successor in interest's status, determine whether the servicer has reviewed and evaluated the loss mitigation application in accordance with the procedures set forth in 12 CFR 1024.41 if the property is the confirmed successor in interest's principal residence and the loss mitigation procedures are otherwise applicable (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)-1.ii).

      NOTE: For purposes of 12 CFR 1024.41, the servicer must treat the loss mitigation application as if it had been received on the date that the servicer confirmed the successor in interest's status. If the loss mitigation application is incomplete at the time of confirmation because documents submitted by the successor in interest became stale or invalid after they were submitted and confirmation is 45 days or more before a foreclosure sale, the servicer must identify the stale or invalid documents that need to be updated in a notice pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2) (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)-1.ii).

Secure and Fair Enforcement for Mortgage Licensing Act[1]

The Secure and Fair Enforcement for Mortgage Licensing Act of 2008[2] (SAFE Act) was enacted on July 30, 2008, and mandates a nationwide licensing and registration system for residential mortgage loan originators (MLOs).[3]

The SAFE Act prohibits individuals from engaging in the business of a residential mortgage loan originator without first obtaining and maintaining annually:

- For individuals who are employees of covered financial institution, registration as a registered mortgage loan originator and a unique identifier (federal registration), or

- For all other individuals, a state license and registration as a state-licensed mortgage loan originator, and a unique identifier (state licensing/registration).

The SAFE Act requires that federal registration and state licensing and registration be accomplished through the same online registration system, the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry (Registry).

The objectives of the SAFE Act include aggregating and improving the flow of information to and between regulators; providing increased accountability and tracking of MLOs; enhancing consumer protections; supporting anti-fraud measures; and providing consumers with easily accessible information at no charge regarding the employment history of and publicly adjudicated disciplinary and enforcement actions against MLOs.[4]

[3] More specifically, the SAFE Act required the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC), Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (Board), Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS), and National Credit Union Administration (NCUA), with the Farm Credit Administration (FCA) and through the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC), to develop and maintain a federal system for registering MLOs employed by covered financial institutions.

[4] SAFE Act Sec. 1502.

On July 28, 2010, the OCC, Board, FDIC, OTS, NCUA, and FCA (collectively the Agencies) published substantively similar regulations implementing the SAFE Act federal registration requirements for the institutions they supervise and the institutions' MLO employees (SAFE Act regulation).[5]

On July 21, 2011, Title X of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (Dodd-Frank Act) transferred rule-making authority for the SAFE Act from the Agencies to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB).[6] On December 19, 2011, the CFPB restated the implementing SAFE Act regulations to 12 CFR 1007 (76 Federal Register 78483), establishing a new Regulation G, SAFE Mortgage Licensing Act–Federal Registration of Residential Mortgage Loan Originators.[7]

Annual renewal period means November 1st through December 31st of each year.

Administrative or clerical tasks means the receipt, collection, and distribution of information common for the processing or underwriting of a loan in the residential mortgage industry and communication with a consumer to obtain information necessary for the processing or underwriting of a residential mortgage loan.

Covered financial institution means any national bank, federal branch or agency of a foreign bank, member bank, insured state non-member bank, (including state-licensed insured branches of foreign banks), savings association, or certain of their subsidiaries; branch or agency of a foreign bank or commercial lending company owned or controlled by a foreign bank; Farm

See also the revised Federal Register Preamble (Aug. 23, 2010), available at http://edocket.access.gpo.gov/2010/pdf/C1-2010-18148.pdf (revising footnote numbering from the original release). CFPB's SAFE Act regulations for federally regulated institutions subject to its supervisory responsibilities are at 12 CFR Part 1007, followed by its rule for State compliance and Bureau registration at 12 CFR Part 1008. 76 Fed. Reg. 78483 (Dec. 19, 2011).

[6] On July 21, 2011, pursuant to the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010 (Dodd-Frank Act), the CFPB assumed: (1) responsibility for developing and maintaining the federal registration system (including rule-making authority), (2) supervisory and enforcement authority for SAFE Act compliance for entities under the CFPB's jurisdiction, and (3) authority to oversee state compliance with SAFE Act requirements that had previously been under HUD's authority. Refer to Dodd-Frank Act Secs. 1025, 1061, and 1100. In addition, the Dodd-Frank Act merged functions of the OTS into the OCC, FDIC, and Board.

[7] The SAFE Act also authorized the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) to monitor and enforce states' compliance with the statute's requirements for state licensing and registration, and HUD issued rules setting minimum standards for state licensing and registration. 76 Fed. Reg. 38464 (June 30, 2011). The Dodd-Frank Act transferred that authority from HUD to the CFPB. The CFPB thereafter published Regulation H, SAFE Mortgage Licensing Act – State Compliance and Bureau Registration System, 12 CFR Part 1008, based on HUD's regulation. 76 Fed. Reg. 78483, Dec. 19, 2011. These examination procedures do not cover the state registration requirements.

Credit System institution; or federally insured credit union, including certain non-federally insured credit unions.[8]

Employee is not defined in the SAFE Act or SAFE Act regulation. However, the regulation's preamble explains that the meaning of "employee" under the SAFE Act regulation is consistent with the common-law right-to-control test. For example, the results of this test generally determine whether an institution files an Internal Revenue Service Form W-2 or Form 1099 for an individual.[9]

Mortgage loan originator or MLO means an individual who (1) takes a residential mortgage loan application and (2) offers or negotiates terms of a residential mortgage loan for compensation or gain. The term mortgage loan originator does not include:

- An individual who performs purely administrative or clerical tasks on behalf of an individual who is an MLO;
- An individual who only performs real estate brokerage activities (as defined in 12 U.S.C. Section 5102(3)(D)) and is licensed or registered as a real estate broker in accordance with applicable state law, unless the individual is compensated by a lender, a mortgage broker, or other MLO or by any agent of such lender, mortgage broker, or other MLO, and meets the MLO definition; or
- An individual or entity solely involved in extensions of credit related to time-share plans, as that term is defined in 11 U.S.C. Section 101(53D).

Appendix A to the SAFE Act regulation provides examples of activities of taking a loan application and offering or negotiating loan terms that fall within or outside of the definition of MLOs for federal registration purposes.

Registry means the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry, or NMLS system, developed and maintained by the Conference of State Bank Supervisors and the American Association of Residential Mortgage Regulators for the state licensing and registration of state-licensed MLOs, and through which federal MLO registrations must be accomplished.[10]

[8] 12 CFR Secs. 1007.101(c), 1007.102.

[9] See 75 Fed. Reg. at 44664 for a discussion of the meaning of "employee" as used in the SAFE Act regulation. Covered financial institutions that are credit unions sometimes rely upon volunteers to originate mortgage loans. The right-to-control test under the common law agency doctrine likewise applies to these credit unions. Credit union management establishes the policies, procedures, and practices that volunteers use in performing their functions. Therefore, these volunteers qualify as employees of the covered financial institution for purposes of the SAFE Act regulation.

[10] See the Nationwide Mortgage and Licensing System and Registry website at: http://mortgage.nationwidelicensingsystem.org/fedreg/Pages/default.aspx. System information on federal registration can be found under the Federal Registration tab at that site.

Registered mortgage loan originator or registrant means any individual who (1) meets the MLO definition; (2) is an employee of a covered financial institution; (3) is registered pursuant to the regulation with the Registry; and (4) maintains a unique identifier through the Registry.

Residential mortgage loan means any loan primarily for personal, family, or household use that is secured by a mortgage, deed of trust, or other equivalent consensual security interest on a dwelling (as defined in Section 103(v) of the Truth in Lending Act, 15 U.S.C. Section 1602(v)) or residential real estate upon which is constructed or intended to be constructed a dwelling (including manufactured homes) and includes refinancings, reverse mortgages, home equity lines of credit, and other first and additional lien loans.

Unique identifier means a number or other identifier that: (1) permanently identifies a registered MLO; (2) is assigned by protocols established by the Registry and the Bureau to facilitate electronic tracking of MLOs, as well as uniform identification of, and public access to, the employment history of and the publicly adjudicated disciplinary and enforcement actions against MLOs; and (3) must not be used for purposes other than those set forth under the SAFE Act.

De Minimis Exception – 12 CFR 1007.101(c)(2)

The SAFE Act regulation provides an exception to the MLO registration requirements for any employee of a covered financial institution who has never been registered or licensed through the Registry as an MLO if during the past 12 months the employee acted as an MLO for five or fewer residential mortgage loans.

When an institution relies on the de minimis exception in lieu of registration, the MLO employee must register prior to originating the sixth residential mortgage loan within 12 months. Covered financial institutions are prohibited from engaging in any acts or practices to evade the registration requirement.

Mortgage Loan Originator (MLO) Registration Requirements – 12 CFR 1007.103

Each MLO employee of a covered financial institution must register with the Registry,[11] obtain a "unique identifier," maintain the registration by updating certain information within 30 days of specified changes, and annually renew the registration during the annual renewal period.

[11] The SAFE Act rule implementing federal registration took effect on October 1, 2010. It provided a registration period from January 31, 2011, to July 29, 2011, for MLOs who are employees of covered financial institutions to register. After July 29, 2011, those employees must meet the registration requirements before they may originate residential mortgage loans.

Initial Registration – 12 CFR 1007.103(a)

Each employee of a federally regulated institution who is an MLO must submit to the Registry the following:

- identifying information, including name, home address, social security number, gender, date of birth, and principal business location;
- financial-services-related employment history for the prior 10 years;
- disclosure of specified criminal, civil, judicial, or state, federal, or foreign financial authority regulatory actions against the employee; and
- fingerprints, for purposes of a Federal Bureau of Investigation background check.

The employee must attest to the correctness of the information submitted to the Registry; must authorize the Registry and the institution to obtain information related to any administrative, civil, or criminal action to which the employee is a party; and must authorize the Registry to make certain information available to the public.

Maintaining Registration – 12 CFR 1007.103(b)

Renewal

An MLO must renew his or her registration during the annual renewal period by confirming and updating his or her registration records. This requirement does not apply to an MLO who completed his or her initial registration less than six months prior to the end of the annual renewal period. Any registration that is not renewed during this period will become inactive, and the individual cannot act as an MLO at a covered financial institution until the registration requirements are met. Individuals who fail to update their registrations during this two-month renewal period may renew their registration at any time and need not wait until the start of the next annual renewal period.

Updates to Registration

An MLO must update his or her registration within 30 days for specified significant changes, including name changes, employment termination, and reportable changes to legal or regulatory actions.

Previously Registered Employees – Change of Employment

The regulations provide streamlined registration requirements for an MLO employee previously registered or licensed through the Registry who maintained this registration or license and who changes employment. Such an employee must update certain information, provide the required attestation and authorizations, and submit new fingerprints unless the employee has fingerprints on file with the Registry that are less than three years old. There is no grace period in this situation. An employee must update his or her Registry record before acting as a loan originator for the new employer.

Previously Registered Employees – Mergers, Acquisitions, or Reorganizations

A registered or licensed MLO whose employment changes as the result of a merger, acquisition, or reorganization has 60 days from the effective date of a merger, acquisition, or reorganization to update information in the Registry.

Financial Institution Requirements for MLO Registration, Renewal, and Changes to Information – 12 CFR 1007.103(e)

Required Financial Institution Information – 12 CFR 1007.103(e)(1)(i)

In connection with the registration of one or more MLOs, financial institutions and certain of their subsidiaries must submit certain required information to the Registry:

- contact information;
- Employer Tax Identification Number;
- Research Statistics Supervision and Discount (RSSD) number issued by the Board;
- primary Federal regulator;
- primary point of contact for the Registry;
- individuals with authority to enter information into the Registry; and
- if a subsidiary of a financial institution, indication of that fact and the RSSD number of the parent institution, as applicable.

Once registered, the institution will receive an NMLS identification number for the institution to use in attesting to MLO employment and for other Safe Act-related purposes.

Attestation – 12 CFR 1007.103(e)(1)(ii)

An individual with authority to enter information in the Registry must verify his or her identity and attest that he or she has that authority, that the information is correct, and that the institution will keep the information current.[12]

[12] An institution may designate one or more individuals to serve as the system administrator(s) who may submit required information to the Registry on behalf of employees and attest to their authority to submit information, the accuracy of information submitted, and that the institution will keep information current and submit updates on a timely basis. System administrators generally may not be MLOs; however, an institution is exempt from this regulatory requirement if it has 10 or fewer full-time employees and is not a subsidiary.

A covered financial institution must require an MLO employee to register with the Registry, maintain this registration, and obtain a unique identifier. A covered financial institution must also confirm each MLO's employment status once the MLO submits registration information to the Registry and before the registration is activated.

Within 30 days of the date an MLO ceases to be an employee of the institution, the institution must notify the Registry of that fact along with the date the MLO ceased being an employee, so that consumers searching for an MLO in the publicly available consumer access portal will know that the MLO no longer has a relationship with the institution.

Renewal and Updates – 12 CFR 1007.103(e)(1)(iii) and (iv)

A covered financial institution must update the information it submitted to the Registry during the annual registration renewal period and must confirm the registration information provided by MLO employees during this period.

An institution must update the required institution information provided to the Registry within 30 days of any change in such information.

Policies and Procedures – 12 CFR 1007.104

Covered financial institutions that have one or more MLO employees must adopt and follow written policies and procedures to carry out their SAFE Act responsibilities.[13] The requirement to adopt and follow policies and procedures applies to all covered financial institutions that employ individual MLOs, where MLOs act within the scope of their employment, and regardless of the application of any de minimis exception to their employees. In addition, covered financial institutions must conduct annual independent compliance tests to ensure compliance with the regulation. The policies and procedures must be appropriate to the nature, size, complexity, and scope of the institution's mortgage lending activities and apply only to those employees acting within the scope of their employment at the institution. The policies and procedures must:

- Establish a process for identifying which employees of covered financial institutions must be registered;
- Require that all employees who are MLOs be informed of the registration requirements of the SAFE Act and SAFE Act regulation and instructed on how to comply;
- Establish procedures to comply with the SAFE Act regulation's unique identifier requirements;
- Establish reasonable procedures for confirming the adequacy and accuracy of MLO employee registrations, including updates and renewals, by comparisons with its own records;

[13] The Registry and the Agencies do not screen or approve registrations received from employees of Agency-related institutions.

- Establish reasonable procedures and tracking systems for monitoring compliance with registration and renewal requirements and procedures;
- Provide for annual independent testing for compliance with the SAFE Act regulation by institution personnel or an outside party;
- Provide for appropriate action if an employee fails to comply with the registration requirements of the SAFE Act regulations or the institution's related policies and procedures, including prohibiting such employees from acting as MLOs or other appropriate disciplinary actions;
- Establish a process for reviewing employee criminal history background reports received pursuant to the regulation, taking appropriate action consistent with applicable federal law[14] and implementing regulations with respect to the reports, and maintaining records of the reports and actions taken with respect to applicable employees;[15] and
- Establish procedures designed to ensure that any third party with which the institution has arrangements related to mortgage loan origination has policies and procedures to comply with the SAFE Act and SAFE Act regulation, including appropriate licensing and/or registration of individuals acting as MLOs.[16]

Unique Identifier – 12 CFR 1007.105

When an MLO registers with the Registry, he or she receives a unique identifier — a series of numeric characters assigned for life. The unique identifiers allow MLOs to be tracked if they move between state and federal jurisdictions and/or change employers, and help consumers to find certain information about a particular MLO when they search on the Registry's consumer access portal. The MLO information that is publicly available on the consumer access portal will ultimately include federal and state registrations and licenses held, the MLO's employment history, and publicly adjudicated disciplinary and enforcement actions, if any.

To make sure that consumers have access to an MLO's unique identifier before committing to a mortgage loan transaction, an MLO must provide the unique identifier upon request (orally or in writing), before acting as an MLO (orally or in writing), and in any initial written communication (paper or electronic) from the MLO to the consumer (such as a commitment letter, good faith estimate, or disclosure statement). MLO unique identifiers may be used on written materials or promotional items distributed by the institution for general use, for example on loan program descriptions, advertisements, business cards, stationery, notepads, and similar materials; the SAFE Act regulation does not prohibit such use.

The regulation also requires institutions to make MLO unique identifiers available to consumers in a practicable way. This could be achieved, for example, by:

- Directing consumers to a listing of registered MLOs and corresponding unique identifiers on the institution's website;
- Posting the information prominently in a publicly accessible place, such as a branch office lobby or lending office reception area; and/or
- Establishing a process to ensure that institution personnel provide MLO unique identifiers when requested by consumers from employees other than the MLO.

Relation to Other Laws

TILA, GSE, and HUD Requirements

Title XIV, Section 1402 of the Dodd-Frank Act amended the Truth in Lending Act (TILA) to require (1) MLOs to include on all loan documents any unique identifier of the MLO provided by the NMLS, and (2) the CFPB to issue implementing regulations requiring depository institutions to establish and maintain procedures reasonably designed to assure and monitor compliance with the SAFE Act's federal registration requirements.[17]

In 2009, the Federal Housing Finance Agency directed government-sponsored enterprises (GSEs) Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to require mortgage loan applications to include the MLO's unique identifier.[18] The GSEs announced that for federally regulated institutions, the unique identifier information is required for all applications on or after July 29, 2011.[19]

On January 5, 2011, HUD issued a mortgagee letter requiring the collection of NMLS unique identifiers for all individuals and entities participating in the origination of Federal Housing Administration (FHA) loans.[20] The mortgagee letter also requires all FHA-approved mortgagees

Examination Objectives

- To determine whether the financial institution has adopted written policies and procedures designed to assure compliance with the SAFE Act regulation.
- To determine whether the annual independent testing of the institution's policies and procedures for assuring compliance with the SAFE Act regulation has been conducted.
- To determine whether any violations or deficiencies identified during the independent testing have been corrected and that steps have been taken to ensure they do not recur.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the financial institution, or any of its subsidiaries, has one or more MLO employees. For those institutions without any MLO employees, these examination procedures do not need to be completed. (12 CFR 1007.103(a)(2))

2. Determine for those financial institutions with MLO employees whether the institution has adopted written policies and procedures and conducts annual independent compliance tests to assure compliance with the SAFE Act regulation. If the institution has failed to adopt policies and procedures and to perform annual independent compliance tests, the examiners should address the violation in the examination report and require corrective action. (12 CFR 1007.104)

Truth in Lending Act[1]

The Truth in Lending Act (TILA), 15 U.S.C. 1601 et seq., was enacted on May 29, 1968, as title I of the Consumer Credit Protection Act (Pub. L. 90-321). TILA, implemented by Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026), became effective July 1, 1969.

TILA was first amended in 1970 to prohibit unsolicited credit cards. Additional major amendments to TILA and Regulation Z were made by the Fair Credit Billing Act of 1974, the Consumer Leasing Act of 1976, the Truth in Lending Simplification and Reform Act of 1980, the Fair Credit and Charge Card Disclosure Act of 1988, and the Home Equity Loan Consumer Protection Act of 1988.

Regulation Z also was amended to implement Section 1204 of the Competitive Equality Banking Act of 1987, and in 1988, to include adjustable-rate mortgage loan disclosure requirements. All consumer leasing provisions were deleted from Regulation Z in 1981 and transferred to Regulation M (12 CFR 1013).

The Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act of 1994 (HOEPA) amended TILA. The law imposed new disclosure requirements and substantive limitations on certain closed-end mortgage loans bearing rates or fees above a certain percentage or amount. The law also included new disclosure requirements to assist consumers in comparing the costs and other material considerations involved in a reverse mortgage transaction and authorized the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (Board) to prohibit specific acts and practices in connection with mortgage transactions.

The TILA amendments of 1995 dealt primarily with tolerances for real estate secured credit. Regulation Z was amended on September 14, 1996, to incorporate changes to TILA. Specifically, the revisions limit lenders' liability for disclosure errors in real estate secured loans consummated after September 30, 1995. The Economic Growth and Regulatory Paperwork Reduction Act of 1996 further amended TILA. The amendments were made to simplify and improve disclosures related to credit transactions.

The Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (the E-Sign Act), 15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq., was enacted in 2000 and did not require implementing regulations. On November 9, 2007, amendments to Regulation Z and the official commentary were issued to simplify the regulation and provide guidance on the electronic delivery of disclosures consistent with the E-Sign Act.

In July 2008, Regulation Z was amended to protect consumers in the mortgage market from unfair, abusive, or deceptive lending and servicing practices. Specifically, the change applied protections to a newly defined category of "higher-priced mortgage loans" (HPML) that includes virtually all closed-end subprime loans secured by a consumer's principal dwelling. The revisions also applied new protections to mortgage loans secured by a dwelling, regardless of loan price, and required the delivery of early disclosures for more types of transactions. The revisions also banned several advertising practices deemed deceptive or misleading. The Mortgage Disclosure Improvement Act of 2008 (MDIA) broadened and added to the requirements of the Board's July 2008 final rule by requiring early Truth in Lending disclosures for more types of transactions and by adding a waiting period between the time when disclosures are given and consummation of the transaction. In 2009, Regulation Z was amended to address those provisions. The MDIA also requires disclosure of payment examples if the loan's interest rate or payments can change, as well as disclosure of a statement that there is no guarantee the consumer will be able to refinance in the future. In 2010, Regulation Z was amended to address these provisions, which became effective on January 30, 2011.

In December 2008, the Board adopted two final rules pertaining to open-end (not home-secured) credit. The first rule involved Regulation Z revisions and made comprehensive changes applicable to several disclosures required for: applications and solicitations, new accounts, periodic statements, change in terms notifications, and advertisements. The second was a rule published under the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) Act and was issued jointly with the Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS) and the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA)), which sought to protect consumers from unfair acts or practices with respect to consumer credit card accounts. Before these rules became effective, however, the Credit Card Accountability Responsibility and Disclosure Act of 2009 (Credit CARD Act) amended TILA and established a number of new requirements for open-end consumer credit plans. Several provisions of the Credit CARD Act are similar to provisions in the Board's December 2008 TILA revisions and the joint FTC Act rule, but other portions of the Credit CARD Act address practices or mandate disclosures that were not addressed in these rules. In light of the Credit CARD Act, the Board, the NCUA, and the OTS withdrew the substantive requirements of the joint FTC Act rule. On July 1, 2010, compliance with the provisions of the Board's rule that were not impacted by the Credit CARD Act became effective.

The Credit CARD Act provisions became effective in three stages. The provisions effective first (August 20, 2009) required creditors to increase the amount of notice consumers receive before the rate on a credit card account is increased or a significant change is made to the account's terms. These amendments also allowed consumers to reject such increases and changes by informing the creditor before the increase or change goes into effect. The provisions effective next (February 22, 2010) involved rules regarding interest rate increases, over-the-limit transactions, and student cards. Finally, the provisions effective last (August 22, 2010) addressed the reasonableness and proportionality of penalty fees and charges and reevaluation of rate increases.

In 2009, Regulation Z was amended following the passage of the Higher Education Opportunity Act (HEOA) by adding disclosure and timing requirements that apply to lenders making private education loans.

In 2009, the Helping Families Save Their Homes Act amended TILA to establish a new requirement for notifying consumers of the sale or transfer of their mortgage loans. The purchaser or assignee that acquires the loan must provide the required disclosures no later than 30 days after the date on which it acquired the loan.

In 2010, the Board further amended Regulation Z to prohibit payment to a loan originator that is based on the terms or conditions of the loan, other than the amount of credit extended. The amendment applies to mortgage brokers and the companies that employ them, as well as to mortgage loan officers employed by depository institutions and other lenders. In addition, the amendment prohibits a loan originator from directing or "steering" a consumer to a loan that is not in the consumer's interest to increase the loan originator's compensation.

The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010 (Dodd-Frank Act) amended TILA to include several provisions that protect the integrity of the appraisal process when a consumer's home is securing the loan. The rule also requires that appraisers receive customary and reasonable payments for their services. The appraiser and loan originator compensation requirements had a mandatory compliance date of April 6, 2011.

The Dodd-Frank Act generally granted rulemaking authority under TILA to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB or Bureau). Title XIV of the Dodd-Frank Act included a number of amendments to TILA, and in 2013, the CFPB issued rules to implement them. Prohibitions on mandatory arbitration and waivers of consumer rights, as well as requirements that lengthen the time creditors must maintain an escrow account for higher-priced mortgage loans, were generally effective June 1, 2013. Most of the remaining amendments to Regulation Z were effective in January 2014.[2] These amendments include ability-to-repay requirements for mortgage loans, appraisal requirements for higher-priced mortgage loans, a revised and expanded test for high-cost mortgages, as well as additional restrictions on those loans, expanded requirements for servicers of mortgage loans, refined loan originator compensation rules and loan origination qualification standards, and a prohibition on financing credit insurance for mortgage loans. The amendments also established new record retention requirements for certain provisions of TILA. On October 22, 2014, the CFPB issued a final rule providing an alternative small servicer definition for nonprofit entities and amended the ability-to-repay exemption for nonprofit entities. The final rule also provided a temporary cure mechanism for the points and fees limit that applies to qualified mortgages, with a sunset date of January 10, 2021. The final rule was effective on November 3, 2014, except for one provision that became effective on October 3, 2015. On October 2, 2015, the CFPB revised the definitions of small creditor and rural and underserved areas, which affect the availability of some special provisions and exemptions to Regulation Z's Ability-to-Repay, high-cost mortgage, and HPML escrow requirements. The final rule was effective January 1, 2016.[3] In March 2016, the CFPB issued an interim final rule exercising the expanded authority granted to the Bureau by the Helping Expand Lending Practices in Rural Communities Act to exempt small creditors that operate in rural or underserved areas.[4] The interim final rule was effective March 31, 2016.

[2] The amendment to 12 CFR 1026.35(e) was effective July 24, 2013; the amendments to 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii), 1026.36(a), (b), and (j), and commentary to 12 CFR 1026.25(c)(2), 1026.35, and 1026.36(a), (b), (d), and (f) in Supp. I to Part 1026, were effective January 1, 2014.

In 2013, the CFPB also revised several open-end credit provisions in Regulation Z. The Bureau revised the general limitation on the total amount of account fees that a credit card issuer may require a consumer to pay. Effective March 28, 2013, the limit is 25 percent of the credit limit in effect when the account is opened and applies only during the first year after account opening. The CFPB also amended Regulation Z to remove the requirement that card issuers consider the consumer's independent ability to pay for applicants who are 21 or older and to permit issuers to consider income and assets to which such consumers have a reasonable expectation of access. This change was effective May 3, 2013, with a mandatory compliance date of November 4, 2013.

In 2013, the CFPB further amended Regulation Z as well as Regulation X, the regulation implementing the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA), to fulfill the mandate in the Dodd-Frank Act to integrate the mortgage disclosures under TILA and RESPA Sections 4 and 5 (the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure (TRID) Rule). Regulation Z now contains two new forms required for most closed-end consumer mortgage loans. The Loan Estimate is provided within three business days from application, and the Closing Disclosure is provided to consumers three business days before loan consummation. These disclosures must be used for mortgage loans for which the creditor or mortgage broker receives an application on or after October 3, 2015[5].

In 2016, the CFPB amended Regulation Z as well as Regulation E, the regulation implementing the Electronic Fund Transfer Act (EFTA), to extend protections to prepaid accounts. In Regulation E, tailored provisions governing disclosures, limited liability and error resolution, and periodic statements were adopted for prepaid accounts, along with new requirements regarding the posting and submission of prepaid account agreements. In Regulation Z, coverage of the term "credit card" was expanded to include "hybrid prepaid-credit card" as defined in 12 CFR 1026.61. The amendments to Regulation Z further regulate credit features that may be offered in conjunction with prepaid accounts. Together these amendments are known as the "Prepaid Rule". The Bureau further amended the Prepaid Rule in January 2018 to modify the definition of "business partner", in addition to making other changes, and extend the effective date of the Prepaid Rule, as amended, to April 1, 2019.

In 2017, the Bureau amended and clarified several provisions of Regulation Z[6], including creating tolerances for the total of payments disclosure, amending and clarifying the application of the good faith standard under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3) and related tolerances, and clarifying disclosure provisions related to construction loans. Mandatory compliance with most provisions of the amended rule began on October 1, 2018. In 2018, the Bureau further amended the rule to address when Closing Disclosures may be used to reset tolerances[7]. These provisions became effective June 1, 2018. On August 4, 2016, the CFPB issued a final rule to further clarify, revise, and amend provisions of Regulation Z and Regulation X[8]. The amendments in the final rule are referenced in this document as the "2016 Servicing Rule". The 2016 Servicing Rule establishes definitions of successor in interest and confirmed successor in interest in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(27), and provides that a confirmed successor in interest is a "consumer" for purposes of the mortgage servicing provisions in Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11)).[9] The 2016 Servicing Rule also adopts a general definition of delinquency that applies to all of the servicing provisions in Regulation X and the provisions regarding periodic statements for mortgage loans in Regulation Z. Furthermore, the 2016 Servicing Rule clarifies, revises, or amends provisions of Regulation Z relating to:

Other provisions of the rule were effective on October 3, 2015, regardless of whether an application was received on that date.

- Interest rate adjustment notices for adjustable-rate mortgages (ARMs) (12 CFR 1026.20);
- Prompt crediting of mortgage payments and responses to requests for payoff amounts (12 CFR 1026.36(c));
- Periodic statements for mortgage loans (12 CFR 1026.41), including requiring servicers to provide certain consumers in bankruptcy a modified periodic statement or coupon book; and
- Small servicers (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)).

The 2016 Servicing Rule took effect on October 19, 2017, except the provisions related to successors in interest and periodic statements for consumers in bankruptcy, which took effect on April 19, 2018.

The CFPB concurrently issued an interpretive rule under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) to clarify the interaction of FDCPA and specified mortgage servicing rules in Regulations X and Z.[10] This 2016 FDCPA Interpretive Rule constitutes an advisory opinion for purposes of FDCPA and provides safe harbors from liability for servicers acting in compliance with it.

In 2018, the Economic Growth, Regulatory Relief, and Consumer Protection Act (EGRRCPA)[11] amended several provisions of TILA, including: (1) the addition of a new qualified mortgage category for portfolio mortgages of certain insured depository institutions and insured credit

The 2016 Servicing Rule also changed several sections of the Official Interpretations of Regulation X, published in commentary.

The EGRRCPA also amended TILA to modify an exemption for manufactured or modular home retailers and their employees from loan originator compensation requirements when specific conditions are met, and amended the Secure and Fair Enforcement for Mortgage Licensing Act (SAFE Act) regarding employment transition of certain loan originators. These provisions were generally effective on May 24, 2018, except for the student loan protections, which became effective on November 24, 2018, and the SAFE Act changes, which became effective on November 24, 2019. On November 16, 2019, the Bureau issued an interpretive rule on the SAFE Act changes, with an effective date of November 24, 2019.[12]

In 2020 and 2021, the Bureau issued four final rules amending the qualified mortgage (also referred to as QM) provisions of Regulation Z. The first final rule extended the January 10, 2021 sunset date of a temporary qualified mortgage definition for certain loans eligible for purchase or guarantee by the Government Sponsored Enterprises (GSEs) until the mandatory compliance date of final amendments to the general qualified mortgage definition.[13] The second final rule (the General QM Final Rule) amended the general qualified mortgage definition, primarily by replacing its 43 percent debt-to-income ratio limit with a limit based on the loan's pricing.[14] The third final rule (the Seasoned QM Final Rule) created a new category of qualified mortgages—known as "seasoned qualified mortgages"—for first-lien, fixed-rate covered transactions that have met certain performance requirements over a seasoning period of at least 36 months, are held in portfolio by the originating creditor or first purchaser until the end of the seasoning period, comply with general restrictions on product features and points and fees, and meet certain underwriting requirements.[15] The fourth final rule extended the mandatory compliance date of the General QM Final Rule until October 1, 2022.[16] As a result of the fourth final rule, the temporary qualified mortgage definition, commonly known as the GSE Patch, will expire on October 1, 2022 or the date the applicable GSE exits conservatorship, whichever comes first.[17]

Format of Regulation Z

The rules creditors must follow differ depending on whether the creditor is offering open-end credit, such as credit cards or home-equity lines, or closed-end credit, such as car loans or mortgages.

Subpart A (12 CFR 1026.1 through 1026.4) of the regulation provides general information that applies to open-end and closed-end credit transactions. It sets forth definitions (12 CFR 1026.2) and stipulates which transactions are covered and which are exempt from the regulation (12 CFR 1026.3). It also contains the rules for determining which fees are finance charges (12 CFR 1026.4).

Subpart B (12 CFR 1026.5 through 1026.16) relates to open-end credit. It contains rules on account-opening disclosures (12 CFR 1026.6) and periodic statements (12 CFR 1026.7-8). It also describes special rules that apply to credit card transactions, treatment of payments (12 CFR 1026.10) and credit balances (12 CFR 1026.11), procedures for resolving credit billing errors (12 CFR 1026.13), annual percentage rate (APR) calculations (12 CFR 1026.14), rescission rights (12 CFR 1026.15), and advertising (12 CFR 1026.16).

Subpart C (12 CFR 1026.17 through 1026.24) relates to closed-end credit. It contains rules on disclosures (12 CFR 1026.17-20), treatment of credit balances (12 CFR 1026.21), annual percentage rate calculations (12 CFR 1026.22), rescission right (12 CFR 1026.23), and advertising (12 CFR 1026.24).

Subpart D (12 CFR 1026.25 through 1026.30) contains rules on record retention (12 CFR 1026.25), oral disclosures (12 CFR 1026.26), disclosures in languages other than English (12 CFR 1026.27), effect on state laws (12 CFR 1026.28), state exemptions (12 CFR 1026.29), and rate limitations (12 CFR 1026.30).

Subpart E (12 CFR 1026.31 through 1026.45) contains special rules for mortgage transactions. The rules require certain disclosures and provide limitations for closed-end credit transactions and open-end credit plans that have rates or fees above specified amounts or certain prepayment penalties (12 CFR 1026.32). Special disclosures are also required, including the total annual loan cost rate, for reverse mortgage transactions (12 CFR 1026.33). The rules also prohibit specific acts and practices in connection with high-cost mortgages, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.32(a), (12 CFR 1026.34); in connection with closed-end higher-priced mortgage loans, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.35(a), (12 CFR 1026.35); and in connection with an extension of credit secured by a dwelling (12 CFR 1026.36). This subpart also sets forth disclosure requirements, effective October 3, 2015, for certain closed-end transactions secured by real property, or a cooperative unit, as required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), 12 CFR 1026.37-38, disclosures for mortgage transfers (12 CFR 1026.39), and disclosure requirements for periodic statements for residential mortgage loans (12 CFR 1026.41). In addition, it contains minimum standards for transactions secured by a dwelling, including provisions relating to ability to repay and qualified mortgages (12 CFR 1026.43). This subpart includes the small servicer exemption found in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4).

Subpart F (12 CFR 1026.46 through 1026.48) relates to private education loans. It contains rules on disclosures (12 CFR 1026.46), limitations on changes in terms after approval (12 CFR 1026.48), the right to cancel the loan (12 CFR 1026.47), and limitations on co-branding in the marketing of private education loans (12 CFR 1026.48).

Subpart G (12 CFR 1026.51 through 1026.61) relates to credit card accounts, including covered separate credit features accessible by hybrid prepaid-credit cards, under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (except for 12 CFR 1026.57(c), which applies to all open-end credit plans). This subpart contains rules regarding disclosures provided on or with credit and charge card applications and solicitations (12 CFR 1026.60). It also contains rules regarding hybrid prepaid-credit cards (12 CFR 1026.61). Subpart G contains rules on evaluation of a consumer's ability to make the required payments under the terms of an account (12 CFR 1026.51), limits the fees that a consumer can be required to pay (12 CFR 1026.52), and contains rules on allocation of payments in excess of the minimum payment (12 CFR 1026.53). It also sets forth certain limitations on the imposition of finance charges as the result of a loss of a grace period (12 CFR 1026.54), and on increases in annual percentage rates, fees, and charges for credit card accounts (12 CFR 1026.55), including the reevaluation of rate increases (12 CFR 1026.59). This subpart prohibits the assessment of fees or charges for over-the-limit transactions unless the consumer affirmatively consents to the creditor's payment of over-the-limit transactions (12 CFR 1026.56). This subpart also sets forth rules for reporting and marketing of college student open-end credit (12 CFR 1026.57). Finally, it sets forth requirements for the Internet posting of credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (12 CFR 1026.58).

Several appendices contain information such as the procedures for determinations about state laws, state exemptions and issuance of official interpretations, special rules for certain kinds of credit plans, model disclosure forms, standards for determining ability to pay, and the rules for computing annual percentage rates in closed-end credit transactions and total-annual-loan-cost rates for reverse mortgage transactions.

Official interpretations of the regulation are published in a commentary. Good faith compliance with the commentary protects creditors from civil liability under TILA. In addition, the commentary includes more detailed information on disclosures or other actions required of creditors. It is virtually impossible to comply with Regulation Z without reference to and reliance on the commentary.

NOTE: The following narrative does not discuss all the sections of Regulation Z but rather highlights only certain sections of the regulation and TILA.

Truth in Lending Act Narrative

Subpart A – General

This subpart contains general information regarding both open-end and closed-end credit transactions. It sets forth definitions (12 CFR 1026.2) and sets out which transactions are covered and which are exempt from the regulation (12 CFR 1026.3). It also contains the rules for determining which fees are finance charges (12 CFR 1026.4).

Purpose of the TILA and Regulation Z

TILA is intended to ensure that credit terms are disclosed in a meaningful way so consumers can compare credit terms more readily and knowledgeably. Before its enactment, consumers were faced with a bewildering array of credit terms and rates. It was difficult to compare loans because they were seldom presented in the same format. Now, all creditors must use the same credit terminology and expressions of rates. In addition to providing a uniform system for disclosures, TILA:

- Protects consumers against inaccurate and unfair credit billing and credit card practices;
- Provides ability to repay requirements and other limitations applicable to credit cards;
- Provides consumers with rescission rights;
- Provides for rate caps on certain dwelling-secured loans;
- Imposes limitations on home equity lines of credit and certain closed-end home mortgages;
- Provides minimum standards for most dwelling-secured loans; and
- Delineates and prohibits unfair or deceptive mortgage lending practices.

TILA and Regulation Z do not, however, tell financial institutions how much interest they may charge or whether they must grant a consumer a loan.

Summary of Coverage Considerations – 12 CFR 1026.1 and 1026.2

Lenders must carefully consider several factors when deciding whether a loan is subject to Truth in Lending disclosures or other Regulation Z requirements. The coverage considerations under Regulation Z are addressed in more detail in the commentary to Regulation Z. For example, broad coverage considerations are included under 12 CFR 1026.1(c) of the regulation, and relevant definitions appear in 12 CFR 1026.2.

The 2016 Servicing Rule adds a definition of successor in interest. Successor in interest means a person to whom an ownership interest in a dwelling securing a closed-end consumer credit transaction is transferred from a consumer, provided that the transfer is:

- A transfer by devise, descent, or operation of law on the death of a joint tenant or tenant by the entirety;
- A transfer to a relative resulting from the death of the consumer;
- A transfer where the spouse or children of the consumer become an owner of the property;
- A transfer resulting from a decree of a dissolution of marriage, a legal separation agreement, or an incidental property settlement agreement, by which the spouse of the consumer becomes an owner of the property; or
- A transfer into an inter vivos trust in which the consumer is and remains a beneficiary and which does not relate to a transfer of rights of occupancy in the property.

12 CFR 1026.2(a)(27)(i)

Confirmed successor in interest means a successor in interest once a servicer has confirmed the successor in interest's identity and ownership interest in the dwelling (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(27)(ii)).

Under 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11), a confirmed successor in interest is a consumer for purposes of 12 CFR 1026.20(c) through (e), 1026.36(c), 1026.39, and 1026.41.

Further, a servicer that is debt collector under FDCPA with respect to a mortgage loan does not violate the prohibition in FDCPA Section 805(b) on communicating with third parties by communicating with a confirmed successor in interest in compliance with the mortgage servicing rules because "consumer" for purposes of FDCPA Section 805 includes any person who meets the definition in this part of confirmed successor in interest (Comment 2(a)(11)-4.ii).[18]

Exempt Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.3

The following transactions are exempt from Regulation Z:

- Credit extended primarily for a business, commercial, or agricultural purpose;
- Credit extended to other than a natural person (including credit to government agencies or instrumentalities);

  NOTE: Credit extended to trusts established for tax or estate planning purposes or to land trusts is considered to be extended to a natural person for purposes of the definition of "consumer" (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11), Comment 2(a)(11)-3).

[18] See also the 2016 FDCPA Interpretive Rule (81 Fed. Reg. 71977, 71979).

- Credit in excess of an annually adjusted threshold not secured by real property or by personal property used or expected to be used as the principal dwelling of the consumer;[19]
- Public utility credit;
- Credit extended by a broker-dealer registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission or the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, involving securities or commodities accounts;
- Home fuel budget plans not subject to a finance charge; and
- Certain student loan programs.

However, when a credit card is involved, generally exempt credit (e.g., business purpose credit) is subject to the requirements that govern the issuance of credit cards and liability for their unauthorized use. Credit cards must not be issued on an unsolicited basis and, if a credit card is lost or stolen, the cardholder must not be held liable for more than $50 for the unauthorized use of the card (Comment 3-1).

When determining whether credit is for consumer purposes, the creditor must evaluate all of the following:

- Any statement obtained from the consumer describing the purpose of the proceeds.
    - For example, a statement that the proceeds will be used for a vacation trip would indicate a consumer purpose.
    - If the loan has a mixed purpose (e.g., proceeds will be used to buy a car that will be used for personal and business purposes), the lender must look to the primary purpose of the loan to decide whether disclosures are necessary. A statement of purpose from the consumer will help the lender make that decision.
    - A checked box indicating that the loan is for a business purpose, absent any documentation showing the intended use of the proceeds could be insufficient evidence that the loan did not have a consumer purpose.
- The consumer's primary occupation and how it relates to the use of the proceeds. The higher the correlation between the consumer's occupation and the property purchased from the loan proceeds, the greater the likelihood that the loan has a business purpose. For example, proceeds used to purchase dental supplies for a dentist would indicate a business purpose.
- Personal management of the assets purchased from proceeds. The lower the degree of the borrower's personal involvement in the management of the investment or enterprise purchased by the loan proceeds, the less likely the loan will have a business purpose. For example, money borrowed to purchase stock in an automobile company by an individual who does not work for that company would indicate a personal investment and a consumer purpose.

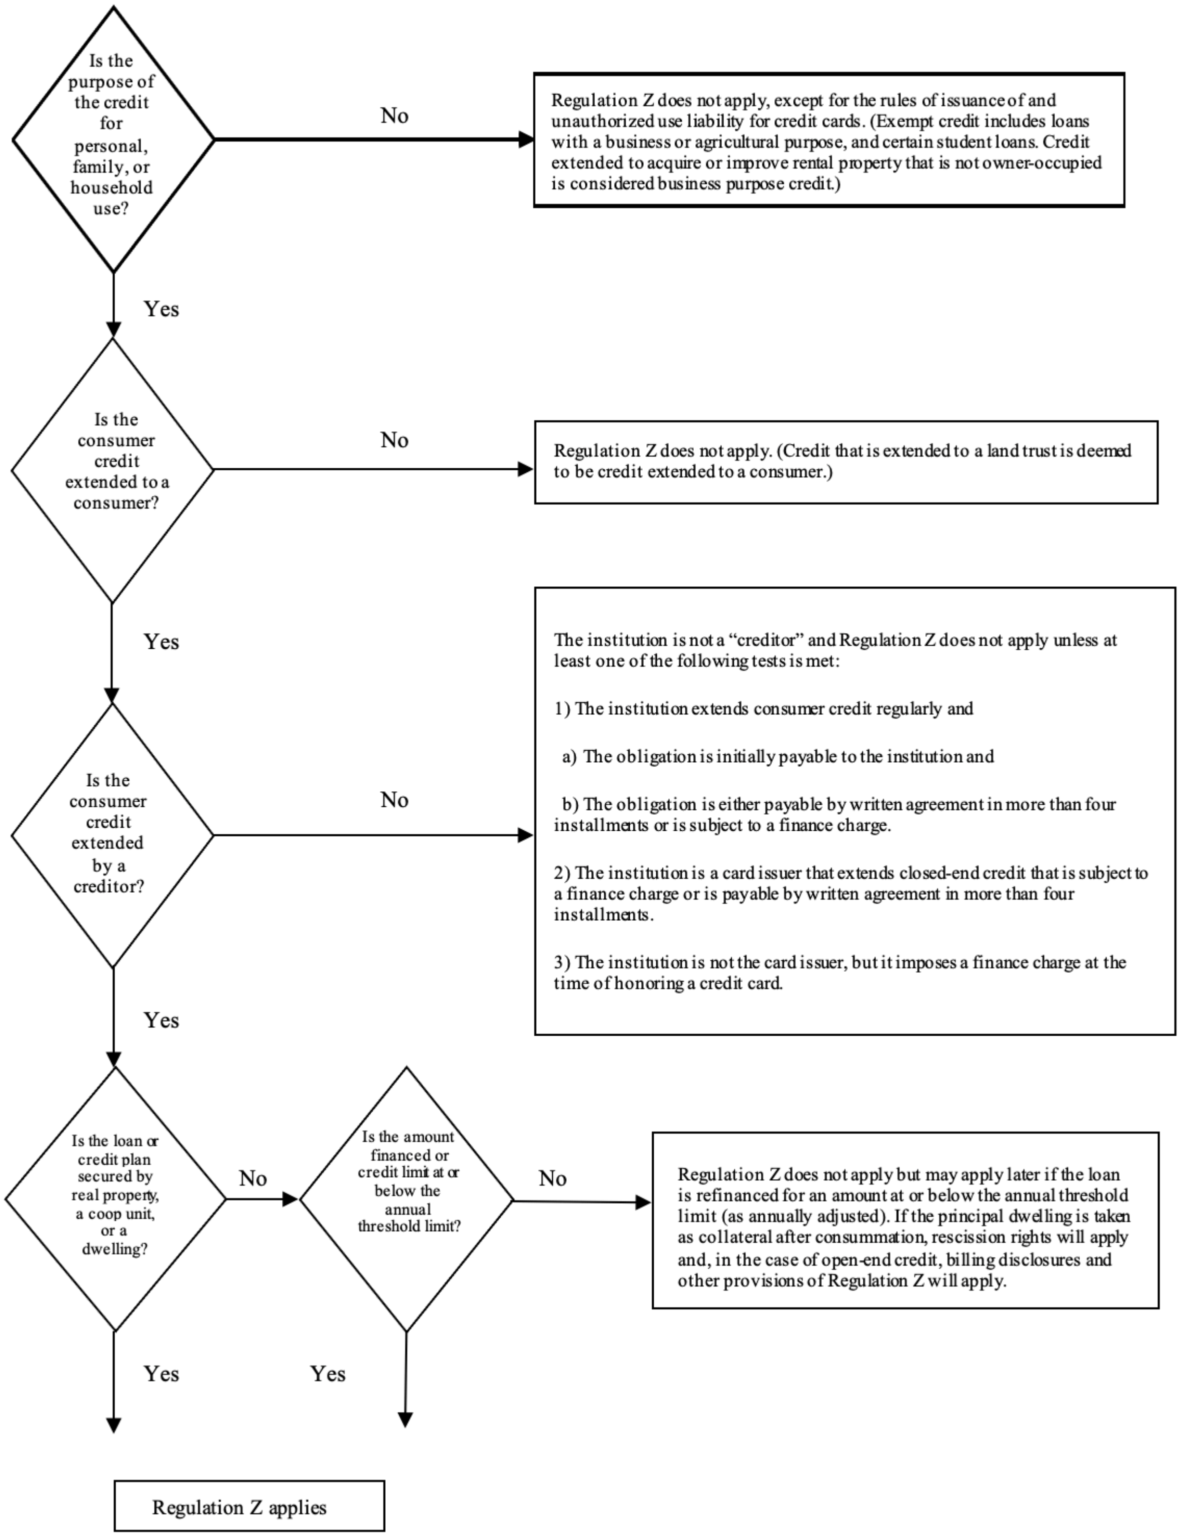
- The size of the transaction. The larger the size of the transaction, the more likely the loan will have a business purpose. For example, if the loan is for a $5 million real estate transaction, that might indicate a business purpose.

- The amount of income derived from the property acquired by the loan proceeds relative to the borrower's total income. The lesser the income derived from the acquired property, the more likely the loan will have a consumer purpose. For example, if the borrower has an annual salary of $100,000 and receives about $500 in annual dividends from the acquired property, that would indicate a consumer purpose.

Creditors must consider all five factors before determining that disclosures are not necessary. Normally, no one factor by itself is sufficient reason to determine the applicability of Regulation Z. In any event, the financial institution may routinely furnish disclosures to the consumer. Disclosure under such circumstances does not control whether the transaction is covered but can assure protection to the financial institution and compliance with the law.

Coverage Considerations under Regulation Z



Determination of Finance Charge and Annual Percentage Rate (APR)

Finance Charge (Open-End and Closed-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.4

The finance charge is a measure of the cost of consumer credit represented in dollars and cents. Along with APR disclosures, the disclosure of the finance charge is central to the uniform credit cost disclosure envisioned by TILA.

The finance charge does not include any charge of a type payable in a comparable cash transaction. Examples of charges payable in a comparable cash transaction may include taxes, title, license fees, or registration fees paid in connection with an automobile purchase. In addition, with respect to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, the finance charge does not include a charge imposed on the asset feature of the prepaid account to the extent the amount of the charge does not exceed comparable charges imposed on prepaid accounts in the same prepaid account program that do not have a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card.

Finance charges include any charges or fees payable directly or indirectly by the consumer and imposed directly or indirectly by the financial institution either as an incident to or as a condition of an extension of consumer credit. The finance charge on a loan always includes any interest charges and often, other charges. Regulation Z includes examples, applicable both to open-end and closed-end credit transactions, of what must, must not, or need not be included in the disclosed finance charge (12 CFR 1026.4(b)).

Accuracy Tolerances (Closed-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.18(d) and 1026.23(g) and (h)

Regulation Z provides finance charge tolerances for legal accuracy that should not be confused with those provided in TILA for reimbursement under regulatory agency orders. As with disclosed APRs, if a disclosed finance charge were legally accurate, it would not be subject to reimbursement.

Under TILA and Regulation Z, finance charge disclosures for open-end credit must be accurate since there is no tolerance for finance charge errors. However, both TILA and Regulation Z permit various finance charge accuracy tolerances for closed-end credit.

Tolerances for the finance charge in a closed-end transaction, other than a mortgage loan, are generally $5 if the amount financed is less than or equal to $1,000, and $10 if the amount financed exceeds $1,000 (12 CFR 1026.18(d)(2)). For transactions that are subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) (i.e., transactions subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule), the tolerances applicable to finance charges are also applicable to the total of payments disclosure. Tolerances for certain transactions consummated on or after September 30, 1995, are noted below.

- Credit secured by real property or a dwelling (closed-end credit only) (12 CFR 1026.18(d)(1)):
  - The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate if it is not understated by more than $100.
  - Overstatements are not violations.
- Rescission rights after the three-business-day rescission period (closed-end credit only) (12 CFR 1026.23(g)):
  - Tolerances for accuracy, General Rule – One-half of 1 percent tolerance:
    - The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate if it is not understated by more than one-half of 1 percent of the face amount of the note or $100, whichever is greater.
    - The total of payments for transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) is considered accurate for purposes of this section if it is understated by no more than one-half of 1 percent of the face amount of the note or $100, whichever is greater.
    - The disclosed finance charge and the total payments are considered accurate if the amount disclosed was greater than the amount required to be disclosed (i.e., the amount disclosed overstated the actual finance charge or total of payments).
  - Tolerances for accuracy, Refinancings – One percent tolerance, for the initial and subsequent refinancings of residential mortgage transactions when the new loan is made at a different financial institution. (Excludes high-cost mortgage loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.32, transactions in which there are new advances, and new consolidations.):
    - The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate if it is not understated by more than 1 percent of the face amount of the note or $100, whichever is greater,
    - The total of payments for transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) is considered accurate for purposes of this section if it is understated by no more than 1 percent of the face amount of the note or $100, whichever is greater.
    - The disclosed finance charge and the total of payments (for transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)) are considered accurate if the amount disclosed was greater than the amount required to be disclosed (i.e., the amount disclosed overstated the actual finance charge or total of payments).
- Rescission rights in foreclosure (12 CFR 1026.23(h)):

- o Right to rescind. After the initiation of foreclosure on the consumer's principal dwelling that secures the obligation, the consumer can rescind if:
    - A mortgage broker fee that should have been included in the finance charge was not included; or
    - The creditor did not provide the properly completed appropriate model form in Appendix H, or a substantially similar notice of rescission.
- o Tolerance for disclosures. After the initiation of foreclosure on the consumer's principal dwelling that secures the credit obligation:
    - The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate if it is understated by no more than $35.
    - The total of payments for transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) is considered accurate for purposes of this section if it is understated by no more than $35.
    - The disclosed finance charge and the total of payments (for transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)) are considered accurate if the amount disclosed was greater than the amount required to be disclosed (i.e., the amount disclosed overstated the actual finance charge or total of payments)

NOTES:

- Normally, the finance charge tolerance for a rescindable transaction is either 0.5 percent of the credit transaction or, for certain refinancings, 1 percent of the credit transaction. However, in the event of a foreclosure, the consumer may exercise the right of rescission if the disclosed finance charge is understated by more than $35.
- Tolerances for the total of payments disclosure as discussed in 12 CFR 1026.38(o)(1) are similar to the tolerances applicable to the finance charge. Special tolerances apply to the disclosure of the total of payments for purposes of the right of rescission, for transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f). (12 CFR 1026.23(g)(1)(ii), (g)(2)(ii)).
- See the "Finance Charge Tolerances" charts within these examination procedures for help in determining appropriate finance charge tolerances.

Calculating the Finance Charge (Closed-End Credit)

One of the more complex tasks under Regulation Z is determining whether a charge associated with an extension of credit must be included in, or excluded from, the disclosed finance charge. The finance charge initially includes any charge that is, or will be, connected with a specific loan. Charges imposed by third parties are finance charges if the financial institution requires use of the third party. Charges imposed by settlement or closing agents are finance charges if the bank requires the specific service that gave rise to the charge and the charge is not otherwise excluded. The "Finance Charge" charts within this document briefly summarize the rules that must be considered under (12 CFR 1026.4).

Prepaid Finance Charges – 12 CFR 1026.18(b)(3)

A prepaid finance charge is any finance charge paid separately to the financial institution or to a third party, in cash or by check before or at closing, settlement, or consummation of a transaction, or withheld from the proceeds of the credit at any time.

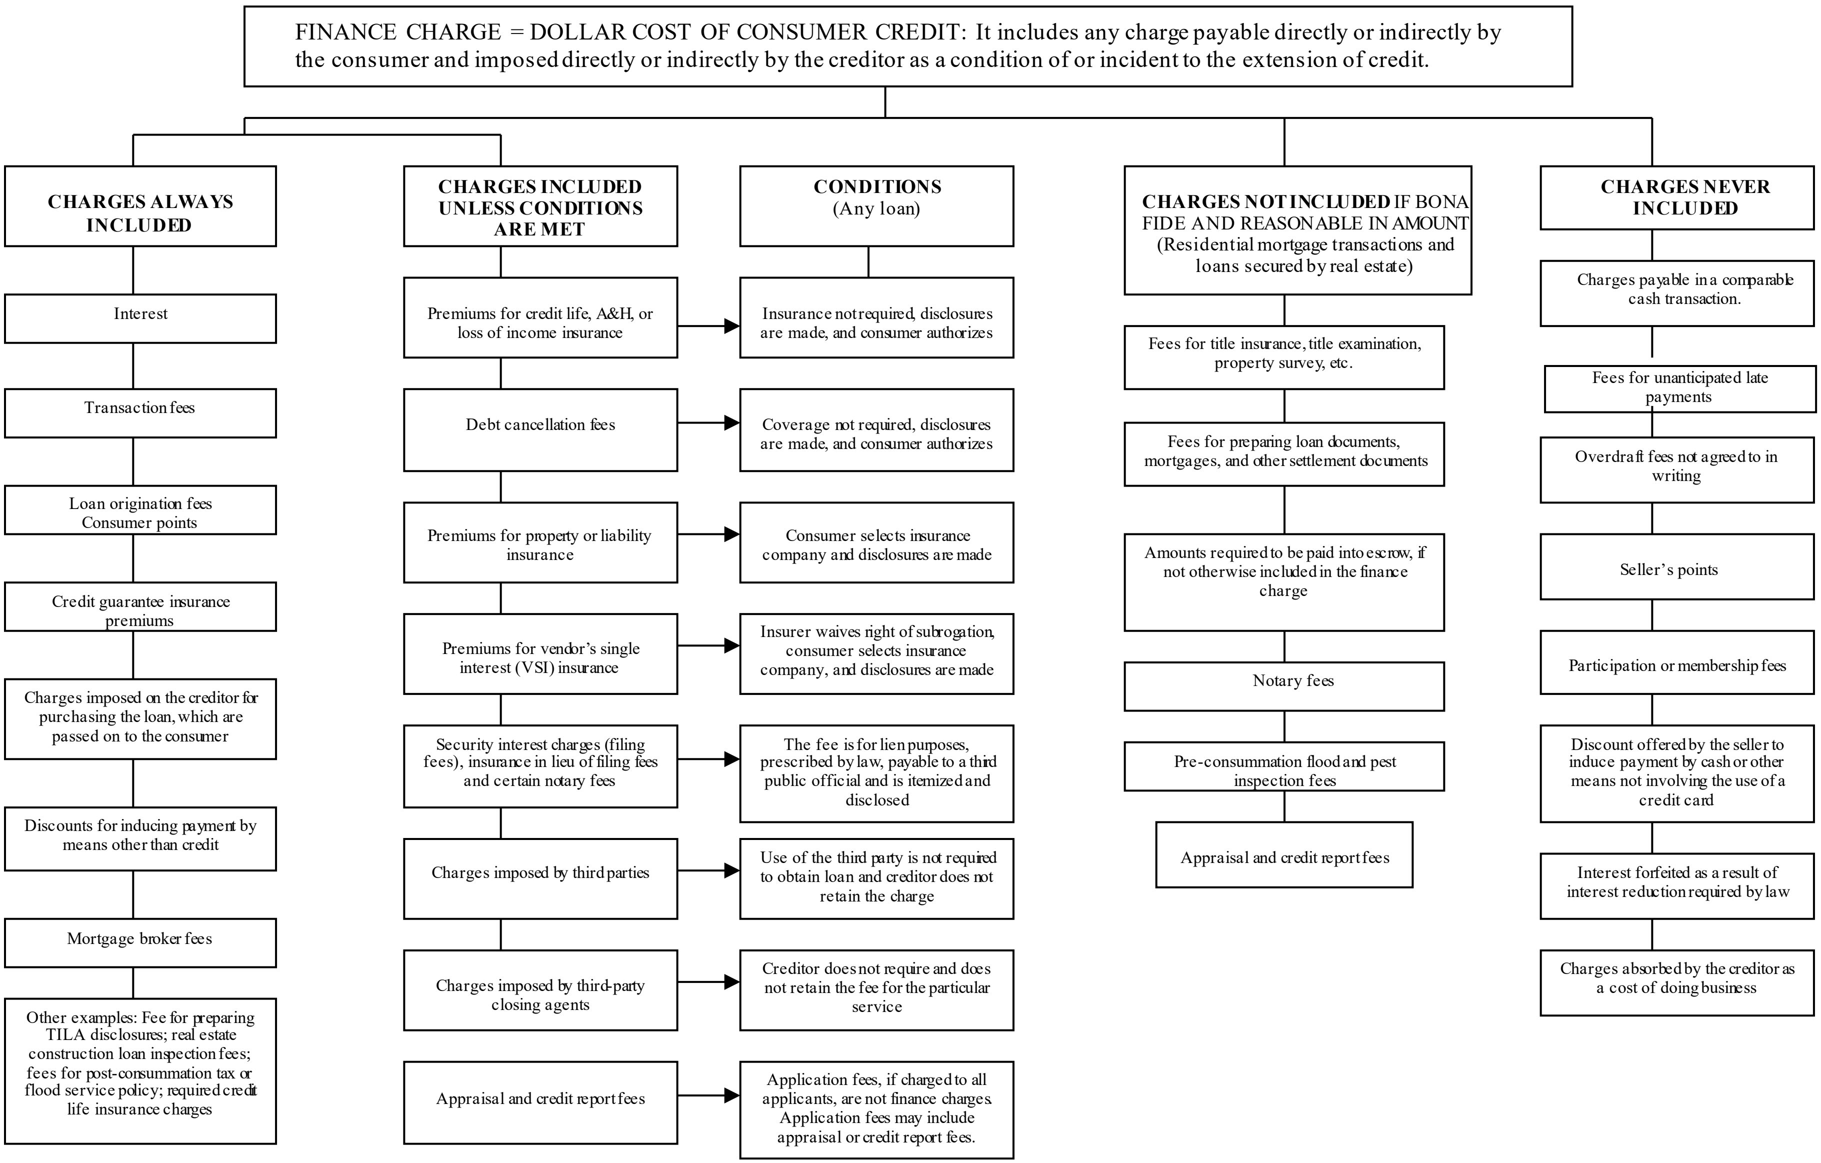
Prepaid finance charges effectively reduce the amount of funds available for the consumer's use, usually before or at the time the transaction is consummated.

Examples of finance charges frequently prepaid by consumers are borrower's points, loan origination fees, real estate/construction inspection fees, odd days' interest (interest attributable to part of the first payment period when that period is longer than a regular payment period), mortgage guarantee insurance fees paid to the Federal Housing Administration (FHA), private mortgage insurance (PMI) paid to such companies as the Mortgage Guaranty Insurance Corporation (MGIC), and, in non-real-estate transactions, credit report fees.

Precomputed Finance Charges

A precomputed finance charge includes, for example, interest added to the note amount that is computed by the add-on, discount, or simple interest methods. If reflected in the face amount of the debt instrument as part of the consumer's obligation, finance charges that are not viewed as prepaid finance charges are treated as precomputed finance charges that are earned over the life of the loan.

Finance Charge Chart



Instructions for the Finance Charge Chart

The finance charge initially includes any charge that is, or will be, connected with a specific loan. Charges imposed by third parties are finance charges if the creditor requires use of the third party. Charges imposed on the consumer by a settlement agent are finance charges only if the creditor requires the particular services for which the settlement agent is charging the borrower and the charge is not otherwise excluded from the finance charge.

Immediately below the finance charge definition, the chart presents five captions applicable to determining whether a loan-related charge is a finance charge.

The first caption is "charges always included." This category focuses on specific charges given in the regulation or commentary as examples of finance charges.

The second caption, "charges included unless conditions are met," focuses on charges that must be included in the finance charge unless the creditor meets specific disclosure or other conditions to exclude the charges from the finance charge.

The third caption, "conditions," focuses on the conditions that need to be met if the charges identified to the left of the conditions are permitted to be excluded from the finance charge. Although most charges under the second caption may be included in the finance charge at the creditor's option, third-party charges and application fees (listed last under the third caption) must be excluded from the finance charge if the relevant conditions are met. However, inclusion of appraisal and credit report charges as part of the application fee is optional.

The fourth caption, "charges not included," identifies fees or charges that are not included in the finance charge under conditions identified by the caption. If the credit transaction is secured by real property or the loan is a residential mortgage transaction, the charges identified in the column, if they are bona fide and reasonable in amount, must be excluded from the finance charge. For example, if a consumer loan is secured by a vacant lot or commercial real estate, any appraisal fees connected with the loan must not be included in the finance charge.

The fifth caption, "charges never included," lists specific charges provided by the regulation as examples of those that automatically are not finance charges (e.g., fees for unanticipated late payments).

Annual Percentage Rate Definition – 12 CFR 1026.22 (Closed-End Credit)

Credit costs may vary depending on the interest rate, the amount of the loan and other charges, the timing and amounts of advances, and the repayment schedule. The APR, which must be disclosed in nearly all consumer credit transactions, is designed to take into account all relevant factors and to provide a uniform measure for comparing the cost of various credit transactions.

The APR is a measure of the cost of credit, expressed as a nominal yearly rate. It relates the amount and timing of value received by the consumer to the amount and timing of payments made. The disclosure of the APR is central to the uniform credit cost disclosure envisioned by TILA.

The value of a closed-end credit APR must be disclosed as a single rate only, whether the loan has a single interest rate, a variable interest rate, a discounted variable interest rate, or graduated payments based on separate interest rates (step rates), and it must appear with the segregated disclosures. Segregated disclosures are grouped together and do not contain any information not directly related to the disclosures required under (12 CFR 1026.18).

Since an APR measures the total cost of credit, including costs such as transaction charges or premiums for credit guarantee insurance, it is not an "interest" rate, as that term is generally used. APR calculations do not rely on definitions of interest in state law and often include charges, such as a commitment fee paid by the consumer, that are not viewed by some state usury statutes as interest. Conversely, an APR might not include a charge, such as a credit report fee in a real property transaction, which some state laws might view as interest for usury purposes. Furthermore, measuring the timing of value received and of payments made, which is essential if APR calculations are to be accurate, must be consistent with parameters under Regulation Z.

The APR is often considered to be the finance charge expressed as a percentage. However, two loans could require the same finance charge and still have different APRs because of differing values of the amount financed or of payment schedules. For example, the APR is 12 percent on a loan with an amount financed of $5,000 and 36 equal monthly payments of $166.07 each. It is 13.26 percent on a loan with an amount financed of $4,500 and 35 equal monthly payments of $152.18 each and final payment of $152.22. In both cases the finance charge is $978.52. The APRs on these example loans are not the same because an APR does not only reflect the finance charge, it relates the amount and timing of value received by the consumer to the amount and timing of payments made.

The APR is a function of:

- The amount financed, which is not necessarily equivalent to the loan amount. For example, if the consumer must pay at closing a separate 1 percent loan origination fee (prepaid finance charge) on a $100,000 residential mortgage loan, the loan amount is $100,000, but the amount financed would be $100,000 less the $1,000 loan fee, or $99,000.

- The finance charge, which is not necessarily equivalent to the total interest amount (interest is not defined by Regulation Z but rather by state or other federal law). For example:

  - If the consumer must pay a $25 credit report fee for an auto loan, the fee must be included in the finance charge. The finance charge in that case is the sum of the interest on the loan (i.e., interest generated by the application of a percentage rate against the loan amount) plus the $25 credit report fee.

  - If the consumer must pay a $25 credit report fee for a home improvement loan secured by real property, the credit report fee must be excluded from the finance charge. The finance charge in that case would be only the interest on the loan.

- The payment schedule, which does not necessarily include only principal and interest (P + I) payments. For example:
  - If the consumer borrows $2,500 for a vacation trip at 14 percent simple interest per annum and repays that amount with 25 equal monthly payments beginning one month from consummation of the transaction, the monthly P + I payment will be $115.87, if all months are considered equal, and the amount financed would be $2,500. If the consumer's payments are increased by $2 a month to pay a non-financed $50 loan fee during the life of the loan, the amount financed would remain at $2,500, but the payment schedule would be increased to $117.87 a month; the finance charge would increase by $50; and there would be a corresponding increase in the APR. This would be the case whether or not state law defines the $50 loan fee as interest.
  - If the loan above has 55 days to the first payment and the consumer prepays interest at consummation ($24.31 to cover the first 25 days), the amount financed would be $2,500 - $24.31, or $2,475.69. Although the amount financed has been reduced to reflect the consumer's reduced use of available funds at consummation, the time interval during which the consumer has use of the $2,475.69, 55 days to the first payment, has not changed. Since the first payment period exceeds the limitations of the regulation's minor irregularities provisions (See 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(4)), it may not be treated as regular. In calculating the APR, the first payment period must not be reduced by 25 days (i.e., the first payment period may not be treated as one month).

Financial institutions may, if permitted by state or other law, precompute interest by applying a rate against a loan balance using a simple interest, add-on, discount or some other method, and may earn interest using a simple interest accrual system, the Rule of 78s (if permitted by law) or some other method. Unless the financial institution's internal interest earnings and accrual methods involve a simple interest rate based on a 360-day year that is applied over actual days (even that is important only for determining the accuracy of the payment schedule), it is not relevant in calculating an APR, since an APR is not an interest rate (as that term is commonly used under state or other law). Since the APR normally need not rely on the internal accrual systems of a bank, it always may be computed after the loan terms have been agreed upon (as long as it is disclosed before actual consummation of the transaction).

Special Requirements for Calculating the Finance Charge and APR

Proper calculation of the finance charge and APR are of primary importance. The regulation requires that the terms "finance charge" and "annual percentage rate" be disclosed more conspicuously than any other required disclosure, subject to limited exceptions. The finance charge and APR, more than any other disclosures, enable consumers to understand the cost of the credit and to comparison shop for credit. A creditor's failure to disclose those values accurately can result in significant monetary damages to the creditor, either from a class action lawsuit or from a regulatory agency's order to reimburse consumers for violations of law.

If an APR or finance charge is disclosed incorrectly, the error is not, in itself, a violation of the regulation if:

- The error resulted from a corresponding error in a calculation tool used in good faith by the financial institution.
- Upon discovery of the error, the financial institution promptly discontinues use of that calculation tool for disclosure purposes.
- The financial institution notifies the CFPB in writing of the error in the calculation tool (12 CFR 1026.22).

When a financial institution claims a calculation, tool was used in good faith, the financial institution assumes a reasonable degree of responsibility for ensuring that the tool in question provides the accuracy required by the regulation (15 U.S.C. 1640(c)). For example, the financial institution might verify the results obtained using the tool by comparing those results to the figures obtained by using another calculation tool. The financial institution might also verify that the tool, if it is designed to operate under the actuarial method, produces figures similar to those provided by the examples in Appendix J to the regulation. The calculation tool should be checked for accuracy before it is first used and periodically thereafter.

Subpart B – Open-End Credit

Subpart B relates to open-end credit. It contains rules on account-opening disclosures 12 CFR 1026.6 and periodic statements (12 CFR 1026.7-.8). It also describes special rules that apply to credit card transactions, treatment of payments 12 CFR 1026.10 and credit balances 12 CFR 1026.11, procedures for resolving credit billing errors 12 CFR 1026.13, annual percentage rate calculations 12 CFR 1026.14, rescission requirements 12 CFR 1026.15 and advertising (12 CFR 1026.16).

Time of Disclosures (Periodic Statements) – 12 CFR 1026.5(b)

For credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, creditors must adopt reasonable procedures designed to ensure that periodic statements are mailed or delivered at least 21 days prior to the payment due date disclosed on the periodic statement and that payments are not treated as late for any purpose if they are received within 21 days after mailing or delivery of the statement. In addition, for all open-end consumer credit accounts with grace periods, creditors must adopt reasonable procedures designed to ensure that periodic statements are mailed or delivered at least 21 days prior to the date on which a grace period (if any) expires and that finance charges are not imposed as a result of the loss of a grace period if a payment is received within 21 days after mailing or delivery of a statement. For purposes of this requirement, a “grace period” is defined as a period within which any credit extended may be repaid without incurring a finance charge due to a periodic interest rate. For non-credit card open-end consumer plans without a grace period, creditors must adopt reasonable policies and procedures designed to ensure that periodic statements are mailed or delivered at least 14 days prior to the date on which the required minimum periodic payment is due. Moreover, the creditor must adopt reasonable policies and procedures to ensure that it does not treat as late, a required minimum periodic payment received by the creditor within 14 days after it has mailed or delivered the periodic statement.

Subsequent Disclosures (Open-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.9

For open-end, not home-secured credit, the following applies:

Creditors are required to provide consumers with 45 days' advance written notice of rate increases and other significant changes to the terms of their credit card account agreements. The list of "significant changes" includes most fees and other terms that a consumer should be aware of before use of the account. Examples of such fees and terms include:

- Penalty fees,
- Transaction fees,
- Fees imposed for the issuance or availability of the open-end plan,
- Grace period, and
- Balance computation method.

Changes that do not require advance notice include:

- Reductions of finance charges;
- Termination of account privileges resulting from an agreement involving a court proceeding;
- Increase in an APR upon expiration of a specified period of time previously disclosed in writing;
- Increases in variable APRs that change according to an index not under the card issuer's control; and
- Rate increases due to the completion of, or failure of a consumer to comply with, the terms of a workout or temporary hardship arrangement, if those terms are disclosed prior to commencement of the arrangement.

A creditor may suspend account privileges, terminate an account, or lower the credit limit without notice. However, a creditor that lowers the credit limit may not impose an over-limit fee or penalty rate as a result of exceeding the new credit limit without a 45-day advance notice that the credit limit has been reduced.

For significant changes in terms (with the exception of rate changes, increases in the minimum payment, certain changes in the balance computation method, and when the change results from the consumer's failure to make a required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date), a creditor must also provide consumers the right to reject the change. If the consumer does reject the change prior to the effective date, the creditor may not apply the change to the account (12 CFR 1026.9(h)(2)(i)).

In addition, when a consumer rejects a change or increase, the creditor must not:

- Impose a fee or charge, or treat the account as in default solely as a result of the rejection; or
- Require repayment of the balance on the account using a method that is less beneficial to the consumer than one of the following methods: (1) the method of repayment prior to the rejection; (2) an amortization period of not less than five years from the date of rejection; or (3) a minimum periodic payment that includes a percentage of the balance that is not more than twice the percentage included prior to the date of rejection.

Finance Charge (Open-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1) & 1026.6(b)(3)

Each finance charge imposed must be individually itemized. The aggregate total amount of the finance charge need not be disclosed.

Determining the Balance and Computing the Finance Charge

There are three common methods to determine the balance to which the periodic rate is applied: the previous balance method, the daily balance method, and the average daily balance method, which are described as follows:

- Previous balance method. The balance on which the periodic finance charge is computed is based on the balance outstanding at the start of the billing cycle. The periodic rate is multiplied by this balance to compute the finance charge.
- Daily balance method. A daily periodic rate is applied to either the balance on each day in the cycle or the sum of the balances on each of the days in the cycle. If a daily periodic rate is multiplied by the balance on each day in the billing cycle, the finance charge is the sum of the products. If the daily periodic rate is multiplied by the sum of all the daily balances, the result is the finance charge.
- Average daily balance method. The average daily balance is the sum of the daily balances (either including or excluding current transactions) divided by the number of days in the billing cycle. A periodic rate is then multiplied by the average daily balance to determine the finance charge. If the periodic rate is a daily one, the product of the rate multiplied by the average balance is multiplied by the number of days in the cycle.

In addition to those common methods, financial institutions have other ways of calculating the balance to which the periodic rate is applied. By reading the financial institution's explanation, the examiner should be able to calculate the balance to which the periodic rate was applied. In some cases, the examiner may need to obtain additional information from the financial institution to verify the explanation disclosed. If the examiner is unable to understand the disclosed explanation, he or she should discuss the explanation with management, and should remind management of Regulation Z's requirement that disclosures be clear and conspicuous.

When a balance is determined without first deducting all credits and payments made during the billing cycle, that fact and the amount of the credits and payments must be disclosed.

If the financial institution uses the daily balance method and applies a single daily periodic rate, disclosure of the balance to which the rate was applied may be stated as any of the following:

- A balance for each day in the billing cycle. The daily periodic rate is multiplied by the balance on each day and the sum of the products is the finance charge.
- A balance for each day in the billing cycle on which the balance in the account changes. The finance charge is figured by the same method as discussed previously, but the statement shows the balance only for those days on which the balance changed.
- The sum of the daily balances during the billing cycle. The balance on which the finance charge is computed is the sum of all the daily balances in the billing cycle. The daily periodic rate is multiplied by that balance to determine the finance charge.
- The average daily balance during the billing cycle. If this is stated, the financial institution may, at its option, explain that the average daily balance is or can be multiplied by the number of days in the billing cycle and the periodic rate applied to the product to determine the amount of interest.

If the financial institution uses the daily balance method but applies two or more daily periodic rates, the sum of the daily balances may not be used. Acceptable ways of disclosing the balances include:

- A balance for each day in the billing cycle;
- A balance for each day in the billing cycle on which the balance in the account changes; or
- Two or more average daily balances. If the average daily balances are stated, the financial institution may, at its option, explain that interest is or may be determined by 1) multiplying each of the average daily balances by the number of days in the billing cycle (or if the daily rate varied during the cycle, by multiplying the number of days that the applicable rate was in effect); 2) by multiplying each of the results by the applicable daily periodic rate; and 3) adding these products together.

In explaining the method used to find the balance on which the finance charge is computed, the financial institution need not reveal how it allocates payments or credits. That information may be disclosed as additional information, but all required information must be clear and conspicuous.

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.54 prohibits a credit card issuer from calculating finance charges based on balances for days in previous billing cycles as a result of the loss of a grace period (a practice sometimes referred to as "double-cycle billing").

Finance Charge Resulting from Two or More Periodic Rates

Some financial institutions use more than one periodic rate in computing the finance charge. For example, one rate may apply to balances up to a certain amount and another rate to balances more than that amount. If two or more periodic rates apply, the financial institution must disclose all rates and conditions. The range of balances to which each rate applies also must be disclosed (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1)). It is not necessary, however, to break the finance charge into separate components based on the different rates.

Annual Percentage Rate (Open-End Credit)

The disclosed APR on an open-end credit account is accurate if it is within one-eighth of one percentage point of the APR calculated under Regulation Z.

Determination of APR – 12 CFR 1026.14

The basic method for determining the APR in open-end credit transactions involves multiplying each periodic rate by the number of periods in a year. This method is used in all types of open-end disclosures, including:

- The corresponding APR in the initial disclosures,
- The corresponding APR on periodic statements,
- The APR in early disclosures for credit card accounts,
- The APR in early disclosures for home-equity plans,
- The APR in advertising, and
- The APR in oral disclosures.

The corresponding APR is prospective, and it does not involve any particular finance charge or periodic balance.

A second method of calculating the APR is the quotient method. At a creditor's option, the quotient method may be disclosed on periodic statements for home-equity plans subject to 12 CFR 1026.40 (home-equity lines of credit, or HELOCs).[20] The quotient method reflects the annualized equivalent of the rate that was actually applied during a cycle. This rate, also known as the effective APR, will differ from the corresponding APR if the creditor applies minimum, fixed, or transaction charges to the account during the cycle (12 CFR 1026.14(c)).

[20] If a creditor does not disclose the effective (or quotient method) APR on a HELOC periodic statement, it must instead disclose the charges (fees and interest) imposed as provided in 12 CFR 1026.7(a).

Brief Outline for Open-End Credit APR Calculations on Periodic Statements

NOTE: Assume monthly billing cycles for each of the calculations below.

I. Basic method for determining the APR in an open-end credit transaction. This is the corresponding APR (12 CFR 1026.14(b)).

   A. Monthly rate x 12 = APR

II. Optional effective APR that may be disclosed on HELOC periodic statements.

   A. APR when only periodic rates are imposed (12 CFR 1026.14(c)(1)).

      1. Monthly rate x 12 = APR

         Or

      2. (Total finance charge / sum of the balances) x 12 = APR

   B. APR when minimum or fixed charge but not transaction charge imposed (12 CFR 1026.14(c)(2)).

      1. (Total finance charge / amount of applicable balance[21]) x 12 = APR[22]

   C. APR when the finance charge includes a charge related to a specific transaction (such as a cash advance fee), even if the total finance charge also includes any other minimum, fixed, or other charge not calculated using a periodic rate (12 CFR 1026.14(c)(3)).

      1. (Total finance charge / (all balances + other amounts on which a finance charge was imposed during the billing cycle without duplication[23]) x 12 = APR[24]

   D. APR when the finance charge imposed during the billing cycle includes a minimum or fixed charge that does not exceed 50 cents for a monthly or longer billing cycle (or pro rata part of 50 cents for a billing cycle shorter than monthly) (12 CFR 1026.14(c)(4)).

      1. Monthly rate x 12 = APR

[21] For the following formulas, the APR cannot be determined if the applicable balance is zero. (12 CFR 1026.14(c)(2))

[22] Loan fees, points, or similar finance charges that relate to the opening of the account must not be included in the calculation of the APR.

[23] The sum of the balances may include the average daily balance, adjusted balance, or previous balance method. When a portion of the finance charge is determined by application of one or more daily periodic rates, the sum of the balances also means the average of daily balances. See Appendix F to Regulation Z.

[24] Cannot be less than the highest periodic rate applied, expressed as an APR. Loan fees, points, or similar finance charges that relate to the opening of the account must not be included in the calculation of the APR.

E. APR calculation when daily periodic rates are applicable if only the periodic rate is imposed or when a minimum or fixed charge but not a transactional charge is imposed (12 CFR 1026.14(d)).

1. (Total finance charge / average daily balance) x 12 = APR

Or

2. (Total finance charge / sum of daily balances) x 365 = APR

Change in Terms Notices for Home-Equity Plans Subject to 12 CFR 1026.40 – 12 CFR 1026.9(c)

Servicers are required to provide consumers with 15 days' advance written notice of a change to any term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(a) or where the required minimum periodic payment is increased. Notice is not required when the change involves a reduction of any component of a finance charge or other charge or when the change results from an agreement involving a court proceeding. If the creditor prohibits additional extensions of credit or reduces the credit limit in certain circumstances (if permitted by contract), a written notice must be provided no later than three business days after the action is taken and must include the specific reasons for the action. If the creditor requires the consumer to request reinstatement of credit privileges, the notice also must state that fact.

Payments – 12 CFR 1026.10 (Open-End Credit)

Creditors are required to credit a payment to the consumer's account as of the date of receipt, except when a delay in crediting does not result in a finance or other charge. If a creditor fails to credit a payment, as required by 12 CFR 1026.10(a) or (b), in time to avoid the imposition of finance or other charges, the creditor shall adjust the consumer's account so that the charges imposed are credited to the consumer's account during the next billing cycle.

If a card issuer makes a material change in the address for receiving payments or procedures for handling payments, and such change causes a material delay in the crediting of a payment to the consumer's account during the 60-day period following the date on which such change took effect, the card issuer may not impose any late fee or finance charge for a late payment on the credit card account during the 60-day period following the date on which the change took effect.

Timely Settlement of Estates – 12 CFR 1026.11(c)

Issuers are required to establish procedures to ensure that any administrator of an estate can resolve the outstanding credit card balance of a deceased account holder in a timely manner. If an administrator requests the amount of the balance:

- The issuer is prohibited from imposing additional fees on the account;
- The issuer is required to disclose the amount of the balance to the administrator in a timely manner (safe harbor of 30 days); and

- If the balance is paid in full within 30 days after disclosure of the balance, the issuer must waive or rebate any trailing or residual interest charges that accrued on the balance following the disclosure.

Billing Error Resolution – 12 CFR 1026.13 (Open-End Credit)

A billing error notice is a written notice from a consumer that:

- Is received by a creditor at the address disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.7(a)(9) or (b)(9), as applicable, no later than 60 days after the creditor transmitted the first periodic statement that reflects the alleged billing error;
- Enables the creditor to identify the consumer's name and account number; and
- To the extent possible, indicates the consumer's belief and the reasons for the belief that a billing error exists, and the type, date, and amount of the error.

The creditor shall mail or deliver written acknowledgment to the consumer within 30 days of receiving a billing error notice, unless the creditor has complied with the appropriate resolution procedures of 12 CFR 1026.13(e) and (f), as applicable, within the 30-day period. Furthermore, the creditor credit must comply with the appropriate resolution procedures provided by 12 CFR 1026.13(e) and (f), as applicable, within two complete billing cycles (but in no event later than 90 days) after receiving a billing error notice.

Until a billing error is resolved, the following rules apply:

- The consumer need not pay (and the creditor may not try to collect) any portion of any required payment that the consumer believes is related to the disputed amount (including related finance or other charges).
- The creditor or its agent is also prohibited from making or threatening to make an adverse report to any person about the consumer's credit standing, or report that an amount or account is delinquent, because the consumer failed to pay the disputed amount or related finance or other charges.
- A creditor shall not accelerate any part of the consumer's indebtedness or restrict or close a consumer's account solely because the consumer has exercised in good faith rights provided by this section.

A creditor is not prohibited, however, from taking action to collect any undisputed portion of the item or bill; from deducting any disputed amount and related finance or other charges from the consumer's credit limit on the account; or from reflecting a disputed amount and related finance or other charges on a periodic statement, provided that the creditor indicates on or with the periodic statement that payment of any disputed amount and related finance or other charges is not required pending the creditor's compliance with this section.

If a creditor determines that a billing error occurred as asserted, it must within the applicable time limits:

- Correct the billing error and credit the consumer's account with any disputed amount and related finance or other charges, as applicable; and
- Mail or deliver notification of the correction to the consumer.

If, after conducting a reasonable investigation, a creditor determines that no billing error occurred or that a different billing error occurred from that asserted, the creditor must within the applicable time limits:

- Mail or deliver to the consumer an explanation that sets forth the reasons for the creditor's belief that the billing error alleged by the consumer is incorrect in whole or in part;
- Furnish copies of documentary evidence of the consumer's indebtedness, if the consumer so requests; and
- If a different billing error occurred, correct the billing error, and credit the consumer's account with any disputed amount and related finance or other charges, as applicable.

If a creditor determines that a consumer owes all or part of the disputed amount and related finance or other charges, determine whether the credit complied with the requirements provided in 12 CFR 1026.13(g).

A creditor that has fully complied with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.13 has no further responsibilities under this section (other than as provided in 12 CFR 1026.13(g)(4)) if a consumer reasserts substantially the same billing error.

NOTE: Special credit card provisions provide additional protections for consumers, including provisions relating to unauthorized use (12 CFR 1026.12).

Minimum Payments – 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)

For credit card accounts under an open-end credit plan, card issuers generally must disclose on periodic statements an estimate of the amount of time and the total cost (principal and interest) involved in paying the balance in full by making only the minimum payments, an estimate of the monthly payment amount required to pay off the balance in 36 months and the total cost (principal and interest) of repaying the balance in 36 months. Card issuers also must disclose a minimum payment warning and an estimate of the total interest that a consumer would save if that consumer repaid the balance in 36 months, instead of making minimum payments.

Advertising for Open-End Plans – 12 CFR 1026.16

The regulation requires that loan product advertisements provide accurate and balanced information, in a clear and conspicuous manner, about rates, monthly payments, and other loan features. The advertising rules ban several deceptive or misleading advertising practices, including representations that a rate or payment is "fixed" when in fact it can change.

If an advertisement for credit states specific credit terms, it must state only those terms that actually are or will be arranged or offered by the creditor. If any finance charges or other charges are set forth in an advertisement, the advertisement must also clearly and conspicuously state the following:

- Any minimum, fixed, transaction, activity or similar charge that is a finance charge under 12 CFR 1026.4 that could be imposed;
- Any periodic rate that may be applied expressed as an APR as determined under 12 CFR 1026.14(b). If the plan provides for a variable periodic rate, that fact must be disclosed; and
- Any membership or participation fee that could be imposed.

If any finance charges or other charge or payment terms are set forth, affirmatively or negatively, in an advertisement for a home-equity plan subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, the advertisement also must clearly and conspicuously set forth the following:

- Any loan fee that is a percentage of the credit limit under the plan and an estimate of any other fees imposed for opening the plan, stated as a single dollar amount or a reasonable range;
- Any periodic rate used to compute the finance charge, expressed as an APR as determined under 12 CFR 1026.14(b); and
- The maximum APR that may be imposed in a variable-rate plan.

Regulation Z's open-end home-equity plan advertising rules include a clear and conspicuous standard for home-equity plan advertisements, consistent with the approach taken in the advertising rules for consumer leases under Regulation M. Commentary provisions clarify how the clear and conspicuous standard applies to advertisements of home-equity plans with promotional rates or payments, and to Internet, television, and oral advertisements of home-equity plans. The regulation allows alternative disclosures for television and radio advertisements for home-equity plans. The regulation also requires that advertisements adequately disclose not only promotional plan terms, but also the rates or payments that will apply over the term of the plan.

Regulation Z also contains provisions implementing the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, which requires disclosure of the tax implications of certain home-equity plans.

Subpart C – Closed-End Credit

Subpart C relates to closed-end credit. It contains rules on disclosures (12 CFR 1026.17-.20), treatment of credit balances (12 CFR 1026.21), annual percentage rate calculations (12 CFR 1026.22), rescission rights (12 CFR 1026.23), and advertising (12 CFR 1026.24).

The TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures must be given for most closed-end transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33. The TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures do not apply to HELOCs, reverse mortgages, or mortgages secured by a mobile home or by a dwelling that is not attached to real property. Truth in Lending disclosures (TIL disclosures) and the Consumer Handbook on Adjustable Rate Mortgages (CHARM) booklet must still be provided for certain closed-end loan transactions.

I. Disclosures, Generally

A. Timing

Generally, all disclosures provided to consumers must be made clearly and conspicuously in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep (12 CFR 1026.17(a), 1026.37(o), 1026.38(t)). However, the timing of the disclosures may change depending on the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(a), 1026.19(e)(1)(iii), 1026.19(f)(1)(ii), 1026.19(g)).

Disclosures in connection with non-mortgage closed-end loans and specified housing assistance loan programs for low- and moderate-income consumers must be provided before consummation of the transaction (12 CFR 1026.3).

For most closed-end transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33 (including construction-only loans, loans secured by vacant land or by 25 or more acres, and credit extended to certain trusts for tax or estate planning purposes), disclosures must be provided in accordance with the timing requirements outlined in 12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f) and (g). Generally, a creditor is required to mail or deliver the Loan Estimate within three business days of receipt of the consumer's loan application and to ensure that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure no later than three business days before loan consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(iii), 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)). If the loan is a purchase transaction, the special information booklet must also be provided within three business days of receipt of the consumer's application (12 CFR 1026.19(g)). The specifics of these disclosure timing requirements are further discussed below, including a discussion about revised disclosures.

Mortgage loans not subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) (e.g., reverse mortgages, and chattel-dwelling loans) have different disclosure requirements. For reverse mortgages, disclosures must be delivered or mailed to the consumer no later than the third business day after a creditor receives the consumer's written application (12 CFR 1026.19(a)). For chattel-dwelling mortgage loans, disclosures must be provided to the consumer prior to consummation of the loan (12 CFR 1026.17(b)). Revised disclosures are also required within three business days of consummation if certain mortgage loan terms change (12 CFR 1026.19(a)(2)). For loans like reverse mortgages, the consumer will receive the Good Faith Estimate (GFE), HUD-1 Settlement Statement (HUD-1), and TIL disclosures as required under the applicable sections of both TILA and RESPA. Consumers receive TIL disclosures for chattel-dwelling loans that are not secured by land, but the GFE and the HUD-1 are not required. Finally, certain variable-rate transactions secured by a dwelling have additional disclosure obligations with specific timing requirements both prior to and after consummation (see 12 CFR 1026.20(c) and (d) below).

B. Basis for Disclosures

1. Generally

Disclosures provided for closed-end transactions must reflect the credit terms to which the parties will be legally bound as of the outset of the credit transaction. If information required for the disclosures is unknown, the creditor may provide the consumer with an estimate, using the best information reasonably available. The disclosure must be clearly marked as an estimate.

Variable and Adjustable Rate

If the terms of the legal obligation allow the financial institution, after consummation of the transaction, to increase the APR, the financial institution must furnish the consumer with certain information on variable rates. Variable-rate disclosures are not applicable to rate increases resulting from delinquency, default, assumption, acceleration, or transfer of the collateral.

Some of the more important transaction-specific variable-rate disclosure requirements follow.

- Disclosures for variable-rate loans must be given for the full term of the transaction and must be based on the terms in effect at the time of consummation.
- If the variable-rate transaction includes either a seller buy-down that is reflected in a contract or a consumer buy-down, the disclosed APR should be a composite rate based on the lower rate for the buy-down period and the rate that is the basis for the variable-rate feature for the remainder of the term.
- If the initial rate is not determined by the index or formula used to make later interest rate adjustments, as in a discounted variable-rate transaction, the disclosed APR must reflect a composite rate based on the initial rate for as long as it is applied and, for the remainder of the term, the rate that would have been applied using the index or formula at the time of consummation (i.e., the fully indexed rate).
    - If a loan contains a rate or payment cap that would prevent the initial rate or payment, at the time of the adjustment, from changing to the fully indexed rate, the effect of that rate or payment cap needs to be reflected in the disclosures.
    - The index at consummation need not be used if the contract provides a delay in the implementation of changes in an index value (e.g., the contract indicates that future rate changes are based on the index value in effect for some specified period, such as 45 days before the change date). Instead, the financial institution may use any rate from the date of consummation back to the beginning of the specified period (e.g., during the previous 45-day period).

- If the initial interest rate is set according to the index or formula used for later adjustments but is set at a value as of a date before consummation, disclosures should be based on the initial interest rate, even though the index may have changed by the consummation date.

II. Finance Charge, Amount Financed and APRs

A. Finance Charge – 12 CFR 1026.18(d), 1026.38(o)(2)

The total amount of the finance charge must be disclosed for all loans.

In a transaction secured by real property or a dwelling, the disclosed finance charge and other disclosures affected by the disclosed finance charge (including the amount financed and the annual percentage rate) must be treated as accurate if the amount disclosed as the finance charge (1) is understated by no more than $100 or (2) is greater than the amount required to be disclosed.

B. Amount Financed – 12 CFR 1026.18(b), 1026.18(c), 1026.38(o)(3)

1. Definition

The amount financed is the net amount of credit extended for the consumer's use. It should not be assumed that the amount financed under the regulation is equivalent to the note amount, proceeds, or principal amount of the loan. The amount financed normally equals the total of payments less the finance charge.

To calculate the amount financed, all amounts and charges connected with the transaction, either paid separately or included in the note amount, must first be identified. Any prepaid, precomputed, or other finance charge must then be determined.

The amount financed must not include any finance charges. If finance charges have been included in the obligation (either prepaid or precomputed), they must be subtracted from the face amount of the obligation when determining the amount financed. The resulting value must be reduced further by an amount equal to any prepaid finance charge paid separately. The final resulting value is the amount financed.

When calculating the amount financed, finance charges (whether in the note amount or paid separately) should not be subtracted more than once from the total amount of an obligation. Charges not in the note amount and not included in the finance charge (e.g., an appraisal fee paid separately in cash on a real estate loan) are not required to be disclosed under Regulation Z and must not be included in the amount financed. An itemization of the amount financed is required (except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.18(c)(2) or (c)(3)), unless the loan is subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) (i.e., most closed-end mortgage loans).

2. Calculating the Amount Financed

A consumer signs a note secured by real property in the amount of $5,435. The note amount includes $5,000 in proceeds disbursed to the consumer, $400 in precomputed interest, $25 paid to a credit reporting agency for a credit report, and a $10 service charge. Additionally, the consumer pays a $50 loan fee separately in cash at consummation. The consumer has no other debt with the financial institution. The amount financed is $4,975.

The amount financed may be calculated by first subtracting all finance charges included in the note amount ($5,435 - $400 - $10 = $5,025). The $25 credit report fee is not a finance charge because the loan is secured by real property. The $5,025 is further reduced by the amount of prepaid finance charges paid separately, for an amount financed of $5,025 - $50 = $4,975. The answer is the same whether finance charges included in the obligation are considered prepaid or precomputed finance charges.

The financial institution may treat the $10 service charge as an addition to the loan amount and not as a prepaid finance charge. If it does, the loan principal would be $5,000. The $5,000 loan principal does not include either the $400 or the $10 precomputed finance charge in the note. The loan principal is increased by other amounts that are financed that are not part of the finance charge (the $25 credit report fee) and reduced by any prepaid finance charges (the $50 loan fee, not the $10 service charge) to arrive at the amount financed of $5,000 + $25 - $50 = $4,975.

Conversely, the financial institution may treat the $10 service charge as a prepaid finance charge. If it does, the loan principal would be $5,010. The $5,010 loan principal does not include the $400 precomputed finance charge. The loan principal is increased by other amounts that are financed that are not part of the finance charge (the $25 credit report fee) and reduced by any prepaid finance charges (the $50 loan fee and the $10 service charge withheld from loan proceeds) to arrive at the same amount financed of $5,010 + $25 - $50 - $10 = $4,975.

C. Payment Schedule – 12 CFR 1026.18(g)

For transactions that are not subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), the disclosed payment schedule must reflect all components of the finance charge. It includes all payments scheduled to repay loan principal, interest on the loan, and any other finance charge payable by the consumer after consummation of the transaction.

However, any finance charge paid separately before or at consummation (e.g., odd days' interest) is not part of the payment schedule. It is a prepaid finance charge that must be reflected as a reduction in the value of the amount financed.

At the creditor's option, the payment schedule may include amounts beyond the amount financed and finance charge (e.g., certain insurance premiums or real estate escrow amounts such as taxes added to payments). However, when calculating the APR, the creditor must disregard such amounts.

If the obligation is a renewable balloon payment instrument that unconditionally obligates the financial institution to renew the short-term loan at the consumer's option or to renew the loan subject to conditions within the consumer's control, the payment schedule must be disclosed using the longer term of the renewal period or periods. The long-term loan must be disclosed with a variable-rate feature.

If there are no renewal conditions or if the financial institution guarantees to renew the obligation in a refinancing, the payment schedule must be disclosed using the shorter balloon payment term. The short-term loan must be disclosed as a fixed-rate loan, unless it contains a variable-rate feature during the initial loan term.

D. Annual Percentage Rate (Closed-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.22

1. Calculating the Annual Percentage Rate – 12 CFR 1026.22

The APR must be determined under one of the following:

- The actuarial method, which is defined by Regulation Z and explained in Appendix J to the regulation.
- The U.S. Rule, which is permitted by Regulation Z and briefly explained in Appendix J to the regulation. The U.S. Rule is an accrual method that seems to have first surfaced officially in an early 19th-century U.S. Supreme Court case, Story v. Livingston, 38 U.S. 359 (1839).

Whichever method is used by the financial institution, the rate calculated will be accurate if it is able to "amortize" the amount financed while it generates the finance charge under the accrual method selected. Financial institutions also may rely on minor irregularities and accuracy tolerances in the regulation, both of which effectively permit somewhat imprecise, but still legal, APRs to be disclosed.

2. Accuracy Tolerances

The disclosed APR on a closed-end transaction is accurate for:

- Regular transactions (which include any single advance transaction with equal payments and equal payment periods, or an irregular first payment period and/or a first or last irregular payment), if the disclosed APR is within one-eighth of one percentage point of the APR calculated under Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(2));
- Irregular transactions (which include multiple advance transactions and other transactions not considered regular), if the disclosed APR is within one-quarter of one percentage point of the APR calculated under Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(3));
- Mortgage transactions, if the disclosed APR is within one-eighth of one percentage point for regular transactions or one-quarter of one percentage point for irregular transactions or if:

  i. The rate results from the disclosed finance charge, and:

     (A) The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.18(d)(1) or 1026.38(o)(2), as applicable; or

(B) The disclosed finance charge is calculated incorrectly but is considered accurate for purposes of rescission, under 12 CFR 1026.23(g) or (h), whichever applies (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(4)).

ii. The disclosed finance charge is calculated incorrectly but is considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.18(d)(1) or 1026.38(o)(2), as applicable, or 12 CFR 1026.23 (g) or (h), and either:

(A) The finance charge is understated, and the disclosed APR is also understated but is closer to the actual APR than the APR that would be considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.22(a)(4); or

(B) The disclosed finance charge is overstated, and the disclosed APR is also overstated but is closer to the actual APR than the APR that would be considered accurate under (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(4)).

For example, in an irregular transaction subject to a tolerance of one-fourth of one percentage point, if the actual APR is 9.00 percent and a $75 omission from the finance charge corresponds to a rate of 8.50 percent that is considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.22(a)(4), a disclosed APR of 8.65 percent is considered accurate under (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(5)). However, a disclosed APR below 8.50 percent or above 9.25 percent would not be considered accurate.

3. Construction-Only and Construction-Permanent Loans – 12 CFR 1026.17(c) ((6), 12 CFR 1026.37 & .38, and Appendix D

Due to the structure of construction-permanent and certain other multiple-advance loans, Regulation Z includes certain optional provisions to help a creditor estimate the components of the APR and finance charge computations for these loans. In many instances, the amount and dates of advances are not predictable with certainty since they depend on the progress of the work. Regulation Z provides that the APR and finance charge for such loans may be estimated for disclosure based on the best information reasonably available at the time of disclosure (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i)). Further, a creditor has optionality as to whether it discloses the advances separate or together as one transaction in certain circumstances. First, a series of advances under an agreement to extend credit up to a certain amount may be considered as one transaction or disclosed as separate transactions (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(i)). Second, when a multiple-advance loan to finance the construction of a dwelling may be permanently financed by the same creditor, the construction phase and the permanent phase may be treated as either one transaction or more than one transaction (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(ii)). Because construction loans or construction-permanent loans may be disclosed as one transaction, or as multiple transactions, computations can be impacted by this decision.

If the actual schedule of advances is not known, the methods set forth in Appendix D may be used to estimate the interest portion of the finance charge and the annual percentage rate and to make disclosures (12 CFR Part 1026 App. D).

At its option, the financial institution may rely on the representations of other parties to acquire necessary information (for example, it might look to the consumer for the dates of advances). In addition, if either the amounts or dates of advances are unknown (even if some of them are known), the financial institution may, at its option, use Appendix D to the regulation (and its associated commentary) to make calculations and disclosures. The finance charge and payment schedule obtained through Appendix D may be used with volume one of the Bureau's APR tables or with any other appropriate computation tool to determine the APR. If the financial institution elects not to use Appendix D, or if Appendix D cannot be applied to a loan (e.g., Appendix D does not apply to a combined construction-permanent loan if the payments for the permanent loan begin during the construction period), the financial institution must make its estimates under 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2) and calculate the APR using multiple-advance formulas.

Interest Reserves

In a multiple-advance construction loan, a creditor may establish an "interest reserve" to ensure that interest is paid as it accrues by designating a portion of the loan amount for that interest payment purpose. If the creditor requires interest reserves for construction loans, Appendix D provides further guidance. Among other things, the amount of interest reserves included in the commitment amount is not treated as a prepaid finance charge, whether the interest reserve is the same as or different from the estimated interest figure calculated under Appendix D (Comment App. D-5).

If a creditor permits a consumer to make interest payments as they become due, the interest reserve should be disregarded in the disclosures and calculations under Appendix D (Comment App. D-5.i).

If a creditor requires the establishment of an interest reserve and automatically deducts interest payments from the reserve amount rather than allow the consumer to make interest payments as they become due, the fact that interest will accrue on those interest payments as well as the other loan proceeds must be reflected in the calculations and disclosures. To reflect the effects of such compounding, the creditor should use the formula in Appendix D (Comment App. D-5.ii).

Fees and Charges

In the case of a construction-permanent loan that a creditor chooses to disclose as multiple transactions, the creditor must allocate to the construction transaction finance charges and points and fees that would not be imposed but for the construction financing. Those amounts must be in disclosures for the construction phase and may not be included in the disclosures for the permanent phase. If a creditor charges separate amounts for the finance charges and points and fees for the construction phase and the permanent phase, such amounts must be allocated to the phase for which they are charged. If a creditor charges an origination fee for construction financing only but charges a greater origination fee for construction-permanent financing, the difference between the two fees must be allocated to the permanent phase. All other finance charges and points and fees must be allocated to permanent financing. Fees and charges that are not used to compute the finance charge or points and fees may be allocated between the transactions in any manner the creditor chooses (Comment 17(c)(6)-5).

4. 360-Day and 365-Day Years – 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(3)

Confusion often arises over whether to use the 360-day or 365-day year in computing interest, particularly when the finance charge is computed by applying a daily rate to an unpaid balance. Many single-payment loans or loans payable on demand are in this category. There are also loans in this category that call for periodic installment payments. Regulation Z does not require the use of one method of interest computation in preference to another (although state law may). It does, however, permit financial institutions to disregard the fact that months have different numbers of days when calculating and making disclosures. This means financial institutions may base their disclosures on calculation tools that assume all months have an equal number of days, even if their practice is to take account of the variations in months to collect interest.

For example, a financial institution may calculate disclosures using a financial calculator based on a 360-day year with 30-day months, when, in fact, it collects interest by applying a factor of 1/365 of the annual interest rate to actual days.

Disclosure violations may occur, however, when a financial institution applies a daily interest factor based on a 360-day year to the actual number of days between payments. In those situations, the financial institution must disclose the higher values of the finance charge, the APR, and the payment schedule resulting from this practice.

For example, a 12 percent simple interest rate divided by 360 days results in a daily rate of .033333 percent. If no charges are imposed except interest, and the amount financed is the same as the loan amount, applying the daily rate on a daily basis for a 365-day year on a $10,000 one-year, single-payment, unsecured loan results in an APR of 12.17 percent (0.033333 percent x 365 = 12.17 percent), and a finance charge of $1,216.67. There would be a violation if the APR were disclosed as 12 percent or if the finance charge were disclosed as $1,200 (12 percent x $10,000).

However, if there are no other charges except interest, the application of a 360-day year daily rate over 365 days on a regular loan would not result in an APR in excess of the one-eighth of one percentage point APR tolerance unless the nominal interest rate is greater than 9 percent. For irregular loans, with one-quarter of one percentage point APR tolerance, the nominal interest rate would have to be greater than 18 percent to exceed the tolerance.

NOTE: Notwithstanding the APR tolerance, a creditor's disclosures must reflect the terms of the legal obligation between the parties (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(1)), and the APR must be determined in accordance with either the actuarial method or the U.S. Rule method (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(1)). A creditor may not ignore, for disclosure purposes, the effects of applying a 360-day year daily rate over 365 days (Comment 17(c)(3)-1.ii).

E. Required Deposit – 12 CFR 1026.18(r)

A required deposit, with certain exceptions, is one that the financial institution requires the consumer to maintain as a condition of the specific credit transaction. It can include a compensating balance or a deposit balance that secures the loan. The effect of a required deposit is not reflected in the APR. Also, a required deposit is not a finance charge since it is eventually released to the consumer. A deposit that earns at least 5 percent per year need not be considered a required deposit.

III. Transactions with TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures – Generally

On December 31, 2013, the CFPB published a final rule implementing Sections 1098(2) and 1100A(5) of the Dodd-Frank Act, which directed the CFPB to publish a single, integrated disclosure for mortgage loan transactions, which includes mortgage loan disclosure requirements under TILA and Sections 4 and 5 of RESPA. The amendments in the final rule, referred to as the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule, or TRID, are applicable to covered closed-end mortgage loans for which a creditor or mortgage broker received an application on or after October 3, 2015. As a result, Regulation Z now houses the integrated forms, timing, and related disclosure requirements for most closed-end consumer mortgage loans.

The integrated disclosures are not used to disclose information about reverse mortgages, HELOCs, chattel-dwelling loans such as loans secured by a mobile home or by a dwelling that is not attached to real property (i.e., land), or other transactions not covered by the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule. The final rule also does not apply to loans made by a creditor who makes five or fewer mortgages in a year. Creditors originating these types of mortgages use, as applicable, the GFE, HUD-1, and TIL disclosures.

Most closed-end mortgage loans are exempt from the requirement to provide the GFE, HUD-1, and servicing disclosure requirements of (12 CFR 1024.6, 1024.7, 1024.8, 1024.10, and 1024.33(a)). Instead, these loans are subject to disclosure, timing, and other requirements under TILA and Regulation Z. Specifically, the provisions mentioned in the first sentence of this paragraph do not apply to the following federally related mortgage loans:

- Loans subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure requirements for certain closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit set forth in 12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f), and (g); or

- Certain no-interest loans secured by subordinate liens made for the purpose of down payment or similar home buyer assistance, property rehabilitation assistance, energy efficiency assistance, or foreclosure avoidance or prevention (12 CFR 1026.3(h)).

NOTE: A creditor may not use the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure forms instead of the GFE, HUD-1, and TIL forms for transactions that continue to be covered by TILA or RESPA that require those disclosures (e.g., reverse mortgages).

Summary of Applicable Disclosure Requirements:

<table>
<tr><td>Use TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures (see Regulation Z):

• Most closed-end mortgage loans, including:
  o Construction-only loans
  o Loans secured by vacant land or by 25 or more acres</td><td>Continue to use TIL[25] and RESPA disclosures (as applicable):

• HELOCs (subject to disclosure requirements under 12 CFR 1026.40)
• Reverse mortgages[26] (subject to existing TIL and GFE disclosures)
• Chattel-secured mortgages (i.e., mortgages secured by a mobile home or by a dwelling that is not attached to real property, such as land) (subject to existing TIL disclosures, and not RESPA)</td></tr>
<tr><td colspan="2">NOTE: In both cases, there is a partial exemption from these disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.3(h) for loans secured by subordinate liens and associated with certain housing assistance loan programs for low- and moderate-income persons.</td></tr>

Creditors making closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33, and subject to the provisions of 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), must provide consumers with a Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37, Closing Disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.38, the special information booklet as required, under 12 CFR 1026.19(g), and, as applicable for ARM transactions, the CHARM booklet. The special information booklet is described in further detail below.

A. Early disclosures (Loan Estimate) – 12 CFR 1026.19(e)

12 CFR 1026.19(e) requires the creditor to provide good faith estimates of the Loan Estimate disclosures (see 12 CFR 1026.37 for information on the content, form, and format of the disclosure). The creditor generally must deliver or place in the mail the Loan Estimate no later than three business days after receiving the consumer's application, and no later than seven business days before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(i) and (iii)).

Generally, the creditor is responsible for ensuring that the Loan Estimate and its delivery meet the rule's content, delivery, and timing requirements. (See 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and 1026.37.) If a mortgage broker receives a consumer's application, the mortgage broker may provide the Loan Estimate to the consumer on the creditor's behalf. If it does so, the mortgage broker must comply with all requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(e), as well as the three-year record retention requirements in 12 CFR 1026.25(c) (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(ii)). The creditor is expected to maintain communication with mortgage brokers to ensure that the Loan Estimate and its delivery satisfy the rule's requirements, and the creditor is legally responsible for any errors or defects (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(ii); Comment 19(e)(1)(ii) -1 and -2).

[25] See Appendix H-2.

Timing- Loan Estimate-early disclosures. The Loan Estimate must be delivered or placed in the mail to the consumer no later than the third business day after the creditor or mortgage broker receives the consumer's application for a mortgage loan (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(A)). If the Loan Estimate is not provided to the consumer in person, the consumer is considered to have received the Loan Estimate three business days after it is delivered or placed in the mail (this applies to electronic delivery as well) (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iv); Comment 19(e)(1)(iv)-2). Other than for transactions secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan, the Loan Estimate must be delivered or placed in the mail no later than the seventh business day before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B) and (C)).

For purposes of the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures rule, an "application" is defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(3)(ii). For transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f), or (g), an application consists of the submission of the following six pieces of information:

- The consumer's name,
- The consumer's income,
- The consumer's Social Security number to obtain a credit report,
- The property address,
- An estimate of the value of the property, and
- The mortgage loan amount sought.

This definition of application is similar to the definition under Regulation X (12 CFR 1024.2(b)), except that it does not include the seventh "catch-all" element of that definition, that is, "any other information deemed necessary by the loan originator."

An application may be submitted in written or electronic format and includes a written record of an oral application (Comment 2(a)(3)-1).

This definition of application does not prevent a creditor from collecting whatever additional information it deems necessary in connection with the request for the extension of credit. However, once a consumer has submitted[27] the six pieces of information discussed above to the creditor for purposes of obtaining an extension of credit, the creditor has an application for purposes of the requirement for delivery of the Loan Estimate to the consumer and must abide by the three business day timing requirement (Comment 2(a)(3)-1).

If the creditor determines, within the three business-day period, that the consumer's application will not or cannot be approved on the terms requested by the consumer, or if the consumer withdraws the application within that period, the creditor does not have to provide the Loan Estimate. However, if the creditor does not provide the Loan Estimate, it will not have complied with the Loan Estimate requirements if it later consummates the transaction on the terms originally applied for by the consumer. If a consumer amends an application and a creditor determines the amended application may proceed, then the creditor is required to comply with the Loan Estimate requirements, including delivering or mailing a Loan Estimate within three business days of receiving the amended or resubmitted application (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-3).

A "business day" for purposes of providing the Loan Estimate is a day on which the creditor's offices are open to the public for carrying out substantially all of its business functions (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-1, 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6)).

NOTE: The term "business day" is defined differently for other purposes, including counting days to ensure the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure on time (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6), 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B) and (e)(1)(iv), and 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A) and (f)(1)(iii)). For these other purposes, business day means all calendar days except Sundays and the legal public holidays specified in 5 U.S.C. 6103(a) (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6); Comment 2(a)(6)-2; Comments 19(e)(1)(iii)-1 and 19(f)(1)(ii)-1).

Creditors are required to act in good faith and exercise due diligence in obtaining information necessary to complete the Loan Estimate (Comment 17(c)(2)(i)-1). Normally, creditors may rely on the representations of other parties in obtaining information (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i)).

NOTE: There may be some information that is not reasonably available to the creditor at the time the Loan Estimate is made. In these instances, except as otherwise provided in 12 CFR 1026.19, 1026.37, and 1026.38, the creditor may use estimates even though it knows that more precise information will be available by the point of consummation. However, new disclosures may be required under 12 CFR 1026.17(f) or 1026.19 (Comment 17(c)(2)(i)-1). When estimated figures are used, they must be designated as such on the Loan Estimate (Comment 17(c)(2)(i)-2)).

The consumer may modify or waive the seven business-day waiting period after receiving the Loan Estimate if the consumer determines that the mortgage loan is needed to meet a bona fide personal financial emergency that necessitates consummating the credit transaction before the end of the waiting period (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v)). Whether a consumer has a bona fide personal financial emergency is determined by the facts surrounding the consumer's individual situation. One example is the imminent sale of the consumer's home at foreclosure, where the foreclosure sale will proceed unless loan proceeds are made available to the consumer during the waiting period (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v); Comment 19(e)(1)(v)-1)). To modify or waive the waiting period, the consumer must give the creditor a dated written statement that describes the emergency, specifically modifies or waives the waiting period, and is signed by all consumers primarily liable on the legal obligation (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v)). The creditor may not provide the consumer with a pre-printed waiver form (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v)).

Good faith requirement and tolerances. Creditors are responsible for ensuring that the figures stated in the Loan Estimate are made in good faith and consistent with the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time they are disclosed (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3); Comment 19(e)(3)(iii)-1 through -3)). Whether or not a Loan Estimate was made in good faith is determined by calculating the difference between the estimated charges originally provided in the Loan Estimate and the actual charges paid by or imposed on the consumer in the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) and (ii)). Generally, if the charge paid by or imposed on the consumer exceeds the amount originally disclosed on the Loan Estimate, it is not in good faith (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i)). As long as the creditor's estimate is consistent with the best information reasonably available, and the creditor charges the consumer less than the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate, the Loan Estimate is considered to be in good faith (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i)).

The general rule is that the estimated closing cost is in good faith if the charge does not exceed the amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate. Unless there is an exception, depending on the specific circumstances, the creditor may not charge more than the amounts disclosed on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i)). For certain charges, there are different tolerances when charges exceed the amounts disclosed.

Zero tolerance. For charges other than those that are specifically excepted, as noted below, creditors may not charge consumers more than the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate, other than for changed circumstances that permit a revised Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) and (iv)). The zero tolerance charges include but are not limited to the following:

- Fees for required services paid to the creditor, mortgage broker, or an affiliate of either (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i), Comment 19(e)(3)(i)-1(i)-(iii));
- Fees paid to an unaffiliated third party if the creditor did not permit the consumer to shop for a third-party service provider for a settlement service or transfer taxes (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i)), Comment 19(e)(3)(i)-1.iv-v)).

10 percent cumulative tolerance. Charges for third-party services and recording fees paid by or imposed on the consumer are grouped together and are subject to a 10 percent cumulative tolerance. This means the creditor may charge the consumer more than the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate for any of these charges so long as the total sum of the charges does not exceed the sum of all such charges disclosed on the Loan Estimate by more than 10 percent (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(A)). These charges are:

- Recording fees (Comments 19(e)(3)(ii)-1.ii and -4);
- Charges for required third-party services if:
  - The charge is not paid to the creditor or the creditor's affiliate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(B)); and

- The consumer is permitted by the creditor to shop for the third-party service (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(C); 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi); Comment 19(e)(1)(vi)-1 through -7).

  NOTE: If a creditor has failed to issue the written list of providers or failed to disclose a specific settlement service on the written list, the creditor may still be determined, based on all the relevant facts and circumstances, to have permitted a consumer to shop for purposes of determining good faith (Comment 19(e)(3)(iii)-2).

Variances permitted without tolerance limits. Creditors may charge consumers more than the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate without any tolerance limitation for certain costs or terms, but only if the original estimated charge, or lack of an estimated charge for a particular service, was based on the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure was provided. These charges may be paid to the creditor or the creditor's affiliates as long as the charges are bona fide (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)). These charges are:

- Prepaid interest; property insurance premiums; amounts placed into an escrow, impound, reserve, or similar account (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(A)-(C)).
- Charges paid to third-party service providers for services required by the creditor if the creditor permits the consumer to shop and the consumer selects a third-party service provider not on the creditor's written list of service providers (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(D); Comment 19(e)(3)(iii)-2).
- Property taxes and other charges paid to third-party service providers for services not required by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(E)).

List of services for which a consumer may shop. In addition to the Loan Estimate, if the consumer is permitted to shop for a settlement service, the creditor, no later than three business days after receiving the application, must provide the consumer with a written list of settlement services for which the consumer can shop. This list must:

- Identify at least one available settlement service provider for each service; and
- State that the consumer may choose a different provider of that service (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi)(C)).[28]

  NOTE: The use of Model Form H-27 in Appendix H is not required. However, creditors who use that form properly are deemed to be in compliance with 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi)(C) (Comment 19(e)(1)(vi)-3).

  Regardless of whether a creditor provides a revised written list of providers, determining whether the charges for required services were disclosed in good faith will depend on whether the creditor permitted the consumer to shop for those services, [28] The Preamble to the 2017 Amendments explained that creditors may issue a revised written list of providers when a settlement service is added as a result of a reason provided for under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)((iv). (See Preamble, 82 FR 37,677 (Aug. 11, 2017)) and is based on all relevant facts and circumstances (Comments 19(e)(1)(vi)-1 and 19(e)(3)(ii)-6).

Refunds within 60 days of consummation. If the amounts paid by the consumer at closing exceed the amounts disclosed on the Loan Estimate beyond the applicable tolerance threshold, the creditor must refund the excess to the consumer no later than 60 calendar days after consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(v)).

- For charges subject to zero tolerance, any amount charged beyond the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate must be refunded to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i)).
- For charges subject to a 10 percent cumulative tolerance, to the extent the total sum of the charges exceeds the sum of all such charges disclosed on the Loan Estimate by more than 10 percent, the difference must be refunded to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)).

Loan Estimate- revisions and corrections. Creditors are generally bound by the original Loan Estimate and must determine the estimate's good faith by calculating the difference between the estimated charges originally provided and the actual charges paid by the consumer. Creditors may provide a revised Loan Estimate for informational purposes. Regardless of whether a creditor provides a revised Loan Estimate to reset tolerances or for informational purposes only, any disclosures on the revised Loan Estimate disclosure must be based on the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the revised disclosures are provided (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)-1-2, 4-5).

For purposes of determining whether the estimates are in good faith, the creditor may use a revised estimate of a charge instead of the amount originally disclosed if the revision is due to one of the specific circumstances set out in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A) through (F). The specific circumstances "(A)" and "(B)" relate to "changed circumstances", as described below:

(A): Changed circumstances – increased settlement charges. Changed circumstances that occur after the Loan Estimate is provided to the consumer that cause estimated settlement charges to increase more than is permitted under the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure rule (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)).

- A creditor may provide and use a revised Loan Estimate redisclosing a settlement charge and compare that revised estimate to the amount imposed on the consumer for purposes of determining good faith if changed circumstances cause the estimated charge to increase or, in the case of charges subject to the 10 percent cumulative tolerance under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii), cause the sum of those charges to increase by more than the 10 percent tolerance (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A); Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(A)-1). Examples of changed circumstances affecting settlement costs include (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(A)-2):
    - A natural disaster that damages the property or otherwise results in additional closing costs;
    - A creditor's estimate of title insurance is no longer valid because the title insurer goes out of business; or

- o New information not relied on when the Loan Estimate was provided is discovered, such as a neighbor of the seller filing a claim contesting the property boundary.

(B): Changed circumstances – consumer eligibility. Changed circumstances that occur after the Loan Estimate is provided to the consumer that affect the consumer's eligibility for the terms for which the consumer applied or the value of the security for the loan (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(B)).

For both (A) Changed circumstances – increased settlement charges, and (B) Changed circumstances – consumer eligibility:

- A creditor also may provide and use a revised Loan Estimate if a changed circumstance affected the consumer's creditworthiness or the value of the security for the loan and resulted in the consumer being ineligible for an estimated loan term previously disclosed (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(B) and Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(B)-1). This may occur when a changed circumstance causes a change in the consumer's eligibility for specific loan terms disclosed on the Loan Estimate, which in turn results in increased cost for a settlement service beyond the applicable tolerance threshold (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(A)-2). For example:
- The creditor relied on the consumer's representation to the creditor of a $90,000 annual income but underwriting determines that the consumer's annual income is only $80,000.
- There are two co-applicants applying for a mortgage loan and the creditor relied on a combined income when providing the Loan Estimate, but one applicant subsequently becomes unemployed.

NOTE on Changed Circumstances: A changed circumstance permitting a revised Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A) and (B) is:

- An extraordinary event beyond the control of any interested party or other unexpected event specific to the consumer or transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(1));
- Information specific to the consumer or transaction that the creditor relied upon when providing the original Loan Estimate and that was inaccurate or changed after the disclosures were provided (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(2)); or
- New information specific to the consumer or transaction that the creditor did not rely on when providing the original Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(3)).

(C): Revisions requested by the consumer. The consumer requests revisions to the credit terms or the settlement that cause the estimated charge to increase. For example, a consumer grants a power of attorney authorizing a family member to consummate the transaction on the consumer's behalf, and the creditor provides revised disclosures reflecting the fee to record the power of attorney (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(C)-1).

(D): Rate locks after initial Loan Estimate. If the interest rate for the loan was not locked when the Loan Estimate was provided and, upon being locked at some later time, points or lender credits for the mortgage loan change, the creditor is required to provide a revised Loan Estimate no later than three business days after the interest rate is locked and may use the revised Loan Estimate to compare to points and lender credits charged. The revised Loan Estimate must reflect the revised interest rate as well as any revisions to the points disclosed on the Loan Estimate pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(f)(1), lender credits, and any other interest rate-dependent charges and terms that have changed due to the new interest rate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(D); Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(D)-1). If the interest rate is locked on or after the date on which the creditor provides the Closing Disclosure and the Closing Disclosure is inaccurate as a result, then the creditor must provide the consumer a corrected Closing Disclosure, at or before consummation, reflecting any changed terms (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(D)-2).

(E): Expiration of Loan Estimate. If the consumer indicates an intent to proceed with the transaction more than 10 business days (or any additional number of days as extended by the creditor orally or in writing) after the Loan Estimate was delivered or placed in the mail to the consumer, a creditor may use a revised Loan Estimate. No justification is required for the change to the original estimate of a charge other than the lapse of 10 business days or the additional number of days as extended by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(E); Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(E)-1 and -2).

(F): Construction loans. Creditors also may use a revised Loan Estimate where the transaction involves financing of new construction and the creditor reasonably expects that settlement will occur more than 60 calendar days after the original Loan Estimate has been provided if the original Loan Estimate clearly and conspicuously stated that at any time prior to 60 days before consummation, the creditor may issue revised disclosures (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(F)).

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3) does not include technical errors, miscalculations, or underestimations of charges as reasons for which creditors are permitted to provide revised Loan Estimates.

Timing- Loan Estimate- revised disclosures. The general rule is that the creditor must deliver or place in the mail the revised Loan Estimate to the consumer no later than three business days after receiving the information sufficient to establish that one of the reasons for the revision has occurred (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(i); Comment 19(e)(4)(i)-1).

The creditor may not provide a revised Loan Estimate on or after the date the creditor provides the consumer with the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(ii); Comment 19(e)(4)(ii)-1.ii). Instead, the creditor may use the initial or a corrected Closing Disclosure to reset tolerances for purposes of determining good faith provided one of the specific circumstances under the rule is present. Any such revised Loan Estimate or Closing Disclosure must be provided to the consumer within three business days of receiving information sufficient to establish a reason for a revised estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(i)).

Predisclosure activity. A creditor or other person generally may not impose any fee on a consumer in connection with the consumer's application for a mortgage transaction until the consumer has received the Loan Estimate and has indicated intent to proceed with the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(A)). This restriction includes limits on imposing:

- Application fees,
- Appraisal fees,
- Underwriting fees, and
- Other fees imposed on the consumer.

The only exception to this exclusion is for a bona fide and reasonable fee for obtaining a consumer's credit report (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(B); Comment 19(e)(2)(i)(A)-1 through -5 and Comment 19(e)(2)(i)(B)-1)).

Documentation of intent to proceed. To satisfy the record retention requirements of 12 CFR 1026.25, the creditor must document the consumer's communication of the intent to proceed (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(A)). A consumer indicates intent to proceed with the transaction when the consumer communicates, in any manner, that the consumer chooses to proceed after the Loan Estimate has been delivered, unless a particular manner of communication is required by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(A)). This may include:

- Oral communication in person immediately upon delivery of the Loan Estimate; or
- Oral communication over the phone, written communication via email, or signing a pre-printed form after receipt of the Loan Estimate.

A consumer's silence is not indicative of intent to proceed (Comment 19(e)(2)(i)(A)-2).

Written information for consumers before the Loan Estimate is provided (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(ii)). A creditor or other person may provide a consumer with estimated terms or costs prior to the consumer receiving the Loan Estimate, if the person clearly and conspicuously states at the top of the front of the first page of the written estimate and in font size no smaller than 12-point font "Your actual rate, payment, and costs could be higher. Get an official Loan Estimate before choosing the loan" (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(ii); Comment 19(e)(2)(ii)-1). In addition, the written estimate may not have headings, content, and format substantially similar to the Loan Estimate or the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(ii); Comment 19(e)(2)(ii)-1).

The CFPB has provided a model of the required statement in Form H-26 of Appendix H to Regulation Z.

Verification of information before the Loan Estimate is provided. A creditor or other person may not condition providing the Loan Estimate on a consumer submitting documents verifying information related to the consumer's mortgage loan application before providing the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(iii); Comment 19(e)(2)(iii)-1).

B. Final Disclosures (Closing Disclosure) – 12 CFR 1026.19(f)

For loans that require a Loan Estimate (i.e., most closed-end mortgage loans secured by real property or a cooperative unit) and that proceed to closing, creditors must provide a new final disclosure reflecting the actual terms of the transaction; it is called the Closing Disclosure. The form integrates and replaces the HUD-1 and the final TIL disclosure for these transactions. The creditor is generally required to ensure that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure no later than three business days before consummation of the loan (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)).

NOTE: If the creditor mails the disclosure six business days prior to consummation, it can assume that it was received three business days after sending (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iii); Comment 19(f)(1)(iii)).

- The Closing Disclosure generally must contain the actual terms and costs of the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i)). Creditors may estimate disclosures using the best information reasonably available when the actual term or cost is not reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure is made. However, creditors must act in good faith and use due diligence in obtaining the information. The creditor normally may rely on the representations of other parties in obtaining the information, including, for example, the settlement agent. The creditor is required to provide corrected disclosures containing the actual terms of the transaction at or before consummation (Comments 19(f)(1)(i)-2, -2.i, and -2.ii).

- The Closing Disclosure must be in writing and contain the information prescribed in 12 CFR 1026.38. The creditor must disclose only the specific information set forth in 12 CFR 1026.38(a) through (s), as shown in the Bureau's form in Appendix H-25 (12 CFR 1026.38(t)).

- If the actual terms or costs of the transaction change prior to consummation, the creditor must provide a corrected disclosure that contains the actual terms of the transaction and complies with the other requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(f), including the timing requirements, and requirements for providing corrected disclosures due to subsequent changes (Comment 19(f)(1)(i)-1).

- New three-day waiting period. If the creditor provides a corrected disclosure, it must provide the consumer with an additional three-business-day waiting period prior to consummation if the annual percentage rate becomes inaccurate, the loan product changes, or a prepayment penalty is added to the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)).

"Consummation" occurs when the consumer becomes contractually obligated to the creditor on the loan, not, for example, when the consumer becomes contractually obligated to a seller on a real estate transaction. The time when a consumer becomes contractually obligated to the creditor on the loan depends on applicable state law (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(13); Comment 2(a)(13)-1).

Timing and Delivery – Closing Disclosure. Generally, the creditor is responsible for ensuring that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure form no later than three business days before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A); Comment 19(f)(1)(v)-3). The creditor also is responsible for ensuring that the Closing Disclosure meets the content, delivery, and timing requirements (12 CFR 1026.19(f) and 1026.38). For timeshare transactions, the creditor must ensure that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure no later than consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(B)).

If the Closing Disclosure is provided in person, it is considered received by the consumer on the day it is provided. If it is mailed or delivered electronically, the consumer is considered to have received the Closing Disclosure three business days after it is delivered or placed in the mail (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iii); Comment 19(f)(1)(ii)-2).

However, if the creditor has evidence that the consumer received the Closing Disclosure earlier than three business days after it is mailed or delivered, the creditor may rely on that evidence and consider the Closing Disclosure to be received on that date (Comments 19(f)(1)(iii)-1 and -2).

Multiple consumers. In transactions that are not rescindable, the Closing Disclosure may be provided to any consumer with primary liability on the obligation (12 CFR 1026.17(d)). In rescindable transactions, the creditor must provide the Closing Disclosure separately and meet the timing requirements for each consumer who has the right to rescind under TILA (See 12 CFR 1026.23).

Settlement agents. Creditors may contract with settlement agents to have the settlement agent provide the Closing Disclosure to consumers on the creditor's behalf, provided that the settlement agent complies with all relevant requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(f) (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(v)). Creditors and settlement agents also may agree to divide responsibility with regard to completing the Closing Disclosure, with the settlement agent assuming responsibility to complete some or all of the Closing Disclosure (Comment 19(f)(1)(v)-4). Any such creditor must maintain communication with the settlement agent to ensure that the Closing Disclosure and its delivery satisfy the requirements described above, and the creditor is legally responsible for any errors or defects (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(v); Comment 19(f)(1)(v)-3)). In transactions involving a seller, the settlement agent is required to provide the seller with the Closing Disclosure reflecting the actual terms of the seller's transaction no later than the day of consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(4)(i) and (ii)).

NOTE: "Business day" has a different meaning for purposes of providing the Closing Disclosure than it is for purposes of providing the Loan Estimate after receiving a consumer's application. For purposes of providing the Closing Disclosure, the term business day means all calendar days except Sundays and the legal public holidays specified in 5 U.S.C. 6103(a) (See 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6), 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A) and (f)(1)(iii)).

Three-business-day waiting period. The loan may not be consummated less than three business days after the Closing Disclosure is received by the consumer. If a settlement is scheduled during the waiting period, the creditor generally must postpone settlement, unless the consumer determines that the extension of credit is necessary to meet a bona fide personal financial emergency and waives the waiting period. The written waiver describes the emergency, specifically modifies, or waives the waiting period, and bears the signature of all consumers who are primarily liable on the legal obligation. Pre-printed forms for this purpose are prohibited (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iv)).

Average charges. In general, the amount imposed on the consumer for any settlement service must not exceed the amount the settlement service provider actually received for that service. However, an average charge may be imposed instead of the actual amount received for a particular service, as long as the average charge satisfies the following conditions (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(i)-(ii); Comment 19(f)(3)(i)-1):

- The average charge is no more than the average amount paid for that service by or on behalf of all consumers and sellers for a class of transactions;
- The creditor or settlement service provider defines the class of transactions based on an appropriate period of time, geographic area, and type of loan;
- The creditor or settlement service provider uses the same average charge for every transaction within the defined class; and
- The creditor or settlement service provider does not use an average charge:
  - For any type of insurance;
  - For any charge based on the loan amount or property value; or
  - If doing so is otherwise prohibited by law.

Closing Disclosures – Revisions and Corrections (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)). Creditors must re-disclose terms or costs on the Closing Disclosure if certain changes occur to the transaction after the Closing Disclosure was first provided that cause the disclosures to become inaccurate. There are three categories of changes that require a corrected Closing Disclosure containing all changed terms (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)):

- Changes that occur before consummation that require a new three-business-day waiting period (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii));
- Changes that occur before consummation and do not require a new three-business-day waiting period (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(i)); and
- Changes that occur after consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii)).

Changes before consummation requiring new waiting period. If one of the following occurs after delivery of the Closing Disclosure and before consummation, the creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure containing all changed terms and ensure that the consumer receives it no later than three business days before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii); Comment 19(f)(2)(ii)-1).

  - The disclosed APR becomes inaccurate. If the APR previously disclosed becomes inaccurate, the creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure with the corrected

APR disclosure and all other terms that have changed. The APR's accuracy is determined according to 12 CFR 1026.22 (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(A)). Generally, if the APR and finance charges are overstated because the interest rate has decreased, the APR is considered accurate and no new waiting period is required (12 CFR 1026.22).

- The loan product changes. If the loan product is changed, causing the product description disclosed to become inaccurate, the creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure with the corrected loan product and all other terms that have changed (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(B)).
- A prepayment penalty is added. If a prepayment penalty is added to the transaction, the creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure with the prepayment penalty provision disclosed and all other terms that have changed (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(C)).

The consumer may waive this period if the consumer is facing a bona fide personal financial emergency (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iv)).

Changes before consummation not requiring new waiting period; consumer's right to inspect. For any other changes before consummation that do not fall under the three categories above (i.e., related to the APR, the loan product, or the addition of a prepayment penalty), the creditor still must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure with any terms or costs that have changed and ensure that the consumer receives it. For these changes, there is no additional three-business-day waiting period required. The creditor must ensure only that the consumer receives the corrected Closing Disclosure at or before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(i); Comments 19(f)(2)(i)-1 and -2).

However, a consumer has the right to inspect the Closing Disclosure during the business day before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(i)). If a consumer asks to inspect the Closing Disclosure the business day before consummation, the Closing Disclosure presented to the consumer must reflect any adjustments to the costs or terms that are known to the creditor at the time the consumer inspects it (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(i)).

A creditor may satisfy the obligation to provide the Closing Disclosure by ensuring that a settlement agent that provides a consumer with the disclosures complies with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(f) (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(v); Comment 19(f)(2)(i)-2.

Changes due to events occurring after consummation. Creditors must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure if an event in connection with the settlement occurs during the 30-calendar-day period after consummation that causes the Closing Disclosure to become inaccurate and results in a change to an amount paid by the consumer from what was previously disclosed (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii); Comment 19(f)(2)(iii)-1).

NOTE: A creditor is not required to provide a corrected Closing Disclosure under this provision if the only changes that would be required to be disclosed in the corrected Closing Disclosure are changes to per-diem interest and any disclosures affected by the change in per-diem interest, even if the amount of per-diem interest actually paid by the consumer differs from the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(g)(2) and (o). Nonetheless, if a creditor is providing a corrected Closing Disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii) for reasons other than changes in per-diem interest and the per-diem interest has changed as well, the creditor must disclose in the corrected Closing Disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii) the correct amount of the per-diem interest and provide the corrected Closing Disclosure for any disclosures that are affected by the change in per-diem interest (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii); Comment 19(f)(2)(iii)-2).

When a post-consummation event requires a corrected Closing Disclosure, the creditor must deliver or place in the mail a corrected Closing Disclosure not later than 30 calendar days after receiving information sufficient to establish that such an event has occurred (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii); Comment 19(f)(2)(iii)-1). In transactions involving a seller, the settlement agent must provide the seller with a corrected Closing Disclosure if an event occurs within 30 days of consummation that makes the disclosures inaccurate as they relate to the amount actually paid by the seller. The settlement agent must deliver or mail a corrected Closing Disclosure no later than 30 days from receiving information that establishes the Closing Disclosure is inaccurate and results in a change to an amount actually paid by the seller from what was previously disclosed (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(4)(ii)).

Changes due to clerical errors. The creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure to correct non-numerical clerical errors no later than 60 calendar days after consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iv)). An error is clerical if it does not affect a numerical disclosure and does not affect the timing, delivery, or other requirements imposed by 12 CFR 1026.19(e) or (f) (Comment 19(f)(2)(iv)-1).

Refunds related to the good faith analysis. The creditor can cure a tolerance violation of 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) or (ii) by providing a refund to the consumer and delivering or placing in the mail a corrected Closing Disclosure that reflects the refund no later than 60 calendar days after consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(v)).

C. Special Information Booklet – 12 CFR 1026.19(g)

Creditors generally must provide a copy of the special information booklet, otherwise known as the home buying information booklet, to consumers who apply for a consumer credit transaction secured by real property or a cooperative unit. For loans using the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure forms, creditors provide the "Your Home Loan Toolkit," designed by the CFPB to replace the "Shopping for Your Home Loan: Settlement Cost Booklet" as the special information booklet. This requirement is not limited to closed-end transactions and applies to most consumer credit transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit, except in a few circumstances (see below). The special information booklet is required pursuant to Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)) as well as Section 5 of RESPA (12 U.S.C. 2604) and 12 CFR 1024.6 of Regulation X. The booklet is published by the CFPB to help consumers applying for federally related mortgage loans understand the nature and cost of real estate settlement services.

- If the consumer is applying for a HELOC subject to 12 CFR 1026.40, the creditor (or mortgage broker) can provide a copy of the brochure titled "What You Should Know About Home Equity Lines of Credit" instead of the special information booklet (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(ii)).

- The creditor need not provide the special information booklet if the consumer is applying for a real property-secured consumer credit transaction that does not have the purpose of purchasing a one-to-four family residential property, such as a refinancing, a closed-end loan secured by a subordinate lien, or a reverse mortgage (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(iii)).

Creditors must deliver or place in the mail the special information booklet not later than three business days after receiving the consumer's loan application (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(i)).

If the creditor denies the consumer's application or if the consumer withdraws the application before the end of the three-business-day period, the creditor need not provide the special information booklet (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(i); Comment 19(g)(1)(i)-3).

When two or more persons apply together for a loan, the creditor may provide a copy of the special information booklet to just one of them (Comment 19(g)(1)-2).

If the consumer uses a mortgage broker, the mortgage broker must provide the special information booklet, and the creditor need not do so (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(i)).

Creditors generally are required to use the booklets designed by the CFPB and may make only limited changes to the special information booklet (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(2)). The Bureau may issue revised or alternative versions of the special information booklet from time to time in the future. Creditors should monitor the Federal Register for notice of revisions (Comment 19(g)(1)-1).

IV. Construction Loan Disclosures

Creditors are required to comply with the TILA/RESPA Integrated Disclosure requirements for disclosure of construction loans and construction-permanent loans that are closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1) and .19(f)(1)). These transactions have two distinct phases. First, the construction phase usually involves several disbursements of funds at times and in amounts that are unknown at the beginning of that period, with the consumer generally paying only accrued interest until construction is completed. Unless the obligation is paid when construction is completed (i.e., a construction-only loan), it is a construction-permanent loan and the construction period converts to the second phase, the permanent financing in which the loan amount is amortized just as in a standard mortgage transaction. The longstanding provisions of 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(ii) apply to construction and construction-permanent loans, as well as the option to use Appendix D. Appendix D provides an optional method of calculating the annual percentage rate and other disclosures for construction loans in disclosing construction financing (Comment 17(c)(6)-2). While the 2017 TRID amendments provide additional guidance on how a creditor may use Appendix D to disclose construction loans and construction-permanent loans, the 2017 TRID amendments do not require the use of Appendix D or its corresponding official commentary when disclosing the terms of construction loans or construction-permanent loans. Specific regulatory provisions and official commentary applicable to construction loan disclosures are discussed below.

A. Disclosure Methods for Construction Loans – 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)

Regulation Z provides a flexible rule for disclosure of construction loans and construction-permanent loans (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)). First, it provides that a series of advances under an agreement to extend credit up to a certain amount may be considered as one transaction (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(i)).

This means that for construction-only loans, a creditor may treat all of the advances as a single transaction or disclose each advance as a separate transaction. If these advances are treated as one transaction and the timing and amounts of advances are unknown, creditors must make disclosures based on estimates, based on the best information reasonably available at the time the disclosure is provided to the consumer, as provided in 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2).

Second, when a multiple-advance loan to finance the construction of a dwelling may be permanently financed by the same creditor, the construction phase and the permanent phase may be treated as either one or more than one transaction (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(ii)).

In addition to disclosure options described above for multiple advance loans, for construction-permanent loans where the permanent phase may be financed by the same creditor, the creditor also has the option to provide either one combined disclosure for both the construction financing and the permanent financing, or separate disclosures for the two phases (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(ii); Comment 17(c)(6)-2).

Thus, in a transaction that finances the construction of a dwelling that may be permanently financed by the same creditor, the construction financing phase and the permanent financing phases may be disclosed in one of three ways listed below.

- As a single transaction, with one disclosure combining both phases.
- As two separate transactions, with one disclosure for each phase.
- As more than two transactions, with one disclosure for each advance and one for the permanent financing phase (Comment 17(c)(6)-3).

B. Delivery of Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)

Regulation Z clarifies the timing requirements for providing the Loan Estimate for construction and construction-permanent loans based on when the creditor receives an application (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)). Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-5 provides examples of different scenarios, illustrating how the timing requirements would apply. For example, where a creditor receives an application for both the construction and permanent phases of a transaction, the creditor must deliver or place in the mail either a single Loan Estimate (if the phases are treated as one transaction) or two or more Loan Estimates (if the phases are treated separately) within three business days of receiving the application and not later than seven business days before consummation.

C. Completion of Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure

Generally, a financial institution will make disclosures for construction loans in the same manner as it discloses terms for non-construction loans, following the guidance of applicable regulations (See 12 CFR 1026.37 and 1026.38). The financial institution may, at its option, use Appendix D to Regulation Z to estimate and disclose the terms of multiple-advance construction and construction-permanent loans (12 CFR Part 1026, App. D). This appendix reflects the approach taken in 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(ii), which permits creditors to provide separate or combined disclosures for the construction period and for the permanent financing, as discussed above.

The financial institution may, at its option, use Appendix D to the regulation to assist in estimating and disclosing the terms of multiple-advance construction loans when the amounts or timing of advances is unknown at consummation of the transaction. Appendix D may also be used in multiple-advance transactions other than construction loans, when the amounts or timing of advances are unknown at consummation (Comment App. D-1).

Appendix D and its associated commentary provide additional guidance and clarification on how to complete various portions of the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure. Additional guidance and examples are intended to inform the accurate disclosure of information related to Loan Term (Comment App. D. 7.i), Loan Product (Comment App. D 7.ii), Interest Rate (Comment App. D. 7.iii), Increases in Periodic Payment (Comment App. D. 7.iv), Projected Payments Table (Comment App. D. 7.v), Disclosure of Construction Costs (Comment App. D. 7.vi), and Inspection and Handling Fees (Comment App. D. 7.vii).

V. Loans Receiving Non-TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures, Generally

Creditors making closed-end loans to consumers not subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures Rule (i.e., other than loans where 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) require the Loan Estimate and the Closing Disclosure) must provide the consumer with the Truth in Lending (TIL) disclosure, as outlined in 12 CFR 1026.17 and 1026.18. Creditors engaged in specified housing assistance programs for low- and moderate-income consumers would also provide their consumers with the TIL Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.3(h)).

TIL Disclosure. The TIL disclosure provided for these loans includes a payment schedule (12 CFR 1026.18(g)). The disclosed payment schedule must reflect all components of the finance charge. It includes all payments scheduled to repay loan principal, interest on the loan, and any other finance charge payable by the consumer after consummation of the transaction.

However, any finance charge paid separately before or at consummation (e.g., odd days' interest) is not part of the payment schedule. It is a prepaid finance charge that must be reflected as a reduction in the value of the amount financed.

At the creditor's option, the payment schedule may include amounts beyond the amount financed and finance charge (e.g., certain insurance premiums or real estate escrow amounts such as taxes added to payments). However, when calculating the APR, the creditor must disregard such amounts.

If the obligation is a renewable balloon payment instrument that unconditionally obligates the financial institution to renew the short-term loan at the consumer's option or to renew the loan subject to conditions within the consumer's control, the payment schedule must be disclosed using the longer term of the renewal period or periods. The long-term loan must be disclosed with a variable-rate feature.

If there are no renewal conditions or if the financial institution guarantees to renew the obligation in a refinancing, the payment schedule must be disclosed using the shorter balloon payment term. The short-term loan must be disclosed as a fixed-rate loan, unless it contains a variable-rate feature during the initial loan term.

VI. Variable and Adjustable Rate Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.18(f), 1026.20(c) and (d)

A. Closed-end transactions generally

If the terms of the legal obligation allow the financial institution, after consummation of the transaction, to increase the APR, the financial institution must furnish the consumer with certain information on variable rates. In addition, variable-rate disclosures are not applicable to rate increases resulting from delinquency, default, assumption, acceleration, or transfer of the collateral.

Some of the more important transaction-specific variable-rate disclosure requirements follow.

- Disclosures for variable-rate loans must be given for the full term of the transaction and must be based on the terms in effect at the time of consummation.

- If the variable-rate transaction includes either a seller buy-down that is reflected in a contract or a consumer buy-down, the disclosed APR should be a composite rate based on the lower rate for the buy-down period and the rate that is the basis for the variable-rate feature for the remainder of the term.

- If the initial rate is not determined by the index or formula used to make later interest rate adjustments, as in a discounted variable-rate transaction, the disclosed APR must reflect a composite rate based on the initial rate for as long as it is applied and, for the remainder of the term, the rate that would have been applied using the index or formula at the time of consummation (i.e., the fully indexed rate).
  - If a loan contains a rate or payment cap that would prevent the initial rate or payment, at the time of the adjustment, from changing to the fully indexed rate, the effect of that rate or payment cap needs to be reflected in the disclosures.
  - The index at consummation need not be used if the contract provides a delay in the implementation of changes in an index value (e.g., the contract indicates that future rate changes are based on the index value in effect for some specified period, such as 45 days before the change date). Instead, the financial institution may use any rate from the date of consummation back to the beginning of the specified period (e.g., during the previous 45-day period).

- If the initial interest rate is set according to the index or formula used for later adjustments but is set at a value as of a date before consummation, disclosures should be based on the initial interest rate, even though the index may have changed by the consummation date.

B. Adjustable Rate Mortgage Disclosures

1. Disclosure of Post-Consummation Events – Initial Rate Change for Adjustable Rate Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.20(d)

Creditors, assignees, or servicers[29] (referred to collectively as creditors) of adjustable rate mortgages, or ARMs, secured by the consumer's principal dwelling and with terms of more than one year are generally required to provide consumers with certain information pertaining to the ARM's initial rate change.[30] This information must be provided in a disclosure that is separate from all other documents, and the disclosure must be provided between 210 and 240 days before the first payment at the adjusted rate is due. If the first payment at a new rate is [29] Creditors, assignees, and servicers are all subject to the requirements of this 12 CFR 1026.20(d). Creditors, assignees, and servicers may decide among themselves which of them will provide the required disclosures. However, establishing a business relationship where one party agrees to provide disclosures on behalf of the other parties does not absolve all other parties from their legal obligations.

[30] Exemptions to disclosure requirements are covered in the section titled "Exemptions to the Adjustable Rate Mortgage Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii) and (d)(1)(ii)" below.

due within the first 210 days after consummation, the creditor must provide the rate change disclosure at consummation.

Disclosures required under this section must provide consumers with information related to the timing and nature of the rate change. If the new rate pursuant to the change disclosed is not known and the creditor provides an estimate, the rate must be identified as an estimate. If the creditor is using an estimate, it must be based on the index within 15 business days prior to the date of the disclosure. The calculation is made using the index reported in the source of information that the creditor uses in the explanation of how the interest rate is determined.

Disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.20(d) must also include, among others:

- The date of the disclosure.
- A statement explaining that the time period that the current rate has been in effect is ending, that the current rate is expiring, and that a change in the rate may result in a change in the required payment; providing the effective date of the change and a schedule of any future changes; and describing any other changes to the loan terms, features, or options taking effect on the same date (including expiration of interest-only or payment-option features).
- A table containing the current and new interest rates, the current and new payments, including the date the new payment is due, and for interest-only or negative amortization loans, the amount of the current and new payment allocated to principal, interest, and escrow (if applicable).

  NOTE: The new payment allocation disclosed is the expected payment allocation for the first payment for which the new interest rate will apply.
- An explanation of how the interest rate is determined, including (among other things) an explanation of the index or formula used to determine the new rate and the margin.
- Any limitations on the interest rate or payment increase for each scheduled increase and over the life of the loan. Creditors must also include a statement regarding the extent to which such limitations result in foregone interest rate increases and the earliest date such foregone interest rate increases may apply to future interest rate adjustments.
- An explanation of how the new payment is determined, including an explanation of the index or formula used to determine the new rate, including the margin, the expected loan balance on the date of the rate adjustment, and the remaining loan term or any changes to the term caused by the rate change.
- If the creditor is using an estimated rate or payment, a statement that the actual new interest rate and new payment will be provided to the consumer between two and four months prior to the first payment at the new rate.
- For negative amortization loans, creditors must provide a statement indicating that the new payment will not be allocated to pay loan principal and will not reduce the balance of the loan; instead, the payment will only apply to part of the interest, thereby increasing the amount of principal.

- A statement indicating the circumstances under which any prepayment penalty may be imposed, the time period during which it may be imposed, and a statement that the consumer may contact the servicer for additional information, including the maximum amount of the penalty that may be charged to the consumer.
- The telephone number of the creditor, assignee, or servicer for use if the consumer anticipates that he or she may not be able to make the new payments.
- A statement providing specified alternatives (which include refinancing, selling the property, loan modification, and forbearance) available if the consumer anticipates not being able to make the new payment.
- A website address for either the CFPB's or the Department of Housing and Urban Development's (HUD) list of homeownership counselors and counseling organizations, the HUD toll-free telephone number to access the HUD list of homeownership counselors and counseling organizations, and the CFPB's website address for state housing finance authorities contact information.
- For more information pertaining to the required format of the disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.20(d), please see 12 CFR 1026.20(d)(3) and the model and sample Forms H-4(D)(3) and (4) in Appendix H.

2. Disclosure of Post-Consummation Events – Rate Adjustments Resulting in Payment Changes – 12 CFR 1026.20(c)

Creditors, assignees, or servicers[31] (referred to collectively as creditors) of ARMs secured by a consumer's principal dwelling with a term greater than one year are generally required to provide consumers with disclosures prior to the adjustment of the interest rate on the mortgage,[32] if the interest rate change will result in a payment change as follows:

- For ARMs where the payment changes along with a rate change, disclosures must be provided to consumers between 60 and 120 days before the first payment at the new amount is due.
- For ARMs where the payment changes in connection with a uniformly scheduled interest rate adjustment occurring every 60 days (or more frequently), the disclosures must be provided between 25 and 120 days before the first payment at the new amount is due.

[31] Creditors, assignees, and servicers are all subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.20(c). Creditors, assignees, and servicers may decide among themselves which of them will provide the required disclosures. However, establishing a business relationship where one party agrees to provide disclosures on behalf of the other parties does not absolve all other parties from their legal obligations.

[32] Exemptions to disclosure requirements are covered in the section titled "Exemptions to the Adjustable Rate Mortgage Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii) and (d)(1)(ii)" below.

- For ARMs originated prior to January 10, 2015, in which the contract requires the adjusted interest and payment to be calculated based on an index that is available on a date less than 45 days prior to the adjustment date, disclosures must be provided between 25 and 120 days before the first payment at the new amount is required.

- For ARMs where the first adjustment occurs within 60 days of consummation and the new interest rate disclosed at the time was an estimate, the disclosures must be provided as soon as practicable, but no less than 25 days before the first payment at the new amount is due.

Disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.20(c) must contain specific information, which includes, among others:

- A statement explaining that the time period during which the consumer's current rate has been in effect is ending and that the rate and payment will change; when the interest rate will change; dates when additional interest rate adjustments are scheduled to occur; and any other change in loan terms or features that take effect on the same date that the interest rate and payment change, such as an expiration of interest-only treatment or payment-option feature;

- A table explaining the current and new interest rates; the current and new payments, including the date the new payment is due; and for interest-only or negative amortizing loans, the amount of the current and new payment allocated to principal, interest, and amounts for escrow (if applicable);

- An explanation of how the new interest rate is determined, including (among other things) the index or formula used to determine the new rate and the margin, and any application of previously foregone interest rate increases from past adjustments;

- Any limitations on the interest rate and payment increase for each scheduled increase for the duration of the loan. Creditors must also include a statement regarding the extent to which such limitations result in foregone interest rate increases and the earliest date such foregone interest rate increases may apply to future interest rate adjustments;

- An explanation of how the new payment is determined, including an explanation of the index or formula used to determine the new rate, including the margin, the expected loan balance on the date of the rate adjustment, and the remaining loan term or any changes to the term caused by the rate change;

- For negative amortization loans, creditors must provide a statement indicating that the new payment will not reduce the balance of the loan, rather, the payment will only apply to part of the interest, thereby increasing the amount of principal; and

- A statement indicating the circumstances under which any prepayment penalty may be imposed, the time period during which it may be imposed, and a statement that the consumer may contact the servicer for additional information, including the maximum amount of the penalty that may be charged to the consumer.

For more information pertaining to the required format of the disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.20(c), please see 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(3) and the model and sample Forms H-4(D)(1) and (2) in Appendix H.

3. Exemptions to the Adjustable Rate Mortgage Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii) and (d)(1)(ii)

Disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.20(c) and (d) are not required for ARMs with a term of one year or less. Likewise, disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.20(c) are not required if the first interest rate and payment adjustment occurs within the first 210 days and the new rate disclosed at consummation pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.20(d) was not an estimate. ARM disclosures for payment changes are exempt under 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii)(C) where the servicer is a debt collector under the FDCPA and a consumer has exercised the right under FDCPA Section 805(c) to prohibit debt collector communications regarding the debt.

VII. Refinancings – 12 CFR 1026.20(a)

When an obligation is satisfied and replaced by a new obligation to the original financial institution (or a holder or servicer of the original obligation) and is undertaken by the same consumer, it must be treated as a refinancing for which a complete set of new disclosures must be furnished. A refinancing may involve the consolidation of several existing obligations, disbursement of new money to the consumer, or the rescheduling of payments under an existing obligation. In any form, the new obligation must completely replace the earlier one to be considered a refinancing under the regulation. The finance charge on the new disclosure must include any unearned portion of the old finance charge that is not credited to the existing obligation (12 CFR 1026.20(a)).

The following transactions are not considered refinancings even if the existing obligation is satisfied and replaced by a new obligation undertaken by the same consumer:

- A renewal of an obligation with a single payment of principal and interest or with periodic interest payments and a final payment of principal with no change in the original terms.
- An APR reduction with a corresponding change in the payment schedule.
- An agreement involving a court proceeding.
- Changes in credit terms arising from the consumer's default or delinquency.
- The renewal of optional insurance purchased by the consumer and added to an existing transaction, if required disclosures were provided for the initial purchase of the insurance.

However, even if it is not accomplished by the cancellation of the old obligation and substitution of a new one, a new transaction subject to new disclosures results if the financial institution:

- Increases the rate based on a variable-rate feature that was not previously disclosed; or
- Adds a variable-rate feature to the obligation.

If, at the time a loan is renewed, the rate is increased, the increase is not considered a variable-rate feature. It is the cost of renewal, similar to a flat fee, as long as the new rate remains fixed during the remaining life of the loan. If the original debt is not canceled in connection with such a renewal, the regulation does not require new disclosures. Also, changing the index of a variable-rate transaction to a comparable index is not considered adding a variable-rate feature to the obligation.

VIII. Escrow Cancellation Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.20(e)

Escrow Closing Notice. Before cancelling an escrow account, an Escrow Closing Notice must be provided to any consumers for whom an escrow account was established in connection with a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a first lien on real property or a dwelling, except for reverse mortgages (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(1)). For this purpose, the term escrow account has the same meaning given to it as under Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17(b), and the term servicer has the same meaning given to it as under Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.2(b). There are two exceptions to the requirement to provide the notice:

- Creditors and servicers are not required to provide the notice if the escrow account that is being canceled was established solely in connection with the consumer's delinquency or default on the underlying debt obligation (Comment 20(e)(1)-2).
- Creditors and servicers are not required to provide the notice when the underlying debt obligation for which an escrow account was established is terminated, including by repayment, refinancing, rescission, and foreclosure (Comment 20(e)(1)-3).

For loans subject to the Escrow Closing Notice requirement, if the creditor or servicer cancels the escrow account at the consumer's request, the creditor or servicer must ensure that the consumers receive the notice no later than three business days (i.e., all calendar days except Sundays and the legal public holidays (See 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6), 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A) and (f)(1)(iii)) before the consumer's escrow account is canceled (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(i)). If the creditor or servicer cancels the escrow account and the cancellation is not at the consumer's request, the creditor or servicer must ensure that the consumer receives the notice no later than 30 business days before the closure of the consumer's escrow account (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(ii). If the Escrow Closing Notice is not provided to the consumer in person, the consumer is considered to have received the notice three business days after it is delivered or placed in the mail (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(iii)).

The creditor or servicer must disclose (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(1)-(2)):

- The date on which the account will be closed;
- That an escrow account may also be called an impound or trust account;
- The reason that the escrow account will be closed;
- That without an escrow account, the consumer must pay all property costs, such as taxes and homeowner's insurance, directly, possibly in one or two large payments a year;
- A table, titled "Cost to you," that contains an itemization of the amount of any fee the creditor or servicer imposes on the consumer in connection with the closure of the consumer's escrow account, labeled "Escrow Closing Fee," and a statement that the fee is for closing the escrow account;
- Under the reference "In the future":

- o The consequences if the consumer fails to pay property costs, including the actions that a state or local government may take if property taxes are not paid and the actions the creditor or servicer may take if the consumer does not pay some or all property costs, such as adding amounts to the loan balance, adding an escrow account to the loan, or purchasing a property insurance policy on the consumer's behalf that may be more expensive and provide fewer benefits than a policy that the consumer could obtain directly;
- o A telephone number that the consumer can use to request additional information about the cancellation of the escrow account;
- o Whether the creditor or servicer offers the option of keeping the escrow account open and, as applicable, a telephone number the consumer can use to request that the account be kept open; and
- o Whether there is a cutoff date by which the consumer can request that the account be kept open.

The creditor or servicer may also, at its option, disclose (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(3)):

- The creditor or servicer's name or logo;
- The consumer's name, phone number, mailing address, and property address;
- The issue date of the notice;
- The loan number; or
- The consumer's account number.

In addition, the disclosures must:

- Contain a required heading that is more conspicuous than and precedes the required disclosures discussed above (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4)).
- Be clear and conspicuous. This standard generally requires that the disclosures in the Escrow Closing Notice be in a reasonably understandable form and readily noticeable to the consumer (Comment 20(e)(2)-1).
- Be written in 10-point font, at a minimum (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4)).
- Be grouped together on the front side of a one-page document. The disclosures must be separate from all other materials, with the headings, content, order, and format substantially similar to Model Form H-29 in Appendix H to Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4)). This requirement, however, does not preclude creditors and servicers from modifying the disclosures to accommodate particular consumer circumstances or transactions not addressed by the form or from adjusting the statement required by 12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(A), concerning consequences if the consumer fails to pay property costs, to the circumstances of the particular consumer (Comment 20(e)(4)-3).

IX. Successors in Interest – 12 CFR 1026.20(f)

If, upon confirmation, a servicer provides a confirmed successor in interest who is not liable on the mortgage loan obligation with an optional notice and acknowledgment form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1), the servicer is not required to provide to the confirmed successor in interest any written disclosure required by 12 CFR 1026.20(c) (rate adjustments with corresponding change in payment), 12 CFR 1026.20(d) (initial rate adjustment), and 12 CFR 1026.20(e) (escrow account cancellation notice), unless and until the confirmed successor in interest either assumes the mortgage loan obligation under state law or has provided the servicer an executed acknowledgement form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1)(iv), and the confirmed successor in interest has not revoked such acknowledgement form.

X. Treatment of Credit Balances – 12 CFR 1026.21

When a credit balance in excess of $1 is created in connection with a transaction (through transmittal of funds to a creditor in excess of the total balance due on an account, through rebates of unearned finance charges or insurance premiums, or through amounts otherwise owed to or held for the benefit of a consumer), the creditor is required to:

- Credit the amount of the credit balance to the consumer's account;
- Refund any part of the remaining credit balance, upon the written request of the consumer; and
- Make a good faith effort to refund to the consumer by cash, check, or money order, or credit to a deposit account of the consumer, any part of the credit balance remaining in the account for more than six months, except that no further action is required if the consumer's current location is not known to the creditor and cannot be traced through the consumer's last known address or telephone number.

XI. Closed-End Advertising – 12 CFR 1026.24

If an advertisement for credit states specific credit terms, it must state only those terms that actually are or will be arranged or offered by the creditor.

Disclosures required by this section must be made "clearly and conspicuously." To meet this standard in general, credit terms need not be printed in a certain type size nor appear in any particular place in the advertisement. For advertisements for credit secured by a dwelling, a clear and conspicuous disclosure means that the required information is disclosed with equal prominence and in close proximity to the advertised rates or payments triggering the required disclosures.

If an advertisement states a rate of finance charge, it must state the rate as an "annual percentage rate," using that term. If the APR may be increased after consummation, the advertisement must state that fact.

If an advertisement is for credit not secured by a dwelling, the advertisement must not state any other rate, except that a simple annual rate or periodic rate that is applied to an unpaid balance may be stated in conjunction with, but not more conspicuously than, the APR.

If an advertisement is for credit secured by a dwelling, the advertisement must not state any other rate, except that a simple annual rate that is applied to an unpaid balance may be stated in conjunction with, but not more conspicuously than, the APR. That is, an advertisement for credit secured by a dwelling may not state a periodic rate, other than a simple annual rate, that is applied to an unpaid balance.

"Triggering terms" – The following are triggering terms that require additional disclosures:

- The amount or percentage of any down payment,
- The number of payments or period of repayment,
- The amount of any payment, and
- The amount of any finance charge.

An advertisement stating a triggering term must also state the following terms as applicable:

- The amount or percentage of any down payment;
- The terms of repayment, which reflect the repayment obligations over the full term of the loan, including any balloon payment; and
- The "annual percentage rate," using that term, and, if the rate may be increased after consummation, that fact.

For any advertisement secured by a dwelling, other than television or radio advertisements, that states a simple annual rate of interest, and more than one simple annual rate of interest will apply over the term of the advertised loan, the advertisement must state in a clear and conspicuous manner:

- Each simple rate of interest that will apply. In variable-rate transactions, a rate determined by adding an index and margin must be disclosed based on a reasonably current index and margin.
- The period of time during which each simple annual rate of interest will apply.
- The APR for the loan.

The regulation prohibits the following seven deceptive or misleading acts or practices in advertisements for closed-end mortgage loans:

- Stating that rates or payments for loans are "fixed" when those rates or payments can vary without adequately disclosing that the interest rate or payment amounts are "fixed" only for a limited period of time, rather than for the full term of the loan;
- Making comparisons between actual or hypothetical credit payments or rates and any payment or rate available under the advertised product that are not available for the full term of the loan, with certain exceptions for advertisements for variable-rate products;
- Characterizing the products offered as "government loan programs," "government-supported loans," or otherwise endorsed or sponsored by a federal or state government entity even though the advertised products are not government-supported or sponsored loans;
- Displaying the name of the consumer's current mortgage lender, unless the advertisement also prominently discloses that the advertisement is from a mortgage lender not affiliated with the consumer's current lender;
- Making claims of debt elimination if the product advertised would merely replace one debt obligation with another;
- Creating a false impression that the mortgage broker or lender is a "counselor" for the consumer; and
- In foreign-language advertisements, providing certain information, such as a low introductory "teaser" rate, in a foreign language, while providing required disclosures only in English.

Subpart D – Miscellaneous

Subpart D contains rules on oral disclosures 12 CFR 1026.26, disclosures in languages other than English 12 CFR 1026.27, record retention 12 CFR 1026.25, effect on state laws 12 CFR 1026.28, state exemptions 12 CFR 1026.29, and rate limitations (12 CFR 1026.30).

Record Retention – 12 CFR 1026.25

As a general rule, the creditor must retain evidence of compliance with Regulation Z (other than advertising requirements under 12 CFR 1026.16 and 1026.24, and other than certain requirements for mortgage loans) for two years after the date disclosures are required to be made or action is required to be taken (12 CFR 1026.25(a)). This includes, for example, evidence that the creditor properly handled adverse credit reports in connection with amounts subject to a billing dispute under 12 CFR 1026.13, and properly handled the refunding of credit balances under 12 CFR 1026.11 and 1026.21. The creditor may retain the evidence by any method that reproduces records accurately (including computer programs) (Comment 25(a)-2). A creditor must permit the enforcing agency to inspect its relevant records for compliance (12 CFR 1026.25(b)).

The record retention period for mortgage loans is generally three years (12 CFR 1026.25(c)). A creditor must retain evidence of compliance with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) for three years after the later of the date of consummation, the date disclosures are required to be made, or the date the action is required to be taken (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(1)(i)).

For Closing Disclosures, the record retention period is five years. The creditor must retain completed closing disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i) or (f)(4)(i), and all documents related to such disclosures, for five years after consummation (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(1)(ii)(A)). If a creditor sells, transfers, or otherwise disposes of its interest in a mortgage loan subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(f) and does not service the mortgage loan, the creditor must provide a copy of the closing disclosures to the owner or servicer of the mortgage, and the new owner or servicer must retain such disclosures for the remainder of the five-year period.

For loan originator compensation, creditors and loan originator organizations must retain records-related requirements for mortgage loan originator compensation and the compensation agreement that governs those payments for three years after the date of payment (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(2)).

A creditor must retain evidence to show compliance with the minimum standards for loans secured by a dwelling in 12 CFR 1026.43 for three years after consummation of a transaction covered by that section (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(3)).

Relationship to State Law – TILA 111 and 12 CFR 1026.28, 1026.29

State laws providing rights, responsibilities, or procedures for consumers or financial institutions for consumer credit contracts may be:

- Preempted by federal law,
- Not preempted by federal law, or
- Substituted in lieu of TILA and Regulation Z requirements.

State law provisions are preempted to the extent that they contradict the requirements in the following chapters of TILA and the implementing sections of Regulation Z:

- Chapter 1, General Provisions, which contains definitions and acceptable methods for determining finance charges and annual percentage rates.
- Chapter 2, Credit Transactions, which contains disclosure requirements, rescission rights, and certain credit card provisions.

- Chapter 3, Credit Advertising, which contains consumer credit advertising rules and APR oral disclosure requirements.

For example, a state law would be preempted if it required a financial institution to use the terms "nominal annual interest rate" in lieu of "annual percentage rate."

Conversely, state law provisions are generally not preempted under federal law if they call for, without contradicting Chapters 1, 2, or 3 of TILA or the implementing sections of Regulation Z, either of the following:

- Disclosure of information not otherwise required. A state law that requires disclosure of the minimum periodic payment for open-end credit, for example, would not be preempted because it does not contradict federal law.
- Disclosures more detailed than those required. A state law that requires itemization of the amount financed, for example, would not be preempted, unless it contradicts federal law by requiring the itemization to appear with the disclosure of the amount financed in the segregated closed-end credit disclosures.

The relationship between state law and Chapter 4 of TILA (Credit Billing) involves two parts. The first part is concerned with Sections 161 (correction of billing errors) and 162 (regulation of credit reports) of the TILA; the second part addresses the remaining sections of Chapter 4.

State law provisions are preempted if they differ from the rights, responsibilities, or procedures contained in Sections 161 or 162. An exception is made, however, for state law that allows a consumer to inquire about an account and requires the bank to respond to such inquiry beyond the time limits provided by federal law. Such a state law would not be preempted for the extra time period.

State law provisions are preempted if they result in violations of Sections 163 through 171 of Chapter 4. For example, a state law that allows the card issuer to offset the consumer's credit-card indebtedness against funds held by the card issuer would be preempted, since it would violate (12 CFR 1026.12(d)). Conversely, a state law that requires periodic statements to be sent more than 14 days before the end of a free-ride period would not be preempted, since no violation of federal law is involved.

A financial institution, state, or other interested party may ask the CFPB to determine whether state law contradicts Chapters 1 through 3 of TILA or Regulation Z. The party also may ask if the state law is different from, or would result in violations of, Chapter 4 of TILA and the implementing provisions of Regulation Z. If the Bureau determines that a disclosure required by state law (other than a requirement relating to the finance charge, APR, or the disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.32 is substantially the same in meaning as a disclosure required under TILA or Regulation Z, generally creditors in that state may make the state disclosure in lieu of the federal disclosure.

Subpart E – Special Rules for Certain Home Mortgage Transactions

Subpart E contains special rules for mortgage transactions. 12 CFR 1026.32 requires certain disclosures and provides limitations for closed-end credit transactions and open-end credit plans that have rates or fees above specified amounts or certain prepayment penalties. 12 CFR 1026.33 requires special disclosures, including the total annual loan cost rate, for reverse mortgage transactions. 12 CFR 1026.34 prohibits specific acts and practices in connection with high-cost mortgages, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.32(a). 12 CFR 1026.35 provides requirements for higher-priced mortgage loans. 12 CFR 1026.36 prohibits specific acts and practices in connection with an extension of credit secured by a dwelling. 12 CFR 1026.37 and 1026.38 set forth disclosure requirements for certain closed-end transactions secured by real property or cooperative unit, as required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f).

General Rules – 12 CFR 1026.31

The requirements and limitations of this subpart are in addition to, and not in lieu of, those contained in other subparts of Regulation Z. The disclosures for high-cost, reverse mortgage, and higher-priced mortgage transactions must be made clearly and conspicuously in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep and in compliance with specific timing requirements.

Requirements for High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.32

The requirements of this section generally apply to a high-cost mortgage, which is a consumer credit transaction secured by the consumer's principal dwelling (subject to the exemptions discussed below) that meets any one of the following three coverage tests.

- The APR will exceed the average prime offer rate (APOR), as defined in 12 CFR 1026.35(a)(2), applicable for a comparable transaction as of the date the interest rate is set by:
    - More than 6.5 percentage points for first-lien transactions (other than as described below);
    - More than 8.5 percentage points for first-lien transactions where the dwelling is personal property and the loan amount is less than $50,000; or
    - More than 8.5 percentage points for subordinate-lien transactions.
- The total points and fees (see definition below) for the transaction will exceed:
    - For transactions with a loan amount of $20,000 or more, 5 percent of the total loan amount, with the loan amount to be adjusted annually on January 1 by the annual percentage change in the Consumer Price Index reported on the preceding June 1; or
    - For transactions with a loan amount of less than $20,000, the lesser of 8 percent of the total transaction amount or $1,000, with the loan amount to be adjusted annually on January 1 by the annual percentage change in the Consumer Price Index reported on the preceding June 1.

The adjusted loan amounts will be reflected in official interpretations of 12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)(ii). The official interpretation of 12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)(ii) also contains a historical list of dollar amount adjustments for transactions originated prior to January 10, 2014.

NOTE: The "total loan amount" (using the face amount of the note) for closed-end credit is calculated by taking the amount financed (See 12 CFR 1026.18(b)) and deducting any cost listed in 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)(iii), (iv), or (vi) that is both included in points and fees and financed by the creditor. The "total loan amount" for open-end credit is the credit plan limit when the account is opened.

- The terms of the loan contract or open-end credit agreement permit the creditor to charge a prepayment penalty (see definition below) more than 36 months after consummation or account opening, or prepayment penalties that exceed more than 2 percent of the amount prepaid (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)(iii)).

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.32(d)(6) prohibits prepayment penalties for high-cost mortgages. However, if a mortgage loan has a prepayment penalty that may be imposed more than 36 months after consummation or account opening or that is greater than 2 percent of the amount prepaid, the loan is a high-cost mortgage regardless of interest rate or fees. Therefore, the prepayment penalty coverage test above effectively bans transactions of the types subject to HOEPA coverage that permit creditors to charge prepayment penalties that exceed the prescribed limits.

Exemptions from HOEPA Coverage – 12 CFR 1026.32(a)(2)

- Reverse mortgage transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.33;
- A transaction that finances the initial construction of a dwelling;
- A transaction originated by a Housing Finance Agency, where the Housing Finance Agency is the creditor for the transaction; or
- A transaction originated pursuant to the U.S. Department of Agriculture's (USDA) Rural Development Section 502 Direct Loan Program.

Determination of APR for High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.32(a)(3)

The APR used to determine whether a mortgage is a high-cost mortgage is calculated differently from the APR that is used on TILA disclosures. Specifically, the APR for HOEPA coverage is based on the following:

- If the APR will not vary during the length of the loan or credit plan (i.e., for fixed-rate transactions), the interest rate in effect as of the date the interest rate for the transaction is set (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(3)(i));

- If the interest rate may vary during the term of the loan or credit plan in accordance with an index, the interest rate that results from adding the maximum margin permitted at any time during the term of the loan or credit plan to the index rate in effect as of the date the interest rate for the transaction is set, or to the introductory interest rate, whichever is greater (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(3)(ii)); or
- If the interest rate may or will vary during the term of the loan or credit plan other than as described above (i.e., as in a step-rate transaction), the maximum interest rate that may be imposed during the life of the loan or credit plan (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(3)(iii)).

Points and Fees for High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.32(b)

NOTE: Points and fees calculations for high-cost mortgages depend upon whether the transaction is closed-end or open-end.

For a closed-end transaction, calculate the points and fees by including the following charges (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)):

- All items included in the finance charge under 12 CFR 1026.4(a) and (b), except that the following items are excluded:
    - Interest or the time-price differential;
    - Any premiums or other charges imposed in connection with a federal or state agency program for any guaranty or insurance that protects the creditor against the consumer's default or other credit loss (i.e., up-front and annual Federal Housing Administration (FHA) premiums, U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) funding fees, and USDA guarantee fees);
    - Premiums or other charges for any guaranty or insurance that protects creditors against the consumer's default or other credit loss and is not in connection with a federal or state agency program (i.e., private mortgage insurance (PMI) premiums) as follows:
        - The entire amount of any premiums or other charges payable after consummation (i.e., monthly or annual PMI premiums); or
        - If the premium or other charge is payable at or before consummation, the portion of any such premium or other charge that is not in excess of the permissible up-front mortgage insurance premium for FHA loans, but only if the premium or charge is refundable on a pro rata basis and the refund is automatically issued upon the notification of the satisfaction of the underlying mortgage loan. The permissible up-front mortgage insurance premiums for FHA loans are published in HUD Mortgagee Letters, available online at: http://portal.hud.gov/hudportal/HUD?src=/program_offices/administration/hudclips/letters/mortgagee.

- Bona fide third-party charges not retained by the creditor, loan originator, or an affiliate of either, unless the charge is required to be included under 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)(i)(C), (iii), or (v);
- Up to two bona fide discount points payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction, provided that the interest rate without any discount does not exceed:
  - The APOR for a comparable transaction by more than one percentage point; or
  - If the transaction is secured by personal property, the average rate for a loan insured under Title I of the National Housing Act by more than one percentage point; or
- If no discount points have been excluded above, then up to one bona fide discount point payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction, provided that the interest rate without any discount does not exceed:
  - The APOR for a comparable transaction by more than two percentage points; or
  - If the transaction is secured by personal property, the average rate for a loan insured under Title I of the National Housing Act by more than two percentage points.

NOTE: In the case of a closed-end plan, a bona fide discount point means an amount equal to 1 percent of the loan amount paid by the consumer that reduces the interest rate or time-price differential applicable to the transaction based on a calculation that is consistent with established industry practices for determining the amount of reduction in the interest rate or time-price differential appropriate for the amount of discount points paid by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(3)).

- All compensation paid directly or indirectly by a consumer or creditor to a loan originator (as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(1)) that can be attributed to the transaction at the time the interest rate is set unless:
  - That compensation is paid by a consumer to a mortgage broker, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(2), and already has been included in points and fees under 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)(i);
  - That compensation is paid by a mortgage broker, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(2), to a loan originator that is an employee of the mortgage broker;
  - That compensation is paid by a creditor to a loan originator that is an employee of the creditor; or
- All items listed in 12 CFR 1026.4(c)(7), other than amounts held for future taxes, unless all of the following conditions are met:
  - The charge is reasonable,

- o The creditor receives no direct or indirect compensation in connection with the charge, and
- o The charge is not paid to an affiliate of the creditor.

- Premiums or other charges paid at or before consummation, whether paid in cash or financed, for any credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment, or credit property insurance, or for any other life, accident, health, or loss-of-income insurance for which the creditor is a beneficiary, or any payments directly or indirectly for any debt cancellation or suspension agreement or contract.
- The maximum prepayment penalty that may be charged or collected under the terms of the mortgage or credit plan.
- The total prepayment penalty incurred by the consumer if the consumer refinances an existing mortgage loan, or terminates an existing open-end credit plan in connection with obtaining a new mortgage loan, with a new mortgage transaction extended by the current holder of the existing loan, a servicer acting on behalf of the current holder, or an affiliate of either.

For an open-end credit plan, points and fees mean the following charges that are known at or before account opening (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(2)):

- All items included in the finance charge under 12 CFR 1026.4(a) and (b), except that the following items are excluded:
  - o Interest or the time-price differential;
  - o Any premiums or other charges imposed in connection with a federal or state agency program for any guaranty or insurance that protects the creditor against the consumer’s default or other credit loss (i.e., up-front and annual FHA premiums, VA funding fees, and USDA guarantee fees);
  - o Premiums or other charges for any guaranty or insurance that protects creditors against the consumer’s default or other credit loss and is not in connection with a federal or state agency program (i.e., PMI premiums) as follows:
    - ▪ If the premium or other charge is payable after account opening, the entire amount of such premium or other charge; or
    - ▪ If the premium or other charge is payable at or before account opening, the portion of any such premium or other charge that is not in excess of the permissible up-front mortgage insurance premium for FHA loans, but only if the premium or charge is refundable on a pro rata basis and the refund is automatically issued upon the notification of the satisfaction of the underlying mortgage loan. The permissible up-front mortgage insurance premiums for FHA loans are published in HUD Mortgagee

Letters, available online at:
https://www.hud.gov/program_offices/administration/hudclips/letters/mortgagee

- Bona fide third-party charges not retained by the creditor, loan originator, or an affiliate of either, unless the charge is required to be included under 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(2)(i)(C), (iii), or (iv);

- Up to two bona fide discount points payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction, provided that the interest rate without any discount does not exceed:

  - The APOR by more than one percentage point; or

  - If the transaction is secured by personal property, the average rate for a loan insured under Title I of the National Housing Act by more than one percentage point; or

- If no discount points have been excluded above, then up to one bona fide discount point payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction, provided that the interest rate without any discount does not exceed:

  - The APOR by more than two percentage points; or

  - If the transaction is secured by personal property, the average rate for a loan insured under Title I of the National Housing Act by more than two percentage points.

  NOTE: A bona fide discount point means an amount equal to 1 percent of the credit limit when the account is opened, paid by the consumer, that reduces the interest rate or time-price differential applicable to the transaction based on a calculation that is consistent with established industry practices for determining the amount of reduction in the interest rate or time-price differential appropriate for the amount of discount points paid by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(3)(ii)).

- All compensation paid directly or indirectly by a consumer or creditor to a loan originator (as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(1)) that can be attributed to the transaction at the time the interest rate is set unless:

  - That compensation is paid by a consumer to a mortgage broker, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(2), and already has been included in points and fees under 12 CFR 1026.36(b)(2)(i)); or

  - That compensation is paid by a mortgage broker as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(2) to a loan originator that is an employee of the mortgage broker; or

  - That compensation is paid by a creditor to a loan originator that is an employee of the creditor; or

  - That compensation is paid by a retailer of manufactured homes to its employee.

NOTES:

- A person is not a loan originator if the person does not take a consumer credit application or offer or negotiate credit terms available from a creditor to that consumer based on the consumer's financial characteristics, but the person performs purely administrative or clerical tasks on behalf of a person who does engage in such activities. For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36, "credit terms" include rates, fees, or other costs, and a consumer's financial characteristics include any factors that may influence a credit decision, such as debts, income, assets, or credit history (12 CFR 1026.36(a)(6)).
- A retailer of manufactured or modular homes, or an employee of such a retailer, who does not receive compensation or gain for engaging in loan originator activities in excess of any compensation or gain received in a comparable cash transaction, and who does not directly negotiate with the consumer or lender on loan terms, is not a mortgage originator, provided the retailer or employee (as applicable) discloses to the consumer in writing any corporate affiliation with any creditor. Where the retailer has a corporate affiliation with any creditor, at least one unaffiliated creditor must also be disclosed (15 U.S.C. 1602(dd)(2)(C)(ii)).

All items listed in 12 CFR 1026.4(c)(7), other than amounts held for future taxes, unless all of the following conditions are met:

- o The charge is reasonable,
- o The creditor receives no direct or indirect compensation in connection with the charge, and
- o The charge is not paid to an affiliate of the creditor.

- Premiums or other charges paid at or before account opening for any credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment, or credit property insurance, or for any other life, accident, health, or loss-of-income insurance for which the creditor is a beneficiary, or any payments directly or indirectly for any debt cancellation or suspension agreement or contract.
- The maximum prepayment penalty that may be charged or collected under the terms of the credit plan.
- The total prepayment penalty incurred by the consumer if the consumer refinances an existing closed-end credit transaction with an open-end credit plan, or terminates an existing open-end credit plan in connection with obtaining a new open-end credit with the current holder of the existing transaction or plan, a servicer acting on behalf of the current holder, or an affiliate of either.

In addition to the charges listed above, points and fees for open-end credit plans include the following items:

- Fees charged for participation in the credit plan, payable at or before account opening, as described in 12 CFR 1026.4(c)(4), and

- Any transaction fee that will be charged to draw funds on the credit line, as described in (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(2)(viii)).

Prepayment Penalty Definition – 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(6)

For closed-end credit transactions, a prepayment penalty is a charge imposed for paying all or part of the transaction's principal before the date on which the principal is due, with limited exceptions.

For open-end credit plans, a prepayment penalty is a charge imposed by the creditor if the consumer terminates the credit plan prior to the end of its term.

NOTE: Waived, bona fide third-party charges that are later imposed if the closed-end transaction is prepaid or the consumer terminates the open-end credit plan sooner than 36 months after consummation or account opening are not considered prepayment penalties.

NOTE: For closed-end transactions insured by the Federal Housing Administration and consummated before January 21, 2015, interest charged consistent with the monthly interest accrual amortization method is not a prepayment penalty, so long as the interest is charged consistent with the monthly interest accrual amortization method used for those loans (See Comment 32(b)(6)-1(iv)).

High-Cost Mortgage Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.32(c)

In addition to the other disclosure requirements of Regulation Z, high-cost mortgages require certain additional information to be disclosed in conspicuous type size to consumers before consummation of the transaction or account opening. These disclosures include:

- Notice to the consumer using the required language in 12 CFR 1026.32(c)(1);
- The annual percentage rate (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(2));
- Specified information concerning the regular or minimum periodic payment and the amount of any balloon payment, if permitted under the high-cost mortgage limitations in 12 CFR 1026.32(d) (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)).
- For variable-rate transactions, a statement that the interest and monthly payment may increase, and the amount of the single maximum monthly payment based on the maximum interest rate required to be included in the contract (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(4)); and
- The total amount borrowed for closed-end credit transactions or the credit limit for the plan when the account is opened for an open-end credit plan (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(5)).

  NOTE: For closed-end credit transactions, if the amount borrowed includes charges to be financed under 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(10), this fact must be stated, grouped together with the disclosure of amount borrowed. The disclosure of the amount borrowed will be treated as accurate if it is not more than $100 above or below the amount required to be disclosed.

High-Cost Mortgage Limitations – 12 CFR 1026.32(d)

Certain loan terms, including negative amortization, interest rate increases after default, and prepayment penalties are prohibited for high-cost mortgages. Others, including balloon payments and due-on-demand clauses, are restricted.

- Balloon payments, defined as payments that are more than two times a regular periodic payment, are generally prohibited for high-cost mortgages (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(i)). However, balloon payments are allowed in certain limited circumstances.
  - For closed-end transactions, balloon payments are permitted when (a) the loan has a payment schedule that is adjusted to seasonal or irregular income of the consumer; (b) the loan is a "bridge" loan made in connection with the purchase of a new dwelling and matures in 12 months or less; (c) the creditor is a small creditor operating in a rural or underserved area that meets the criteria set forth in 12 CFR 1026.43(f) for small creditor rural or underserved balloon-payment qualified mortgages; or, (d) until April 1, 2016, the creditor is a small creditor that meets the criteria set forth in 1026.43(e)(6)) for temporary balloon-payment qualified mortgages (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(ii)).
  - For an open-end credit plan where the terms of the plan provide for a draw period where no payment is required, followed by a repayment period where no further draws may be taken, the initial payment required after conversion to the repayment phase of the credit plan is not considered a "balloon" payment. However, if the terms of an open-end credit plan do not provide for a separate draw period and repayment period, the balloon payment limitation applies (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(iii)).
- Acceleration clauses or demand features are limited and may only permit creditors to accelerate and demand repayment of the entire outstanding balance of a high-cost mortgage if:
  - There is fraud or material misrepresentation by the consumer in connection with the loan (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(8)(i));
  - The consumer fails to meet the repayment terms of the agreement for any outstanding balance that results in a default on the loan (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(8)(ii)); or
  - There is any action (or inaction) by the consumer that adversely affects the rights of the creditor's security interest for the loan, such as the consumer failing to pay required taxes on the property (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(8)(iii) and Comments 32(d)(8)(iii)-1 and -2).

Prohibited Acts or Practices in Connection with High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.34

In addition to the requirements in 12 CFR 1026.32, Regulation Z imposes additional requirements for high-cost mortgages, several of which are discussed below.

Refinancing Within One Year – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(3)

A creditor or assignee cannot refinance a consumer's high-cost mortgage into a second high-cost mortgage within the first year of the origination of the first loan, unless the second high-cost mortgage is in the consumer's interest.

Repayment Ability for High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)

Among other requirements, a creditor extending high-cost mortgage credit subject to 12 CFR 1026.32 must not make such loans without regard to the consumer's repayment ability as of consummation or account opening as applicable (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)).

For closed-end credit transactions that are high-cost mortgages, 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4) requires a creditor to comply with the repayment ability requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1026.43.

For open-end credit plans that are high-cost mortgages, a creditor may not open a credit plan for a consumer where credit is or will be extended without regard to the consumer's repayment ability as of account opening, including the consumer's current and reasonably expected income, employment, assets other than the collateral, and current obligations, including any mortgage-related obligations.

- For the purposes of these open-end requirements, mortgage-related obligations include, among other things, property taxes, premiums and fees for mortgage-related insurance that are required by the creditor, fees and special assessments such as those imposed by a condominium association, and similar expenses required by another credit obligation undertaken prior to or at account opening and secured by the same dwelling that secures the high-cost mortgage transaction (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(i)).
- A creditor must also verify both current obligations and the amounts of income or assets that it relies on to determine repayment ability using W-2s, tax returns, payroll receipts, financial institution records, or other third-party documents that provide reasonably reliable evidence of the consumer's income or assets (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(ii)).

For open-end high-cost mortgages, a presumption of compliance is available, but only if the creditor:

- Verifies the consumer's repayment ability as required under 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(ii));
- Determines the consumer's repayment ability taking into account current obligations and mortgage-related obligations, using the largest required minimum periodic payment based on the assumptions that:
  - The consumer borrows the full credit line at account opening with no additional extensions of credit;
  - The consumer makes only required minimum periodic payments during the draw period and any repayment period; and

  - o If the APR can increase, the maximum APR that is included in the contract applies to the plan at account opening and will apply during the draw and any repayment period (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(iii)(B)).

- Assesses the consumer's repayment ability, taking into account either the ratio of total debts to income or the income the consumer will have after paying current obligations (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(iii)(C)).

NOTE: No presumption of compliance will be available for an open-end high-cost mortgage transaction in which the regular periodic payments, when aggregated, do not fully amortize the outstanding principal balance except for transactions with balloon payments permitted under (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(ii)).

High-Cost Mortgage Pre-Loan Counseling – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(5)

Creditors that originate high-cost mortgages must receive written certification that the consumer has obtained counseling on the advisability of the mortgage from a counselor approved by HUD, or if permitted by HUD, a state housing finance authority (specific content for the certifications can be found in (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(5)(iv)). Counseling must occur after the consumer receives a good faith estimate or initial TILA disclosure required by 12 CFR 1026.40 (or, for transactions where neither of those disclosures are provided, the disclosures required by (12 CFR 1026.32(c)). Additionally, counseling cannot be provided by a counselor who is employed by, or affiliated with, the creditor. A creditor may pay the fees for counseling but is prohibited from conditioning the payment of fees upon the consummation of the mortgage transaction or, if the consumer withdraws his or her application, upon receipt of the certification. However, a creditor may confirm that a counselor provided counseling to the consumer prior to paying these fees. Finally, a creditor is prohibited from steering a consumer to a particular counselor.

Recommended Default – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(6)

Creditors (and mortgage brokers) are prohibited from recommending or encouraging a consumer to default on an existing loan or other debt prior to, and in connection with, the consummation or account opening of a high-cost mortgage that refinances all or any portion of the existing loan or debt.

Loan Modification and Deferral Fees – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(7)

Creditors, successors in interest, assignees, or any agents of these parties may not charge a consumer any fee to modify, renew, extend, or amend a high-cost mortgage, or to defer any payment due under the terms of the mortgage.

Late Fees – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)

Late payment charges for a high-cost mortgage must be permitted by the terms of the loan contract or open-end agreement and may not exceed 4 percent of the amount of the payment that is past due. Late payment charges are permitted only if payment is not received by the end of the 15-day period beginning on the day the payment is due or, where interest on each installment is paid in advance, by the end of the 30-day period beginning on the day the payment is due.

Creditors are also prohibited from "pyramiding" late fees – that is, charging late payments if any delinquency is attributable only to a late payment charge that was imposed due to a previous late payment, and the payment otherwise is considered a full payment for the applicable period (and any allowable grace period). If a consumer fails to make a timely payment by the due date then subsequently resumes making payments but has not paid all past due payments, the creditor can continue to impose late payment charges for the payments outstanding until the default is cured.

Fees for Payoff Statements – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(9)

A creditor or servicer may not charge a fee for providing consumers (or authorized representatives) with a payoff statement on a high-cost mortgage. Payoff statements must be provided to consumers within five business days after receiving the request for a statement. A creditor or servicer may charge a processing fee to cover the cost of providing the payoff statement by fax or courier only, provided that such fee may not exceed an amount that is comparable to fees imposed for similar services provided in connection with a non-high-cost mortgage and that a payoff statement be made available to the consumer by an alternative method without charge. If a creditor charges a fee for providing a payoff statement by fax or courier, the creditor must disclose the fee prior to charging the consumer and must disclose to the consumer that other methods for providing the payoff statement are available at no cost. Finally, a creditor is permitted to charge a consumer a reasonable fee for additional payoff statements during a calendar year in which four payoff statements have already been provided without charge other than permitted processing fees.

Reverse Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.33

A reverse mortgage is a non-recourse transaction secured by the consumer's principal dwelling that ties repayment (other than upon default) to the homeowner's death or permanent move from, or transfer of the title of, the home. Special disclosure requirements apply to reverse mortgages.

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans – 12 CFR 1026.35(a)

A mortgage loan subject to 12 CFR 1026.35 (higher-priced mortgage loan) is a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by the consumer's principal dwelling with an APR that exceeds the average prime offer rate for a comparable transaction as of the date the interest rate is set by:

- 1.5 or more percentage points for loans secured by a first lien on a dwelling where the amount of the principal obligation at the time of consummation does not exceed the maximum principal obligation eligible for purchase by Freddie Mac;

- 2.5 or more percentage points for loans secured by a first lien on a dwelling, where the amount of the principal obligation at the time of consummation exceeds the maximum principal obligation eligible for purchase by Freddie Mac; or

- 3.5 or more percentage points for loans secured by a subordinate lien on a dwelling.

Average prime offer rate means an APR that is derived from average interest rates, points, and other loan pricing terms currently offered to consumers by a representative sample of creditors for mortgage transactions that have low-risk pricing characteristics. The CFPB publishes average prime offer rates for a broad range of types of transactions in a table updated at least weekly, as well as the methodology it uses to derive these rates. These rates are available on the website of the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC). http://www.ffiec.gov/ratespread/newcalchelp.aspx

Additionally, creditors extending mortgage loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.43(c) must verify a consumer's ability to repay as required by (12 CFR 1026.43(c)).

Finally, the regulation prohibits creditors from structuring a home-secured loan that does not meet the definition of open-end credit as an open-end plan to evade these requirements.

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans Escrow Requirement – 12 CFR 1026.35(b)

In general, a creditor may not extend a higher-priced mortgage loan (including high-cost mortgages that also meet the definition of a higher-priced mortgage loan), secured by a first lien on a principal dwelling unless an escrow account is established before consummation for payment of property taxes and premiums for mortgage-related insurance required by the creditor.

An escrow account for a higher-priced mortgage loan need not be established for:

- A transaction secured by shares in a cooperative,
- A transaction to finance the initial construction of a dwelling,
- A temporary or "bridge" loan with a term of 12 months or less, or
- A reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33.

There is also a limited exemption that allows creditors to establish escrow accounts for property taxes only (rather than for both property taxes and insurance) for loans secured by dwellings in a "common interest community" under 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(ii), where dwelling ownership requires participation in a governing association that is obligated to maintain a master insurance policy insuring all dwellings (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(ii)).

An exemption to the higher-priced mortgage loan escrow requirement is available for first-lien higher-priced mortgage loans made by certain creditors that operate in a "rural" or "underserved" area (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii) and its associated commentary). To make use of this exemption, a creditor:

1. Must have made, during the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), a covered transaction secured by a first lien on a property that is located in an area that meets the definition of either "rural" or "underserved" as set forth in (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv));[33]

2. Together with its affiliates, must not have extended more than 2,000 covered transactions (secured by first liens, that were sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to another person or subject at the time of consummation to a commitment to be acquired by another person) in the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years);

3. Together, with its affiliates that regularly extended[34] covered transactions (secured by first liens), must have had less than $2 billion in total assets[35] as of the preceding December 31 (or if an application was received before April 1 of the current year, as of either of the two preceding December 31sts); and

4. The creditor and its affiliates must not maintain escrow accounts for any extensions of consumer credit secured by real property or a dwelling that the creditor or its affiliate currently services. However, such creditors (and their affiliates) are permitted to maintain escrow accounts established to comply with the rule for applications received on or after April 1, 2010, and before May 1, 2016, without losing the exemption and to offer an escrow account to accommodate distressed borrowers.

For first-lien higher-priced mortgage loans originated by a creditor that would not be required to establish an escrow account based on the above exemption, if that creditor has obtained a commitment for a higher-priced mortgage loan to be acquired by another company that is not eligible for the exemption, an escrow account must be established. Since an escrow account will be established for this loan, however, note that if the creditor that has obtained a commitment for the higher-priced mortgage loan to be acquired by a non-exempt company would like to remain eligible for the exemption above, neither the creditor nor its affiliates can service the loan on or beyond the second periodic payment under the terms of the loan.

[33] The regulation defines these two terms in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv)(A) and (B). A rural area is a county that is neither in a metropolitan statistical area or a micropolitan statistical area that is adjacent to a metropolitan statistical area; or a census block that is not in an urban area, as defined by the U.S. Census Bureau using the latest decennial census of the United States; or a county or a census block that has been designated as "rural" by the CFPB pursuant to the application process established in 2016. See Application Process for Designation of Rural Area under Federal Consumer Financial Law; Procedural Rule, 81 FR 11099 (March 3, 2016). The provisions related to the application process ceased to have any force or effect on December 4, 2017 (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv)(A)(3)). An underserved area is a county defined by using Home Mortgage Disclosure Act data for the preceding year to determine whether it is a county in which no more than two creditors extended covered transactions secured by first liens on properties in the county five or more times. A property is in a rural or underserved area for a particular year if it is listed as a rural or underserved county by the CFPB, is identified as in a rural or underserved area by any automated tool on the CFPB's website or is not designated as located in an urban area in the most recent delineation of urban areas announced by the Census Bureau by any automated address search tool that the Census Bureau provides on its public website for that purpose.

[34] See Comment 35(b)(2)(iii)-1.iii for discussion of "regularly extended" as it applies to affiliates in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(C).

[35] The asset threshold is adjusted automatically each year, based on the year-to-year change in the average of the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers.

A creditor or servicer may cancel an escrow account only upon the earlier of termination of the underlying loan, or a cancellation request from the consumer five years or later after consummation. However, a creditor or servicer is not permitted to cancel an escrow account, even upon request from the consumer, unless the unpaid principal balance of the higher-priced mortgage loan is less than 80 percent of the original value of the property securing the loan and the consumer is not currently delinquent or in default on the loan (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3)).

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans Appraisal Requirement – 12 CFR 1026.35(c)[36]

General Requirements, Exception, and Safe Harbor

A creditor may not extend a higher-priced mortgage loan without first obtaining a written appraisal of the property to be mortgaged. The appraisal must be performed by a state-certified or licensed appraiser (defined in part as an appraiser who conducts the appraisal in conformity with the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice (USPAP) and the requirements applicable to appraisers in Title XI of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 (FIRREA) and its implementing regulations). The appraisal must include a physical visit of the interior of the dwelling. The appraisal requirements do not apply to:

- Qualified mortgages (QM) under 12 CFR 1026.43 or under rules on qualified mortgages adopted by HUD, VA, or USDA, including mortgages that meet the QM criteria for these rules and are insured, guaranteed, or administered by those agencies;
- An extension of credit equal to or less than the applicable threshold amount that is published in the official staff commentary to the regulation, which is adjusted every year as applicable to reflect increases in the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers;[37]
- A transaction secured by a mobile home, boat, or trailer;
- A transaction to finance the initial construction of a dwelling;
- A loan with maturity of 12 months or less, if the purpose of the loan is a "bridge" loan connected with the acquisition of a dwelling intended to become the consumer's principal dwelling;
- A reverse mortgage transaction subject to 12 CFR 1026.33;

[36] The higher-priced mortgage loans appraisal requirement was adopted pursuant to an interagency rulemaking conducted by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (Board), the CFPB, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), the FHFA, the NCUA, and the Office of Comptroller of the Currency (OCC). The Board codified the rule at 12 CFR 226.43, and the OCC codified the rule at 12 CFR Part 34. There is no substantive difference among these three sets of rules.

[37] From January 1, 2015, through December 31, 2015, the threshold amount was $25,500. See Comment 35(c)(2)(ii) – 3. Effective January 1, 2020, to December 31, 2020, the threshold is $27,200; 84 Fed. Reg. 58013 (October 30, 2019).

- A refinancing secured by a first lien, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.20(a) (except that the creditor need not be the original creditor or a holder or servicer of the original obligation), provided that the refinancing meets the following criteria:
  - The credit risk of the refinancing is retained by the person who held the credit risk of the existing obligation and there is no commitment, at consummation, to transfer the credit risk to another person; or, the refinancing is insured or guaranteed by the same federal government agency that insured or guaranteed the existing obligation;
  - The regular periodic payments under the refinance loan do not:
    - Cause the principal balance to increase,
    - Allow the consumer to defer repayment of principal, or
    - Result in a balloon payment, as defined in (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(5)(i)).
  - The proceeds from the refinancing are used solely to satisfy the existing obligation and amounts attributed solely to the costs of the refinancing.
- A transaction secured by a manufactured home under the following conditions:[38]
  - If the transaction is for a new manufactured home and land, the exemption shall only apply to the requirement that the appraiser conduct a physical visit of the interior of the new manufactured home.
  - If the transaction is for a manufactured home and not land, for which the creditor obtains one of the following and provides a copy to the consumer no later than three business days prior to consummation of the transaction:
    - For a new manufactured home, the manufacturer's invoice for the manufactured home securing the transaction, provided that the date of manufacture is no earlier than 18 months prior to the creditor's receipt of the consumer's application for credit;
    - A cost estimate of the value of the manufactured home securing the transaction obtained from an independent cost service provider; or
    - A valuation, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.42(b)(3), of the manufactured home performed by a person who has no direct or indirect interest, financial or otherwise, in the property or transaction for which the valuation is performed and has training in valuing manufactured homes.
  - Transactions secured by an existing (used) manufactured home and land are not exempt from the appraisal requirement.

[38] Prior to July 18, 2015, appraisal requirements do not apply to transactions secured in whole or in part by a manufactured home (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2)). This section describes how the exemption will work under an amendment to the rule that takes effect on July 18, 2015.

A creditor may obtain a safe harbor for compliance with 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(i) by ordering that the appraisal be completed in conformity with USPAP and the requirements applicable to appraisers in Title XI of FIRREA and its implementing regulations, verifying that the appraiser is certified or licensed through the National Registry; and confirming that the written appraisal contains the elements listed in Appendix N of Regulation Z. In addition, the creditor must have no actual knowledge that the facts or certifications contained in the appraisal are inaccurate (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(ii)).

Additional Appraisals

The appraisal provisions in 12 CFR 1026.35(c) also require creditors to obtain an additional written appraisal before extending a higher-priced mortgage loan in two instances:

- First, when the dwelling that is securing the higher-priced mortgage loan was acquired by the seller 90 or fewer days prior to the consumer's agreement to purchase the property and the price of the property has increased by more than 10 percent.
- Additionally, when the dwelling was acquired by the seller between 91 and 180 days prior to the consumer's agreement to purchase the property, and the price of the property has increased by more than 20 percent.

A creditor must obtain an additional interior appraisal meeting the same requirements as the first appraisal (written report by a certified or licensed appraiser in compliance with USPAP and the FIRREA based upon an interior property visit), unless the creditor can demonstrate, by exercising reasonable diligence, that the circumstances necessitating an additional appraisal do not apply. A creditor can meet the reasonable diligence requirement if it bases its determination on information contained in certain written source documents (such as a copy of the seller's recorded deed or a copy of a property tax bill) (See Appendix O of Regulation Z). If, after exercising reasonable diligence, the creditor is unable to determine whether the circumstances necessitating an additional appraisal apply, the creditor must obtain an additional appraisal.

If the creditor is required to obtain an additional written appraisal, the two required appraisals must be conducted by different appraisers. Each appraisal obtained must include a physical visit of the interior of the dwelling. In instances where two appraisals are required, creditors are allowed to charge for only one of the two appraisals.

One of the two required written appraisals must contain an analysis of the difference between the price at which the seller obtained the property and the price the consumer agreed to pay to acquire the property, an analysis of changes in market conditions between when the seller acquired the property and when the consumer agreed to purchase the property, and a review of improvements made to the property between the two dates.

The higher-priced mortgage loan additional appraisal requirements do not apply to the extension of credit that finances the acquisition of a property:

- From a local, state, or federal government agency;

- From a person who acquired title to the property through foreclosure, deed-in-lieu of foreclosure, or other similar judicial or non-judicial procedures as a result of the person's exercise of rights as the holder of a defaulted mortgage;
- From a nonprofit entity as part of a local, state, or federal government program permitted to acquire single-family properties for resale from a person who acquired title through foreclosure, deed-in-lieu of foreclosure, or other similar judicial or non-judicial procedures;
- From a person who acquired title to the property by inheritance or by court order as a result of a dissolution of marriage, civil union, or domestic partnership, or of partition of joint or marital assets;
- From an employer or relocation agency in connection with the relocation of an employee;
- From a servicemember who received a deployment or permanent change-of-station order after the servicemember purchased the property;
- Located in a federal disaster area if the requirements of Title XI of FIRREA have been waived by the federal financial institutions regulatory agencies for as long as that waiver would apply; or
- Located in a rural county as defined by the CFPB in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv)(A).

Application Disclosures and Copy of Appraisal

Finally, creditors must provide consumers who apply for a loan covered by the appraisal requirements in 12 CFR 1026.35(c) with a disclosure providing information relating to appraisals. A creditor must provide consumers with disclosures no later than the third business day after the creditor receives an application for a higher-priced mortgage loan, or no later than the third business day after the loan requested becomes a higher-priced mortgage loan. Additionally, a creditor must provide, at no cost to the consumer, a copy of each written appraisal performed in connection with a loan covered by the appraisal requirements in 12 CFR 1026.35(c) no later than three business days prior to consummation or, if the loan will not be consummated, no later than 30 days after the creditor determines that the loan will not be consummated. [39]

[39] Creditors may use the disclosure required under the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) valuations rule to satisfy the disclosure requirements of the higher-priced mortgage loans appraisal rule for loans covered by both. After October 3, 2015, the new Loan Estimate model form appraisal language required by the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule (12 CFR 1026.37(m)(1)(iii)) will meet the requirements of both the ECOA valuations rule (12 CFR 1002.14(a)(2)) and the higher-priced mortgage loans appraisal rule.

Prohibited Acts or Practices in Connection with Credit Secured by a Consumer's Dwelling – 12 CFR 1026.36

Loan Originator – 12 CFR 1026.36(a)

The term "loan originator" means a person who, in expectation of direct or indirect compensation or other monetary gain or for direct or indirect compensation or other monetary gain, performs any of the following activities:

- Takes an application, offers, arranges, assists a consumer in obtaining or applying to obtain, negotiates, or otherwise obtains or makes an extension of consumer credit for another person; or

- Through advertising or other means of communication represents to the public that such person can or will perform any of these activities.

The term "loan originator" includes an employee, agent, or contractor of the creditor or loan originator organization if the employee, agent, or contractor meets this definition. The term "loan originator" also includes a creditor that engages in loan origination activities if the creditor does not finance the transaction at consummation out of the creditor's own resources, including by drawing on a bona fide warehouse line of credit or out of deposits held by the creditor.

The term "loan originator" does not include:

- A person who performs purely administrative or clerical tasks on behalf of a person who takes applications or offers or negotiates credit terms;

- A retailer of manufactured or modular homes, or an employee of such a retailer, who does not receive compensation or gain for engaging in loan originator activities in excess of any compensation or gain received in a comparable cash transaction, and who does not directly negotiate with the consumer or lender on loan terms (including rates, fees, and other costs), if such retailer or employee (as applicable) discloses to the consumer in writing any corporate affiliation with any creditor. Where the retailer has a corporate affiliation with any creditor, at least one unaffiliated creditor must also be disclosed (15 U.S.C. 1602(dd)(2)(C)(ii));

- A person who performs only real estate brokerage activity and is licensed or registered in accordance with applicable state law, unless that person is compensated by a creditor or loan originator for a consumer credit transaction subject to (12 CFR 1026.36);

- A seller financer that meets the criteria established in (12 CFR 1026.36(a)(4) or (a)(5)); or

- A servicer, or a servicer's employees, agents, and contractors who offer or negotiate the terms of a mortgage for the purpose of renegotiating, modifying, replacing, or subordinating principal of an existing mortgage where consumers are behind in their payments, in default, or have a reasonable likelihood of becoming delinquent or defaulting. This exception does not, however, apply to such persons if they refinance a mortgage or assign a mortgage to a different consumer.

An "individual loan originator" is a natural person who meets the definition of "loan originator". Finally, a "loan originator organization" is any loan originator that is not an individual loan originator. A loan originator organization would include banks, thrifts, finance companies, credit unions, and mortgage brokers.

Prohibited Loan Originator Compensation: Payments Based on a Term of a Transaction – 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)

With limited exceptions, loan originators cannot receive (and no person can pay directly or indirectly), compensation in connection with closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling based on a term of a transaction, the terms of multiple transactions, or the terms of multiple transactions by multiple individual loan originators. The loan originator compensation provisions do not apply to open-end home-equity lines of credit or to credit secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan described in 11 U.S.C. 101(53D).

A "term of a transaction" is any right or obligation of the parities to a credit transaction. The amount of credit extended is not a term of a transaction, provided that such compensation is based on a fixed percentage of the amount of credit extended (but may be subject to a minimum or maximum dollar amount).

NOTE: A review of whether compensation, which includes salaries, commissions, and any financial or similar incentive, is based on the terms of a transaction requires an objective analysis. If compensation would have been different if a transaction term had been different, then the compensation is prohibited. The regulation does not prevent compensating loan originators differently on different transactions, provided the difference is not based on a term of a transaction or on a proxy for a term of a transaction (a factor that consistently varies with a term or terms of the transaction over a significant number of transactions and which the loan originator has the ability to manipulate).

An individual loan originator may receive (and a person may pay):

- Compensation in the form of a contribution to a defined contribution plan that is a designated tax-advantage plan unless the contribution is tied to the terms of the individual's transaction(s) (12 CFR 1026.36.(d)(1)(iii));
- Compensation in the form of a benefit under a defined benefit plan that is a designated tax-advantaged plan (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(iii));
- Compensation under a non-deferred profits-based compensation plan provided that:
    - The compensation paid to an individual loan originator is not directly or indirectly based on the terms of the individual's transaction(s); and
    - Either:

- The compensation paid to the individual loan originator does not exceed 10 percent (in aggregate) of the individual loan originator's total compensation corresponding to the time period for which the compensation under the non-deferred profits-based compensation plan is paid; or
- The individual loan originator was the loan originator of 10 or fewer transactions during the 12 months preceding the date that the compensation was determined (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(iv)).

For more information pertaining to permissible compensation, see the commentary to (12 CFR 1026.36(d)).[40]

Prohibited Loan Originator Compensation: Dual Compensation – 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)

Loan originators that receive compensation directly from consumers in consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling (except for open-end home-equity lines of credit or to loans secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan) may not receive additional compensation directly or indirectly from any other person in connection with that transaction (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(i)(A)(1)). This prohibition includes compensation received from a third party to the transaction to pay for some or all of the consumer's costs (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(i)(B)). Further, a person is prohibited from compensating a loan originator when that person "knows or has reason to know" that the consumer has paid compensation to the loan originator (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)(i)(A)(2)).

However, even if a loan originator organization receives compensation directly from a consumer, the organization can compensate the individual loan originator, subject to 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1) (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)(i)(C)).

Prohibition on Steering – 12 CFR 1026.36(e)

Loan originators are prohibited from directing or "steering" consumers to loans based on the fact that the originator will receive greater compensation for the loan from the creditor than in other transactions that the originator offered or could have offered to the consumer, unless the consummated transaction is in the consumer's interest. A loan originator complies with the prohibition on steering (but not the loan originator compensation provisions) by obtaining loan options from a significant number of the creditors with which the loan originator regularly does business and, for each loan type in which the consumer has expressed interest, presenting the consumer with loan options for which the loan originator believes in good faith the consumer likely qualifies, provided that the presented loan options include all of the following:

- The loan with the lowest interest rate;

[40] In addition to the requirements listed here, 12 CFR 1026.25(c) imposes specific record retention requirements for creditors and loan originator organizations that compensate loan originators.

- The loan with the lowest interest rate without certain enumerated risky features (such as prepayment penalties, negative amortization, or a balloon payment in the first seven years); and

- The loan with the lowest total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees (or, if two or more loans have the same total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees, the loan with the lowest interest rate that has the lowest total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees).

The anti-steering provisions do not apply to open-end home-equity lines of credit or to loans secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan.

Loan Originator Qualification Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.36(f)

Individual loan originators and loan originator organizations must, when required under state or federal law, be registered and licensed under those laws, including the Safe and Fair Enforcement for Mortgage Licensing Action of 2008 (SAFE Act).[41] Loan originator organizations other than government agencies or state housing finance agencies must:

- Comply with all applicable state law requirements for legal existence and foreign qualification (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(1)); and

- Ensure that each individual loan originator who works for the loan originator organization (e.g., an employee, under a brokerage agreement) is licensed or registered to the extent that the individual is required to be licensed or registered under the SAFE Act or excluded from those requirements because the individual is authorized to act with temporary authority pursuant to 12 U.S.C. 5117 prior to acting as a loan originator in a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(2)).

The requirements are different for loan originator organizations whose employees are not required to be licensed and are not licensed pursuant to 12 CFR 1008.103 or state SAFE Act implementing laws (including employees of depository institutions and bona fide nonprofits). For their employees hired on or after January 1, 2014 (or hired before this date but not subject to any statutory or regulatory background standards at the time, or for any individual loan originators regardless of when hired that the organization believes, based on reliable information do not meet the qualification standards), loan originator employers must obtain before the individual acts as a loan originator in a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling:

- A criminal background check through the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry (NMLSR) or, in the case of an individual loan originator who is not a registered loan originator under NMLSR, a criminal background check from a law enforcement agency or commercial service (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(A)); [41] 12 CFR 1026.36(f) applies to closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling except a loan that is secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan described in 11 U.S.C. 101(53D). For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(f), a loan originator includes all creditors that engage in loan origination activities, not just those who table fund.

- A credit report from a consumer reporting agency (as defined in section 603(p) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA)) secured, where applicable, in compliance with section 604(b) of FCRA (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(B)); and
- Information from the NMLSR about any administrative, civil, or criminal findings by any government jurisdiction or, in the case of an individual loan originator who is not a registered loan originator under the NMLSR, such information from the individual loan originator (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(C)).

Based on the information obtained above and any other information reasonably available, the loan originator employer must determine for such an employee prior to allowing the individual to act as a loan originator in a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling:

- That the individual has not been convicted of, or pleaded guilty or nolo contendere to, a felony in a domestic or military court during the preceding seven-year period or, in the case of a felony involving an act of fraud, dishonesty, a breach of trust, or money laundering, at any time (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(ii)(A)(1)); and

  NOTE: Whether the conviction of a crime is considered a felony is determined by whether the conviction was classified as a felony under the law of the jurisdiction under which the individual is convicted. Additionally, a loan originator organization may employ an individual with a felony conviction (or a plea of nolo contendere) as a loan originator if that individual has received consent from the FDIC or the Board, as applicable, the NCUA, or the Farm Credit Administration (FCA) under their own applicable statutory authority (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(iii)).

- Has demonstrated financial responsibility, character, and general fitness such as to warrant a determination that the individual loan originator will operate honestly, fairly, and efficiently.

The loan originator organization must also provide periodic training to each such employee that covers federal and state legal requirements that apply to the individual loan originator's loan origination activities.

The SAFE Act provides certain loan originators with temporary authority to act as loan originators while applying for a state-loan originator license (12 U.S.C. 5117). If an individual loan originator may act as a loan originator with temporary authority under 12 U.S.C. 5117, the loan originator organization is not required to comply with the screening and training requirements described in (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)).[42]

Name and NMLSR ID on Loan Documentation – 12 CFR 1026.36(g)

12 CFR 1026.36(g) applies to closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling except a loan that is secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan described in (11 U.S.C. 101(53D)). For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(g), a loan originator includes all creditors that engage in loan origination activities, not just those who table fund.

For consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling, loan originator organizations must include certain identifying information on loan documentation provided to consumers. The loan documents must include the loan originator organization's name, NMLSR ID (if applicable), and the name of the individual loan originator that is primarily responsible for the origination as it appears in the NMLSR, as well as the individual's NMLSR ID. This information is required on credit applications, the Loan Estimate, the Closing Disclosure, the note or loan contract, and the documents securing an interest in the property.

Policies and Procedures to Ensure and Monitor Compliance – 12 CFR 1026.36(j)

Depository institutions (including credit unions) must establish and maintain written policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure and monitor compliance of the depository institution, its employees, and its subsidiaries and their employees with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.36(d) (prohibited payments to loan originators), 12 CFR 1026.36(e) (prohibition on steering), 12 CFR 1026.36(f) (loan originator qualifications), and 12 CFR 1026.36(g) (name and NMLSR ID on loan documents). The written policies and procedures must be appropriate to the nature, size, complexity, and scope of the mortgage lending activities of the depository and its subsidiaries (12 CFR 1026.36(j)).

Prohibition on Mandatory Arbitration or Waivers of Certain Consumer Rights – 12 CFR 1026.36(h)

A contract or other agreement for a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by the consumer's principal dwelling) may not include terms that require mandatory arbitration or any other non-judicial procedure to resolve any controversy arising out of the transaction. Also, a contract or other agreement relating to such a consumer credit transaction may not be applied or interpreted to bar a consumer from bringing a claim in court under any provision of law for damages or other relief in connection with an alleged violation of any federal law. However, a creditor and a consumer could agree, after a dispute or claim under the transaction arises, to settle or use arbitration or other non-judicial procedure to resolve that dispute or claim.

Prohibition on Financing Credit Insurance – 12 CFR 1026.36(i)

Creditors are prohibited from "financing" (i.e., providing a consumer the right to defer payment beyond the monthly period in which the premium or fee is due), either directly or indirectly, premiums or fees for credit insurance in connection with a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by the consumer's principal dwelling). This prohibition includes financing fees for credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment, credit property insurance, or any other accident, loss-of-income, life, or health insurance or payment for debt cancellation or suspension. This prohibition does not apply to credit unemployment insurance where the premiums are reasonable, the creditor receives no direct or indirect compensation in connection with the premiums, and the premiums are paid under a separate insurance contract and not to an affiliate of the creditor. This prohibition also does not apply to credit insurance where premiums or fees are "calculated" and paid in full "on a monthly basis" (i.e., determined mathematically by multiplying a rate by the actual monthly outstanding balance).

Negative Amortization Counseling – 12 CFR 1026.36(k)

A creditor may not extend a negative amortizing mortgage loan to a first-time borrower in connection with a closed-end transaction secured by a dwelling, other than a reverse mortgage or a transaction secured by a timeshare, unless the creditor receives documentation that the consumer has obtained homeownership counseling from a HUD-certified or approved counselor. Additionally, a creditor extending a negative amortizing mortgage loan to a first-time borrower may not steer, direct, or require the consumer to use a particular counselor.

Loan Servicing Practices

Servicers of mortgage loans are prohibited from engaging in certain practices, such as pyramiding late fees. In addition, servicers are required to credit consumers' loan payments as of the date of receipt and provide a payoff statement within a reasonable time, not to exceed seven business days of a written request.

Payment Processing – 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)

For a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a consumer's principal dwelling, a loan servicer:

- Cannot fail to credit a periodic payment to the consumer's loan account as of the date of receipt, except in instances where the delay will not result in a charge to the consumer or in the reporting of negative information to a consumer reporting agency.

  NOTE: For the purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(c) a periodic payment is "an amount sufficient to cover principal, interest, and escrow for any given billing cycle". If the consumer owes late fees, other fees, or non-escrow payments but makes a full periodic payment, the servicer must credit the periodic payment as of the date of receipt.

- Cannot retain a partial payment (any amount less than a periodic payment) in a suspense or unapplied payment account without disclosing to the consumer in the periodic statement (if required) the total amount(s) held in the suspense account and applying the payment to the balance upon accumulation of sufficient funds to equal a periodic payment.

If a servicer has provided written requirements for accepting payments in writing but then accepts payments that do not conform to the written requirements, the servicer must credit the payment as of five days after receipt.

If a loan contract has not been permanently modified but the consumer has agreed to a temporary loss mitigation program, a periodic payment under 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(i) is the amount sufficient to cover principal, interest, and escrow (if applicable) for a given billing cycle under the loan contract, regardless of the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program (Comment .36(c)(1)(i)-4). If a loan contract has been permanently modified, a periodic payment under 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(i) is an amount sufficient to cover principal, interest, and escrow (if applicable) for a given billing cycle under the modified loan contract (Comment .36(c)(1)(i)-5).

Pyramiding of Late Fees – 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(2)

In connection with a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a consumer's principal dwelling, a servicer may not impose on the consumer any late fee or delinquency charge in connection with a payment, when the only delinquency is attributable to late fees or delinquency charges assessed on an earlier payment, and the payment is otherwise a periodic payment for the applicable period and is received on its due date or within any applicable courtesy period.

Providing Payoff Statements – 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(3)

For consumer credit transactions secured by a consumer's dwelling, including home equity lines of credit under 12 CFR 1026.40(a), a creditor, assignee, or servicer may not fail to provide, within a reasonable time but no more than seven business days, after receiving a written request from the consumer or person acting on behalf of the consumer, an accurate statement of the total outstanding balance that would be required to pay the consumer's obligation in full as of a specific date.

NOTE: For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(3), when a creditor, assignee, or servicer is not able to provide the statement within seven business days because a loan is in bankruptcy or foreclosure, because the loan is a reverse mortgage or shared appreciation mortgage, or because of natural disasters or similar circumstances, the payoff statement must be provided within a reasonable time.

TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.37 and 1026.38

For most closed-end consumer mortgages, creditors must provide two disclosures, the Loan Estimate and the Closing Disclosure, to consumers for mortgage applications received on or after October 3, 2015. The Loan Estimate is a three-page form that provides disclosures to help consumers understand the key features, costs, and risks of the mortgage loan for which they are applying. This form must be delivered or placed in the mail no later than three business days after the creditor receives a consumer's mortgage loan application. The Closing Disclosure is a five-page form that helps consumers understand all of the costs of the transaction. This form generally must be received by the consumer at least three business days before consummation.

Both forms use similar language and design to make it easier for consumers to locate key information, such as the interest rate, monthly payments, and costs to close the loan.

The Loan Estimate form replaces the Good Faith Estimate designed by HUD under RESPA, and the "early" Truth in Lending disclosure designed by the Board under TILA. The regulation and the Official Interpretations contain detailed instructions as to how each line on the Loan Estimate form should be completed. There are sample forms for different types of loan products. The Loan Estimate form also incorporates new disclosures required by Congress under the Dodd-Frank Act.

The Closing Disclosure form replaces the HUD-1 for loan closing, which was designed by HUD under RESPA. The Closing Disclosure form also replaces the revised Truth in Lending disclosure designed by the Board under TILA. The rule and the Official Interpretations contain detailed instructions as to how each line on the Closing Disclosure form should be completed. The Closing Disclosure form contains additional new disclosures required by the Dodd-Frank Act and a detailed accounting of the settlement transaction. Refer to CFPB's TILA-RESPA Guide to Forms for a detailed, step-by-step walk-through for completing the Loan Estimate and the Closing Disclosure.

The rules on who provides the disclosures, timing, limits on when fees can be charged, early estimates, and limits on increases in charges are in 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), described in Subpart A.

Loan Estimate – Content of Disclosures for Certain Mortgage Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.37

Loan Estimate Form Required (12 CFR 1026.37(o))

The Loan Estimate generally must provide consumers with a good faith estimate of credit costs and transaction terms and satisfy timing and delivery requirements set forth in the rule.

For any transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) that are federally related mortgage loans subject to RESPA (which will include most mortgages), creditors must use Form H-24, set forth in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(3)(i)). (See also 12 CFR 1024.2(b) for definition of federally related mortgage loan.)

For other loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) that are not federally related mortgage loans, the disclosures must be made with headings, content, and format substantially similar to Form H-24 (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(3)(ii)).

The disclosures may be provided to the consumer in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.) (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(3)(iii)).

Information required on the Loan Estimate form. Most disclosures on the Loan Estimate form are required to be labeled using specific nomenclature, headings, and formatting. For example, the regulation requires that the form disclose the contract sale price, labeled "Sale Price" (or if there is no seller, the estimated value of the property, labeled "Prop. Value"). Further, in some instances, the regulation directs lines on the disclosure to be left blank where there is no charge (See, e.g., 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(2)(v)) or sets forth the maximum number of items that may be disclosed (See, e.g., 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(3)(v)). See the regulation, Form H-24, and the Regulation Z procedures for specific obligations regarding each required disclosure.

Rounding. Dollar amounts must be rounded to the nearest whole dollar where noted in the regulation, including adjustments after consummation for loan amount, interest rate, and periodic payment; and details about prepayment penalties and balloon payments, minimum and maximum amounts for principal and interest payments and range of payments, maximum mortgage insurance premiums, escrows, taxes and insurance and assessments, closing costs (loan costs and other costs), cash to close, and adjustable payment and comparisons (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A)).

The amount for prepaid interest paid per day and the monthly amounts required to be disclosed for escrows of homeowner's insurance, mortgage insurance, or property taxes must not be rounded (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A)).

The loan amount (the total amount the consumer will borrow, as reflected by the face amount of the note) must not be rounded, and if the amount is a whole number, must be truncated at the decimal point (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(B)).

If an amount is required to be rounded but is composed of other amounts that are not required or permitted to be rounded, the unrounded amounts should be used to calculate the total, and the final sum should be rounded. Conversely, if an amount is required to be rounded and is composed of rounded amounts, the rounded amounts should be used to calculate the total (Comment 37(o)(4)-2).

Percentage amounts must be rounded where noted in the regulation to three decimal places, but trailing zeros to the right of the decimal place must be dropped (e.g., 2.49999 percent APR is disclosed as 2.5 percent, and 7.005 percent APR is disclosed as 7.005 percent). The items rounded include the interest rate, adjustments after consummation (to the loan amount, interest rate, or periodic payment), points itemized under origination charges, prepaid interest rate, adjustable interest rate, annual percentage rate, and total interest percentage, or TIP (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(ii); Comment 37(o)(4)(ii)-1).

Page 1: General information, loan terms, projected payments, and costs at closing

Page 1 of the Loan Estimate discloses general information about the creditor, the applicant(s), and the loan. It also includes a Loan Terms table with descriptions of applicable information about the loan, a Projected Payments table, a summary Costs at Closing table, and a link for consumers to obtain more information about loans secured by real property or cooperative unit at a website maintained by the CFPB (12 CFR 1026.37(a)-(e)).

General information

Page 1 of the Loan Estimate requires the title “Loan Estimate” and the statement “Save this Loan Estimate to compare with your Closing Disclosure” (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(1), (2)). The top of page 1 also requires the name and address of the creditor (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(3)). A logo can be used for, and a slogan included along with, the creditor’s name and address, so long as the logo or slogan does not cause this information to exceed the space provided on Form H-24 for that information (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(5)(iii)). If there are multiple creditors, only the name of the creditor completing the Loan Estimate should be used (Comment 37(a)(3)-1). If a mortgage broker is completing the Loan Estimate, the mortgage broker should make a good faith effort to disclose the name and address of the creditor as required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(i). However, if the name of the creditor is not yet known, this space may be left blank (Comment 37(a)(3)-2).

Below the creditor information, the form requires the date that the creditor mails or delivers the disclosures to the consumer; the name and mailing address of the consumer(s) applying for the credit; the address, including the ZIP code, of the property that secures or will secure the transaction, or if the address is unavailable, the location of such property, including a ZIP code; and the contract sale price (or if there is no seller, the estimated value of the property) (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(4)-(6)).

On the top right side of the first page, the form requires the loan term to maturity (stated in years or months, or both, as applicable); and loan purpose (purchase, refinance, construction, or home equity loan) (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(8)-(9)). This section of the form also requires the product type (adjustable rate, step rate, or fixed rate) and, preceding the type, any features that may change the periodic payment, including negative amortization, interest only, step payment, balloon payment, or seasonal payment features, as applicable. If the product has an adjustable or step rate, or a feature that may change the periodic payment, the product disclosure must also be preceded by a disclosure of the duration of any introductory rate or payment period, and the first adjustment period, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)). This section of the form also requires the loan type (conventional, FHA, VA, or other), and loan ID number (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(11)-(12)). Further, there must be a statement of whether the interest rate is locked for a specific time, and if so, the date and time when that period ends. The form must also include a statement that the interest rate, any points, and any lender credits may change unless the interest rate has been locked, and the date and time (including the applicable time zone) at which estimated closing costs expire (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(13)).

Loan Terms table

The Loan Terms table follows the general information requirements on page 1 of the Loan Estimate. For the Loan Terms table, the creditor must disclose the loan amount (the total amount the consumer will borrow, as reflected by the face amount of the note), interest rate applicable to the transaction at consummation, and specified principal and interest payments (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1)-(3)). For each such element, the disclosure must answer the question, either affirmatively or negatively, whether the amount can increase after consummation. If the amount can increase, the loan must disclose additional information (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)). The Loan Terms table must also include information about prepayment penalties and balloon payments.

Loan amount. The loan amount is disclosed in accordance with the face amount of the note. If the loan amount may increase after consummation, the disclosure must include the maximum principal balance for the transaction and the due date of the last payment that may cause the principal balance to increase. The disclosure must also indicate whether the maximum principal balance is potential or is scheduled to occur under the terms of the legal obligation (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1); 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(i)).

Interest rate. If it is an adjustable rate transaction where the interest rate at consummation is not known, the disclosed rate is the fully indexed rate (which means the index value and margin at the time of consummation) (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2)). If the interest may increase after consummation, the creditor must disclose the frequency of interest rate adjustments, the date when the interest rate may first adjust, the maximum interest rate, and the first date when the interest rate can reach the maximum interest rate, followed by a reference to the adjustable rate table required by 12 CFR 1026.37(j) in the Closing Cost Details section of the Loan Estimate. If the loan term may increase based on an interest rate adjustment, that fact must be included, as well as the maximum possible loan term determined in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(8) (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(ii)).

Principal and interest payment. The creditor must disclose the initial periodic payment that will be due under the terms of the legal obligation, immediately preceded by the applicable unit period, and a statement referring to the payment amount that includes any mortgage insurance and escrow payments that are required to be disclosed in the Projected Payments table (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(3)). If the monthly principal and interest payment can increase after closing, the creditor must also disclose: the scheduled frequency of adjustments to the periodic principal and interest payment; the due date of the first adjusted principal and interest payment; the maximum possible periodic principal and interest payment; and the date when the periodic principal and interest payment may first equal the maximum principal and interest payment. (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(iii)). If any adjustments to the principal and interest payment are not the result of a change to the interest rate, the creditor must reference the adjustable payment table disclosure required by 12 CFR 1026.37(i). If there is a period during which only interest is required to be paid, the disclosure must also state that fact and the due date of the last periodic payment of such period (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(iii)).

Prepayment penalties and balloon payments. The Loan Terms table must also state affirmatively or negatively whether the transaction includes a prepayment penalty (for these purposes, a charge imposed for paying all or part of a transaction's principal before the date on which the principal is due, other than a waived, bona fide third-party charge that the creditor imposes if the consumer prepays all of the transaction's principal sooner than 36 months after consummation) or a balloon payment (for these purposes, a payment that is more than two times a regular periodic payment) (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(4) and (5)).

Projected Payments table

The Projected Payments table is located directly below the Loan Terms table on page 1 of the Loan Estimate. The Projected Payments table shows estimates of the periodic payments that the consumer will make over the life of the loan. Creditors must disclose estimates of the following periodic payment amounts in the Projected Payments table: periodic principal and interest (or range of periodic payments); mortgage insurance; estimated escrow; and estimated total monthly payment (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)). Creditors must also disclose estimated taxes, insurance, and assessments, even if not paid with escrow funds (and whether these items will be paid with funds from the consumer's escrow account) (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)).

Generally, the creditor will show in one column the initial periodic payment (or range of payments if required). Depending on the features of the loan, subsequent periodic payments also may be required to be disclosed. However, no more than four separate periodic payments or ranges of payments may be disclosed, beginning with the initial periodic payment. Events that require disclosure of separate periodic payments or ranges include: changes to the periodic principal and interest payment; a scheduled balloon payment; an automatic termination of mortgage insurance or its equivalent; and the anniversary of the due date of the initial periodic payment or range of payments that immediately follows the occurrence of multiple events that change the periodic principal and interest. The regulation addresses how to disclose these events when the event occurs after the third separate periodic payment or range of payments disclosed (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)).

Each separate payment or range of payments must be itemized according to the regulation, including the amount payable for principal and interest. The regulation provides instructions for itemizing payments that include an interest-only payment, payments on loans with an adjustable interest rate, and payments on a loan that has both an adjustable interest rate and a negative amortization feature. Additionally, the regulation requires that each separate periodic payment or range of payments itemizes the maximum amount payable for mortgage insurance premiums corresponding to the principal and interest payment and the amount payable into escrow (with a statement that the amount disclosed can increase over time and a calculation of the total monthly payment) (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)).

Below the estimated total monthly payment, the Projected Payments table discloses estimated taxes, insurance, and assessments. These are stated as a monthly amount and include a statement that the amount may increase over time. The creditor provides these estimates even if there will be no escrow account established for these costs. The table also requires a statement of whether the amount disclosed includes payments for property taxes or other amounts; a description of any such other amounts; and an indication of whether such amounts will be paid by the creditor using escrow account funds. The table also includes a statement that the consumer must separately pay the taxes, insurance, and assessments that are not paid by the creditor using escrow account funds; and a reference to the information disclosed under the subheading on the Loan Estimate titled "Initial Escrow Payment at Closing" (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)).

The creditor estimates property taxes and homeowner's insurance using the taxable assessed value of the real property or cooperative unit securing the transaction after consummation, including the value of any improvements on the property or to be constructed on the property, if known, whether or not such construction will be financed from the proceeds of the transaction, for property taxes, and the replacement costs of the property during the initial year after the transaction, for premiums or other charges for insurance against loss of or damage to property identified in 12 CFR 1026.4(b)(8) (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)).

Costs at Closing table

This table, located at the bottom of page 1, provides disclosures on estimated Closing Costs and estimated Cash to Close (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)). These disclosures offer the consumer a high-level summary of estimated closing costs and cash required to close (including closing costs) and reference the more detailed itemizations found on page 2 of the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)(i)(E) and 12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)(ii)(B)).

Items that are disclosed include an estimate of Total Closing Costs, as well as the key inputs making up this total: Loan Costs, Other Costs, and Lender Credits (and the fact that total closing costs include these amounts) (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)(i)). These disclosures also provide a high-level summary of the estimated amount of cash required to close, which is also itemized more specifically on page 2 of the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)(ii)). The regulation provides an optional alternative Cash to Close table for transactions that do not involve a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing. The creditor may alternatively disclose, using the label "Cash to Close," the cash to or from the consumer (pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iv)), a statement of whether the disclosed estimated amount is due from or to the consumer, and a statement referring the consumer to the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table for transactions without a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing (pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)) (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(2)).

Page 2 of the Loan Estimate contains a good faith itemization of the "Loan Costs" and "Other Costs" associated with the loan (12 CFR 1026.37(f) and (g)). Generally, Loan Costs are those costs paid by the consumer to the creditor and third-party providers of services that the creditor requires to be obtained by the consumer during the origination of the loan (12 CFR 1026.37(f)). Other Costs include taxes, governmental recording fees, and certain other payments involved in the real estate closing process (12 CFR 1026.37(g)). Page 2 also includes an itemized "Calculating Cash to Close" table to show the consumer how the amount of cash needed at closing is calculated (12 CFR 1026.37(h)). In addition, for transactions with adjustable monthly payments not based on changes to the interest rate, or if the transaction is a seasonal payment product (as described in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(ii)(E)), page 2 must include an Adjustable Payment (AP) table with relevant information about how the monthly payments will change (12 CFR 1026.37(i)). Further, for transactions with adjustable interest rates, page 2 must include an Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) table with relevant information about how the interest rate will change (12 CFR 1026.37(j)).

If state law requires additional disclosures, those additional disclosures may be made on a document whose pages are separate from, and not presented as part of, the Loan Estimate (Comments 37(f)(6)-1 and 37(g)(8)-1).

Loan Costs table

This table includes all loan costs associated with the transaction, broken down into an itemization of three types of costs:

- Origination charges that the consumer will pay to each creditor and loan originator for originating and extending credit (including separate itemization for points paid to the creditor to reduce the interest rate as both a percentage of the amount of credit extended and dollar amount) (up to 13 line items); the following items should be itemized separately in the Origination Charges subheading:
  - Compensation paid directly by a consumer to a loan originator that is not also the creditor (Comments 37(f)(1)-2 and -5); or
  - Any charge imposed to pay for a loan level pricing adjustment assessed on the creditor that is passed on to the consumer as a cost at consummation and not as an adjustment to the interest rate (Comment 37(f)(1)-5).
- Services the consumer cannot shop for (items provided by persons other than the creditor or mortgage broker that the consumer cannot shop for and will pay for at settlement, such as appraisal fees and credit report fees) (up to 13 line items); and
- Services the consumer can shop for (such as a pest inspection fee, survey fee, or closing agent fee) (up to 14 line items) (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(2) and (3)).

Regarding origination fees, only charges paid directly by the consumer to compensate a loan originator are included in the itemization. Compensation of a loan originator paid indirectly by the creditor through the interest rate is not itemized (but is itemized on the Closing Disclosure; see below) (Comment 37(f)(1)-2).

NOTE: Items that are a component of title insurance must include the introductory description of "Title -" (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(2)(i) and (g)(4)(i)).

NOTE: The disclosure of "lender credits," as identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii), is required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(i). "Lender credits," as identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii), represent the sum of non-specific lender credits and specific lender credits. Non-specific lender credits are generalized payments from the creditor to the consumer that do not pay for a particular fee on the disclosures provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1). Specific lender credits are specific payments, such as a credit, rebate, or reimbursement, from a creditor to the consumer to pay for a specific fee. Non-specific lender credits and specific lender credits are negative charges to the consumer (Comment 19(e)(3)(i) -5).

The sum of these amounts must be disclosed as Total Loan Costs. The regulation includes a required order and terminology for each item (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(1)-(5)). If the creditor does not have enough lines for each subheading, it must disclose the remaining items as an aggregate number (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(6)(i)). An addendum is not permitted for origination charges or charges the consumer cannot shop for that exceed the maximum number of lines but is permitted for services the consumer can shop for, provided the creditor appropriately references the addendum (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(6)(ii)).

Other Costs table

The Other Costs table captures costs established by government action, determined by standard calculations applied to ongoing fixed costs, or based on an obligation incurred by the consumer independently of any requirement imposed by the creditor (Comment 37(g)-1). The table includes:

- Taxes and other governmental fees (recording fees and other taxes, and transfer taxes paid by the consumer, separately itemized);

- Prepaids (amounts paid by the consumer before the first scheduled payment, such as homeowner's insurance premiums, mortgage insurance premiums, prepaid interest, and property taxes, plus up to three additional line items);

- Initial escrow payment at closing (items that the consumer will be expected to place into a reserve or escrow account at consummation to be applied to recurring periodic charges; these include homeowner's insurance, mortgage insurance, and property taxes, plus up to five additional line items); and

- Other amounts the consumer is likely to pay (such as real estate agent commissions, up to five line items) (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(1)-(4); Comment 37(g)(4)-4).

NOTE: Items that disclose any premiums paid for separate insurance, warranty, guarantee, or event-coverage products not required by the creditor must include the parenthetical description (optional) at the end of the label (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(4)(ii)).

As with Loan Costs, the regulation includes a required order, terminology, and specific information regarding each Other Costs line item, such as the applicable time period covered by the amount paid at consummation and the total amount to be paid. Items that disclose any premiums paid for separate insurance, warranty, guarantee, or event-coverage products not required by the creditor must include the parenthetical description (optional) at the end of the label (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(4)(ii)). An addendum is not permitted; if the creditor does not have enough lines for each subheading, it must disclose the remaining items as an aggregate number (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(8)). The sum of these amounts must be disclosed as a line item as Total Other Costs (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(5)). Below this total, the sum of Total Loan Costs and Total Other Costs, less any lender credits (separately itemized), must be disclosed as a line item as Total Closing Costs (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)).

Calculating Cash to Close table

The Calculating Cash to Close table shows the consumer how the amount of cash needed at closing is calculated (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)). The creditor must itemize the total amount of cash or other funds that the consumer must provide at consummation. The itemization includes:

- Total closing costs. The amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6), labeled "Total Closing Costs" (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(i));

- Closing costs to be financed. The amount of any closing costs to be paid out of loan proceeds, disclosed as a negative number, labeled "Closing Costs Financed (Paid from your Loan Amount)" (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(ii));

  NOTE: The formula for calculating the amount of closing costs financed can be found in (Comment 37(h)(1)(ii)-1).

- Down payment and other funds from the borrower, labeled "Down Payment/Funds from Borrower". The formula for determining this disclosure depends on the type of purchase transaction. (See 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(A).. For a non-purchase transaction, use the Funds from Borrower formula in 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v) as provided for in 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(B).

- Deposit, labeled "Deposit." In a purchase transaction as defined in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(9)(i), the amount that is paid to the seller or held in trust or escrow by an attorney or other party under the terms of the agreement for the sale of the property, disclosed as a negative number; in all other transactions, the amount of zero dollars (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iv));

- Funds for the borrower, labeled "Funds for Borrower". The formula for calculating this disclosure is set forth in (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v));

- Seller credits, labeled "Seller Credits". The amount the seller will pay for total loan costs and total other costs, to the extent known, disclosed as a negative number (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(vi)).

- Adjustments and other credits, labeled "Adjustments and Other Credits". Determined in accordance with (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(vii)); and

- Estimated Cash to Close, labeled "Cash to Close". The sum of the amounts disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(i) to (vii) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(viii)).

For transactions without a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing transactions, the creditor can use the optional alternative table and provide, under the heading Closing Cost Details, the total amount of cash or other funds that must be provided by the consumer at consummation with an itemization of the following component amounts (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)):

- Loan amount. The amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1), labeled "Loan Amount" (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(i));

- Total closing costs. The amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6), disclosed as a negative number if the amount is a positive number and disclosed as a positive number if the amount is a negative number, and labeled "Total Closing Costs" (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(ii));

- Payoffs and payments. The total amount of payoffs and payments to third parties not otherwise disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(f) and (g), labeled "Total Payoffs and Payments" (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iii));
- Cash to or from consumer. The amount of cash or other funds due from or to the consumer and a statement of whether the disclosed estimated amount is due from or to the consumer, calculated by the sum of the loan amount, total closing costs and payoffs and payments under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(i)-(iii)), labeled "Cash to Close" (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iv));
- Closing costs financed. The sum of the amounts disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(i) and (iii) (loan amount and payoffs and payments) but only to the extent that the sum is greater than zero and less than the total closing costs (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)), labeled "Closing Costs Financed (Paid from your Loan Amount)" (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(v)).

Adjustable Payment (AP) table

This table is for transactions with adjustable monthly payments for reasons other than adjustments to the interest rate, or if the transaction is a seasonal payment product. The table provides consumers with relevant information about how the monthly payments will change. If the transaction does not contain such terms, the table may not be on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(i); Comment 37(i)-1).

The AP table requires answers to the following questions:

- Whether there are interest-only payments and, if so, the period during which the interest-only payment would apply (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(1));
- Whether the amount of any periodic payment can be selected by the consumer as an optional payment and, if so, the period during which the consumer can select optional payments (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(2));
- Whether the loan is a step payment product and, if so, the period during which the regular periodic payments are scheduled to increase (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(3));
- Whether the loan is a seasonal payment product and, if so, the period during which the periodic payments are not scheduled (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(4)); and
- A subheading of monthly principal and interest payments, with specified information about the first payment change and amount; frequency of subsequent changes; and maximum periodic payment that may occur during the loan term (and first date the maximum is possible) (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(5).

Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) table

For transactions with adjustable interest rates, an AIR table provides consumers with relevant information about how the interest rate will change (12 CFR 1026.37(j)). The adjustable interest rate table must be completed if the interest rate may increase after consummation. However, if the legal obligation does not permit the interest rate to adjust after consummation, this table is not permitted to appear on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(1); Comment 37(j)-1)).

The AIR table includes the following information (12 CFR 1026.37(j)):

- For non-step-rate products, the index upon which adjustments to the interest rate will be based and the margin that is added to the index to determine the interest rate (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(1));
- For step-rate products, the maximum amount of any adjustments to the interest rate that are scheduled and predetermined (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(2));
- The initial interest rate at consummation (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(3));
- The minimum/maximum interest rate for the loan, after any introductory period expires (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(4));
- The frequency of adjustments (first and subsequent adjustments) (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(5)); and
- Any limits on interest rate changes (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(6)).

Page 3: Additional information about the loan

Page 3 of the Loan Estimate contains contact information, a Comparisons table, an Other Considerations table, and, if desired, a Signature Statement for the consumer to sign to acknowledge receipt (See 12 CFR 1026.37(k), (l), (m), and (n)).

Contact information

The top of page 3 includes the name and NMLSR or License ID number for the creditor and mortgage broker, if any; and name and NMLSR or License ID of individual loan officer who is the primary contact for the consumer, along with that person's email address and phone number (12 CFR 1026.37(k)).

Comparisons table

The Comparisons table follows the contact information and allows consumers to compare loans. Each of these disclosures must be accompanied by a specified descriptive statement (12 CFR 1026.37(l)).

The creditor must provide the:

- Total dollar amount of principal, interest, mortgage insurance, and loan costs scheduled to be paid through the end of the 60th month after the due date of the first periodic payment;
- Total dollar amount of principal scheduled to be paid through the end of the 60th month after the due date of the first periodic payment;

- Annual percentage rate using that term and the abbreviation "APR" and expressed as a percentage; and
- Total interest percentage that the consumer will pay over the life of the loan, expressed as a percentage of the amount of credit extended, using the term "Total Interest Percentage" and the abbreviation "TIP".

The TIP calculation is the same for the Loan Estimate and for the Closing Disclosure: Total interest (including prepaid interest) that the consumer will pay over the life of the loan is divided by the loan amount to arrive at the total interest percentage (TIP) (12 CFR 1026.37(l)(3); 12 CFR 1026.38(o)(5)). The TIP is computed assuming that the consumer makes each monthly payment in full and on time and does not make any overpayments (15 U.S.C. 1638(a)(19); 12 CFR 1026.37(l)(3); Comment 37(l)(3)-1).

To calculate the TIP for fixed-rate loans add the sum of interest payments for the full term of the loan to the amount of prepaid interest and divide that total by the loan amount. To calculate the TIP for a variable-rate loan, compute the amount of interest that the consumer will pay according to the terms of the loan. If the loan has an index and margin, use the index existing at consummation (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2); Comment 17(c)(1)-10). For Adjustable Rate products under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)(A), compute the TIP in accordance with Comment 17(c)(1)-10 (Comment 37(l)(3)-2). Comment 17(c)(1)-10 provides guidance and examples for adjustable mortgages with discounted and premium variable-rate terms. Where the initial rate is not based upon the index or formula used for later interest rate adjustments, the disclosures should reflect a composite annual percentage rate based on the initial rate for as long as it is charged and, for the remainder of the term, the rate that would have been applied using the index or formula at the time of consummation. The rate at consummation need not be used if a contract provides for a delay in the implementation of changes in an index value. For example, if the contract specifies that rate changes are based on the index value in effect 45 days before the change date, creditors may use any index value in effect during the 45-day period before consummation in calculating a composite annual percentage rate (Comment 17(c)(1)-10)). For step-rate products under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)(B), compute the TIP in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(1) and its associated commentary (Comment 37(l)(3)-2). For loans that have a negative amortization feature under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(ii)(A), compute the TIP using the scheduled payment, even if it is a negatively amortizing payment amount, until the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments under the terms of the legal obligation (Comment 37(l)(3)-3).

NOTE: Prepaid interest that is paid by someone other than the consumer is not included in the calculation. Further, if prepaid interest was disclosed as a negative number on the Loan Estimate or the Closing Disclosure, the negative value is used in the TIP calculation (Comment 37(l)(3)-1).

Other Considerations

Below the Comparisons table is a section regarding "other considerations" about the loan. This section includes disclosures on appraisals, assumptions, whether homeowner's insurance is required, applicable late payment fees, a warning about refinancing, whether the creditor intends to service the loan or transfer servicing, liability after foreclosure. The section also provides for an optional, clear and conspicuous statement, if applicable, that the creditor may issue a revised Loan Estimate any time prior to 60 days before consummation pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(F) for transactions involving new construction where the creditor reasonably expects that settlement will occur more than 60 days after the provision of the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(m)).

The consumer is not required to sign the Loan Estimate. If the creditor adds a signature statement on page 3 of the Loan Estimate to confirm receipt by the consumer, it must use the model form language. If the creditor chooses not to use the confirm receipt table, it must include a statement that "You do not have to accept this loan because you have received this form or signed a loan application" (12 CFR 1026.37(n)).

Closing Disclosure – Content of Disclosures for Certain Mortgage Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.38

Closing Disclosure form required – 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(3)(i)

The Closing Disclosure generally must contain the actual terms and costs of the transaction and must satisfy timing and delivery requirements set forth in the rule.

For any loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(f) that are federally related mortgage loans subject to RESPA (which will include most mortgages), creditors must use Form H-25, set forth in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(3)(i) (See also 12 CFR 1024.2(b) for definition of federally related mortgage loan).

For other loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(f) that are not federally related mortgage loans, the disclosures must contain the exact same information and be made with headings, content, and format substantially similar to Form H-25 (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(3)(ii)).

Information required on the Closing Disclosure. As with the Loan Estimate, most disclosures on the Closing Disclosure form are required to be labeled using specific nomenclature, headings, and formatting. Similarly, in some instances, the regulation directs lines on the disclosure to be left blank where there is no charge or sets forth the maximum number of items that may be disclosed. See the regulation, Form H-25, and the Regulation Z procedures for specific obligations regarding each required disclosure.

Rounding. Dollar amounts generally must not be rounded except where noted in the regulation (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(4)(i)). If an amount must be rounded but is composed of other amounts that are not required or permitted to be rounded, the unrounded amounts should be used to calculate the total, and the final sum should be rounded. Conversely, if an amount is required to be rounded and is composed of rounded amounts, the rounded amounts should be used to calculate the total (Comment 38(t)(4)-2). Percentage amounts should not be rounded and are disclosed up to three decimals, as needed, except where noted in the regulation. If a percentage amount is a whole number, only the whole number should be disclosed, with no decimals (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(4)(ii)).

Page 1: General information, loan terms, projected payments, and costs at closing

General information, the Loan Terms table, the Projected Payments table, and the Costs at Closing table are disclosed on the first page of the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(a), (b), (c), and (d)). These disclosures mirror the disclosures in the Loan Estimate, and there is a required statement to compare the document with the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(2)).

Page 1 of the Closing Disclosure is similar, but not identical, to the Loan Estimate. Page 1 of the Closing Disclosure provides general closing, transaction, and loan information. It also includes a Loan Terms table with descriptions of applicable information about the loan, a Projected Payments table, and a summary Costs at Closing table (12 CFR 1026.38(a)-(d)).

General information

The top of page 1 of the Closing Disclosure requires the title "Closing Disclosure" and a specified statement to compare the disclosure with the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(1) and (2)). The top of page 1 also requires general closing, transaction, and loan information.

Closing information includes the date that the Closing Disclosure was delivered to the consumer, closing date (i.e., the date of consummation), the disbursement date, settlement agent conducting the closing, file number assigned by the settlement agent, property address or location, and sale price (or appraised property value if there is no seller) (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)). For transactions without a seller for which the creditor has not obtained an appraisal, the creditor may disclose the estimated value of the property, using the estimate provided by the consumer at application or the estimate the creditor used to determine approval of the credit transaction (Comment 38(a)(3)(vii)-1).

Transaction information includes the borrower's name and mailing address, the seller's name and mailing address, and the name of the creditor making the disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(4)).

Loan information includes the loan term, purpose, product, loan type, loan ID number (using the same number as on the Loan Estimate), and mortgage insurance case number (MIC #), if required by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5)). Other than the MIC #, this information is determined by the same definitions for those items on the Loan Estimate, updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation (Comment 38(a)(5)-1).

Loan Terms table

The Loan Terms table is located under the above-described general information disclosures. The information for this table is the same as that required in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(b), updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation (12 CFR 1026.38(b)).

Projected Payments table

The Projected Payments table is located directly below the Loan Terms table on page 1 of the Closing Disclosure. The information for this table is generally the same as that required in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1) through (4), updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation (other than the reference to closing cost details required by 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(vi)). The estimated escrow payments disclosed on the Closing Disclosure for transactions subject to RESPA are determined under the escrow account analysis described in Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17. For transactions not subject to RESPA, estimated escrow payments may be determined under the escrow account analysis described in Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17 or in the manner set forth in 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5). There is also a required reference to the detailed escrow account disclosures on page 4 of the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(c)).

Costs at Closing table

This table, located at the bottom of page 1, provides disclosures on Closing Costs and Cash to Close (12 CFR 1026.38(d)). These disclosures offer the consumer a high-level summary of closing costs and reference the more detailed itemizations found on pages 2 and 3 of the Closing Disclosure 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(1)(i)(E); (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(1)(ii)(B)).

Items that are disclosed on the Cash at Closing table include Total Closing Costs, as well as the key inputs making up this total: Loan Costs and Other Costs, less Lender Credits (and the fact that total closing costs include these amounts) (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(1)(i)). The table also discloses Cash Required to Close (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(1)(ii)). For transactions without a seller or simultaneous subordinate financing transactions, the creditor must use the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table when the alternative costs at closing table was used on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2)).

Page 2: Closing Cost Details; Loan costs and other costs

Page 2 of the Closing Disclosure contains an itemization of the “Loan Costs” and “Other Costs” associated with the loan (12 CFR 1026.38(f), (g), and (h)). In each case, the amounts paid by the consumer, seller, and others are separately disclosed. For items paid by the consumer or seller, amounts that are paid at closing are disclosed in a column separately from amounts paid before closing (12 CFR 1026.38(f)).

The number of items in the Loan Costs and Other Costs tables can be expanded and deleted to accommodate the disclosure of additional line items and to keep the Loan Costs and Other Costs tables on page 2 of the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(iv)(A); Comment 38(t)(5)(iv)-2). However, items that are required to be disclosed even if they are not charged to the consumer (such as Points in the Origination Charges subheading) cannot be deleted (Comment 38(t)(5)(iv)-1).

Further, the Loan Costs and Other Costs tables can be disclosed on two separate pages of the Closing Disclosure but only if the page cannot accommodate all of the costs required to be disclosed on one page (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(iv)(B); Comment 38(t)(5)(iv)-2). When used, these pages are numbered page 2a and 2b (Comment 38(t)(5)(iv)-3). For an example of this permissible change to the Closing Disclosure, see Form H-25(H) of Appendix H to Regulation Z.

Loan Costs table

All loan costs associated with the transaction are listed in a table under the heading "Loan Costs", with the items and amounts listed under four subheadings:

- Origination charges,
- Services borrower did not shop for,
- Services borrower did shop for, and
- Total loan costs (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(1) through (f)(5).

Items should generally be the same as disclosed on the Loan Estimate, updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation, except as discussed below (12 CFR 1026.38(f)).

Origination Charges. All loan originator compensation is disclosed as an origination charge, including compensation from the creditor to a third-party loan originator (which was not disclosed on the Loan Estimate). Compensation from the consumer to a third-party loan originator is designated as Borrower-Paid at Closing or before closing on the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(1); Comment 38(f)(1)-2). Compensation from the creditor to a third-party loan originator is designated as Paid by Others on the Closing Disclosure (Comment 38(f)(1)-2). This line item must also disclose the name of the loan originator ultimately receiving the payment (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(1)). A designation of "(L)" can be listed with the amount to indicate that the creditor pays the compensation at consummation. This is the same as the amount of third-party compensation included in points and fees for purposes of determining the consumer's ability to repay the loan. Compensation to individual loan originators is not calculated or disclosed on the Closing Disclosure (Comment 38(f)(1)-3).

Services the consumer did or did not shop for. The following are disclosed under "Services Borrower Did Not Shop For," regardless of where it was located on the Loan Estimate:

- Items that the consumer could have shopped for but did not.
- When a consumer chooses a provider that is on the written list of providers for a service on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(2)).

Items are re-alphabetized when an item is added to or removed from a particular subheading.

The amounts that are designated as Borrower-Paid at or before closing are subtotaled as Total Loan Costs (Borrower-Paid) (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(5)). Amounts designated as Seller-Paid or Paid by Others are not included in this subtotal (rather, they are included elsewhere in the Closing Cost Subtotal) (Comment 38(f)(5)-1; 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2)).

Other Costs Table

Items should generally be the same as disclosed on the Loan Estimate, updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation, except as discussed below (12 CFR 1026.38(g)).

Taxes and other government fees. Itemized transfer taxes paid by the consumer and by the seller are disclosed, instead of just the sum total of transfer taxes to be paid by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(1)).

Prepaids. An itemization of homeowner's insurance premiums, mortgage insurance premiums, prepaid interest, property taxes and a maximum of three additional items (See 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(2)), the name of the person ultimately receiving the payment or government entity assessing the property tax, and the total of all such itemized amounts that are designated Borrower-Paid at or before closing. If no interest is collected prior to the interest collected with the first monthly payment, zero dollars should be disclosed (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(2); Comment 38(g)(2)-3).

Initial escrow payment at closing. Property taxes paid during different time periods may be disclosed as separate items (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(3)).

This section of the table also includes, as the last item disclosed, an Aggregate Adjustment calculated pursuant to Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17(d)(2) (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(3)).

Other. This section of the table includes charges for services that are required or obtained in the real estate closing by the consumer, the seller, or other party, and the name of the person ultimately receiving the payment, even if not initially disclosed on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(4)). This includes all real estate brokerage fees, homeowner's or condominium association charges paid at consummation, home warranties, inspection fees, and other fees that are part of the real estate closing but not required by the creditor or not disclosed elsewhere on the Closing Disclosure (Comment 38(g)(4)-1). The amount of real estate commissions paid must be the total amount paid to any real estate brokerage as a commission, regardless of the identity of the party holding any earnest money deposit (Comment 38(g)(4)-4).

If there are costs that are a component of title insurance services, their label must begin with "Title -" and, if there are costs designated Borrower-Paid at or before closing for any premiums paid for separate insurance, warranty, guarantee, or event-coverage products, they must be labeled "(optional)" (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(4)(i) and (ii)).

The sum of any of these amounts that are Borrower-Paid must be disclosed as a line item as Total Other Costs (Borrower-Paid) (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(5)). Below this total, the sum of Total Loan Costs and Total Other Costs (Borrower-Paid), less any lender credits (separately itemized), must be disclosed as a line item as Total Closing Costs (Borrower-Paid) (12 CFR 1026.38(g) and (h)).

Page 3: Calculating cash to close, summaries of transactions, and alternatives for transactions without a seller

Page 3 of the Closing Disclosure contains the Calculating Cash to Close table and Summaries of Transactions tables (12 CFR 1026.38(i), (j), and (k)).

Calculating Cash to Close

The Calculating Cash to Close table permits the consumer to see what costs have changed from the Loan Estimate. This table contains nine items:

- Total Closing Costs,
- Closing Costs Paid before Closing,
- Closing Costs Financed,
- Down Payment/Funds from Borrower,
- Deposit,
- Funds for Borrower,
- Seller Credits,
- Adjustments and other Credits, and
- Total Cash to Close (12 CFR 1026.38(i)).

The table has three columns that disclose (1) the amount for each item as it was disclosed on the most recent Loan Estimate provided to the consumer, (2) the final amount for the item, and (3) an answer to the question "Did this change?" (12 CFR 1026.38(i)). The amounts disclosed in the Loan Estimate column will be the amounts disclosed on the most recent Loan Estimate (or revised Loan Estimate) provided to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(i), (3)(i), (4)(i), (5)(i), (6)(i), (7)(i), (8)(i), (9)(i).

When amounts have changed, the disclosure must indicate where the consumer can find the amounts that have changed since being provided the Loan Estimate. For example, if the Seller Credit amount changed, the creditor can indicate that the consumer should "See Seller Credits in Section L" (Comment 38(i)-3). Other examples of language for these items are found in example Form H-25(B) in Appendix H to Regulation Z.

Increases in total closing costs that exceed legal limits. When the increase in Total Closing Costs exceeds the legal limits on closing costs set forth in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3), the form must disclose a statement that an increase in closing costs exceeds the legal limits by the dollar amount of the excess in the "Did this change?" column (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(iii)(A)(3)). A statement directing the consumer to the Lender Credit on page 2 or a principal reduction must also be included if either is provided as a refund for the excess amount (Comment 38(i)(1)(iii)(A)-3). The dollar amount must be the sum of all excess amounts, taking into account the different methods of calculating excesses of the limitations on increases in closing costs under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) and (ii) (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(iii)(A)(3)).

Closing Costs Paid Before Closing. The amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate column for the "Closing Costs Paid Before Closing" item is zero dollars (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(2)(i)). The Final column should disclose the same amount designated as Borrower-Paid Before Closing in the Closing Costs Subtotals of the Other Costs table on page 2 of the Closing Disclosure. Under the subheading "Did this change?" if the amount disclosed here is different from the amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate, include a statement of that fact; and if it is equal to the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate, include a statement of that fact (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(2)(iii)).

Alternative Calculating Cash to Close table

For transactions without a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing where the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table was used on the Loan Estimate, the Closing Disclosure must also use the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table under (12 CFR 1026.38(e)). These items include:

- Loan amount,
- Total closing costs,
- Closing costs paid before closing,
- Payoffs and payments,
- Cash to or from consumer, and
- Closing costs financed.

The table has three columns that disclose (1) the amount for each item as it was disclosed on the most recent Loan Estimate provided to the consumer, (2) the final amount for the item, and (3) an answer to the question "Did this change?" along with a statement of whether the amount increased, decreased, or is equal to the amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.38(e), Comment 38(e)-6). Generally, the amounts disclosed in the Loan Estimate column will be the Loan Amount, Total Closing Costs, Closing Costs Paid before Closing, and the Total Payoffs and Payments (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(1)(i), (2)(i), (3)(i), (4)(i)).

Cash to or from the consumer is disclosed in the first two columns of the row labeled Cash to Close. The first column contains amounts disclosed in the most recent Loan Estimate provided to the consumer. The second column discloses the final amount due from or to the consumer, calculated by the sum of the amounts disclosed (pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(e)(1)(i), (2)(i), (3)(i), (4)(i)) as final Loan Amount, Total Closing Costs, Closing Costs Paid before Closing, and the Total Payoffs and Payments, disclosed as a positive number with the statement of whether the funds are due from or to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(5)).

Closing Costs Financed are disclosed in the third column of the row labeled Cash to Close in the Calculating Cash to Close table. This amount is calculated by the sum of the final Loan Amount (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(1)(ii)) and the final Total Payoffs and Payments (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(4)(ii)), but only to the extent that the sum is greater than zero and less than or equal to the sum of borrower-paid closing costs (disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2)), designated Borrower-Paid Before Closing (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(6)).

Summaries of Transactions table

The Summaries of Transactions table contains required itemizations of the borrower's and the seller's transactions (12 CFR 1026.38(j)-(k)). The table discloses amounts due from or payable to the consumer and seller at closing, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1) and (2)). A separate Closing Disclosure can be provided to the consumer and the seller that does not reflect the other party's costs and credits by omitting specified disclosures on each separate Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(v), (vi), (ix)).

Additional pages may be attached to the Closing Disclosure to add lines to provide a complete listing of all items required to be shown on the Closing Disclosure and for customary recitals and information used locally in real estate closings (for example, breakdown of payoff figures, a breakdown of the consumer's total monthly mortgage payments, an accounting of debits received and check disbursements, a statement stating receipt of funds, applicable special stipulations between consumer and seller, and the date funds are transferred) (Comment 38(j)-6).

Generally, the Summaries of Transactions table is similar to the Summary of Borrower's Transaction and Summary of Seller's Transaction tables on the HUD-1 Settlement Statement provided under Regulation X prior to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure rule taking effect. There are some modifications to the Closing Disclosure related to the handling of the disclosure of the consumer's deposit, the disclosure of credits, and specific guidance on other matters that may not have been clear in the HUD-1 instructions.

In transactions without a seller, the Seller-Paid column for Closing Costs may be deleted on page 2, and a Payoffs and Payments table may be substituted for the Summaries of Transactions table and placed before the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table on page 3 of the closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B)). For an example, see page 3 of Form H-25(J) of Appendix H to Regulation Z.

In some transactions, there are contractual or legal limits on what refunds may be provided to the consumer, and, instead, principal is reduced. Principal reductions may also be utilized in circumstances where refunds do not need to be provided. In transactions with a principal reduction that occurs immediately or very soon after closing, the principal reduction must be disclosed in the Summaries of Transactions table on the standard Closing Disclosure pursuant to (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(v)).

Borrower's Transaction

Amounts due from the borrower. The sale price of the property, sale price of any personal property included in the sale, and total amount of closing costs designated Borrower-Paid at Closing, calculated with lender credits as a negative number pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2) and (h)(3) (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(ii)-(iv)). The contract sale price of the property does not include the price of tangible personal property if the buyer and seller have agreed to a separate price for such items. Manufactured homes are not considered personal property for this disclosure (Comment 38(j)(1)(ii)-1).

Adjustments. This includes a description and the amount of any additional items that the seller has paid prior to the real estate closing but reimbursed by the consumer at closing, and a description and the amount of any other items owed by the consumer at the real estate closing not otherwise disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(f), (g), or (j) (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(v)). Amounts not otherwise disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(j) that are owed to the seller but payable to the consumer after the real estate closing must be disclosed under the heading "Adjustments," including rent that the consumer will collect after closing for a period of time prior to the real estate closing, and a tenant's security deposit (Comment 38(j)(1)(v)-1). Other consumer charges owed by the consumer at the real estate closing and not otherwise disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(f), (g), and (j) will not have a corresponding credit in the summary of the seller's transaction under 12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(iv) (Comments 38(j)(1)(v)-1 and -2).

Adjustments for items paid by seller in advance. The prorated amount of prepaid taxes due from the consumer to reimburse the seller, and the time periods. The taxes are labeled city/town taxes, county taxes, and/or assessments as appropriate (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(vi)-(ix)). If there are additional items paid by the seller and due from the consumer, they are also itemized. Examples include taxes paid in advance, flood or insurance premiums if the insurance is under the same policy, mortgage insurance for assumed loans, condominium assessments, fuel or supplies on hand, and ground rent paid in advance (Comment 38(j)(1)(x)-1).

Itemization of amounts already paid by or on behalf of borrower. These amounts are itemized in the second part of the Summary of Transactions table. These include the following:

- Deposits, and if there is no deposit, this line is left blank. If the deposit was reduced to pay closing charges prior to closing, the reduction should be shown in the Closing Cost Detail table designated as Borrower-Paid Before Closing (Comments 38(j)(2)(ii)-1 and -2).
- The loan amount is the construction or purchase loan amount for a structure or purchase of a new manufactured home that is real property. For construction loans or loans for manufactured homes that are real property under state law, the loan amount for the current transaction must be disclosed, and the sales price of the land and the construction cost or the price of the manufactured home should be disclosed separately (Comment 38(j)(2)(iii)-1).
- Existing loans assumed or taken subject to are itemized with the outstanding amount of any loans that the consumer is assuming or taking title subject to (Comment 38(j)(2)(iv)-1)

- If the seller is providing a lump sum at closing that is not otherwise itemized, to pay for loan costs and any other obligations of the seller to be paid directly to the consumer, this amount is labeled Seller Credit (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(v)). When the consumer receives a generalized credit from the seller for closing costs or where the seller (typically a builder) is making an allowance to the consumer for items to purchase separately, the amount of the credit must be disclosed. However, if the Seller Credit is attributable to a specific loan cost or other cost listed in the Closing Cost Details tables, that amount should be reflected in the Seller-Paid column in the Closing Cost Details tables.

- Any other obligations of the seller to be paid directly to the consumer, such as for issues identified at a walk-through of the property prior to closing, are disclosed here (Comments 38(j)(2)(v)-1 and-2).

- Other credits are itemized with a description and the amounts paid by or on behalf of the consumer, and not otherwise disclosed. Examples of other credits include credits from a real estate agent not attributable to a specific closing cost, subordinate financing proceeds, satisfaction of existing subordinate liens by consumer, transferred escrow balances, gift funds provided at closing, and any additional amounts not already disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(f), (g), and (j)(2) that are owed to the consumer but payable to the seller before the real estate closing ("Adjustments"), including rent paid to the seller from a tenant before the real estate closing for a period extending beyond the closing (Comments 38(j)(2)(vi)-1 through -6).

Adjustments for items unpaid by seller include prorated unpaid taxes due from the seller to reimburse the consumer at closing, along with the time period and labeled city/town taxes, county taxes, and/or assessments as appropriate (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(vii)-(x)). If there are additional items that have not been paid and that the consumer is expected to pay after closing but which are attributable to the time prior to closing, they are itemized here (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(xi)). Examples include utilities used but not paid for by the seller, or interest on a loan assumption (Comment 38(j)(2)(xi)-1).

Calculation of the borrower's transaction is disclosed by including the Total Due from Borrower at Closing, the amount labeled Total Paid Already by or on Behalf of Borrower at Closing, if any, disclosed as a negative number, and a statement that the resulting amount is due from or to the consumer, and labeled Cash to Close (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(3)).

Items paid outside of closing are costs that are not paid from closing funds but would otherwise be part of the borrower's transaction table should be marked as "P.O.C." for paid outside of closing. There must also be a statement of the party making the payment, such as the consumer, seller, loan originator, real estate agent, or any other person. For an example, see Form H-25(D) of Appendix H (Comment 38(j)(4)(i)-1).

Seller's Transaction

Amounts due to the seller include the sale price of the property, sale price of any personal property included in the sale, and a description and the amount of other items paid to the seller by the consumer pursuant to a contract, such as charges that were not disclosed on the Loan Estimate, or items paid by the seller prior to closing but reimbursed by the consumer at closing (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(ii)-(iv)).

Adjustments for items paid by seller in advance include the prorated amount of prepaid taxes due from the consumer to reimburse the seller, and the time periods. The taxes are labeled city/town taxes, county taxes, and/or assessments as appropriate (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(v)-(viii)). If there are additional items paid by the seller and due from the consumer, they are also itemized (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(ix)).

Itemization of amounts due from seller at closing are itemized in the second part of the Summary of Transactions table. These include the amount of any deposits disbursed to the seller prior to closing and seller-paid closing costs. The itemization also includes the amount of any existing loans that the consumer is assuming and the amounts of any loan secured by a first lien or a second lien on the property that will be paid off. In addition, the itemization includes seller credits, an amount that the seller will provide at the closing as a lump sum, not otherwise itemized, to pay for loan costs and other costs and any other obligations of the seller to be paid directly to the consumer. The amounts and a description of any and all other obligations required to be paid by the seller at closing are disclosed, including any lien-related payoffs, fees, or obligations (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(ii)-(vii)).

Adjustments for items unpaid by seller include prorated unpaid taxes due from the seller to reimburse the consumer at closing, along with the time period and labeled city/town taxes, county taxes, and/or assessments as appropriate (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(x)-(xii)). If there are additional items that have not been paid and that the consumer is expected to pay after closing but which are attributable to the time prior to closing, they are itemized here (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(xiii)).

Calculation of the seller's transaction is disclosed by including the Total Due to Seller at Closing, the amount labeled Total Due from Seller at Closing, if any, disclosed as a negative number, and a statement that the resulting amount is due from or to the seller, and labeled Cash (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(3)).

Items paid outside of closing are costs that are not paid from closing funds but that would otherwise be part of the seller's transaction table should be marked as "P.O.C." for paid outside of closing. There must also be a statement of the party making the payment (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(4)).

Page 4: Additional information about this loan

Page 4 of the Closing Disclosure groups several required loan disclosures together, generally using specified language, including:

- Information concerning future assumption of the loan by a subsequent purchaser required by 12 CFR 1026.37(m)(2) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(1));

- Whether the legal obligation contains a demand feature that can require early payment of the loan (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(2));
- The terms of the legal obligation that impose a fee for a late payment, including the amount of time that passes before a fee is imposed and the amount of such fee or how it is calculated (as required by 12 CFR 1026.37(m)(4) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(3));
- Whether the regular periodic payments can cause the principal balance of the loan to increase (i.e., whether there could be negative amortization) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(4));
- The creditor's policy regarding partial payments by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(5));
- A statement that the consumer is granting a security interest in the property (along with an identification of the property) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(6)); and
- Specified information related to any escrow account held by the servicer, including specified estimated escrow costs over the first year after consummation (or a statement that an escrow account has not been established, with a description of specified estimated property costs during the first year after consummation) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)).

If the periodic principal and interest payment may change after consummation, other than due to a change in interest rate or where the loan is a seasonal payment product, page 4 of the Closing Disclosure must also include an Adjustable Payment (AP) table (12 CFR 1026.38(m)). If the loan's interest rate may increase after consummation, page 4 of the Closing Disclosure must also include the Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) table (12 CFR 1026.38(n)). These are the tables required in the Loan Estimate at 12 CFR 1026.37(i) and (j), respectively, updated to reflect the terms of the loan at consummation.

Page 5: Loan calculations, other disclosures, and contact information

Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure includes a Loan Calculations table, as well as specified other disclosures, contact information for the CFPB for questions, contact information for participants in the transaction, and if desired by the creditor, a signature table to confirm receipt of the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(o)-(s)).

Loan Calculations table

The Loan Calculations table discloses:

- Total of Payments (total paid by the consumer after all scheduled payments of principal, interest, mortgage insurance, and loan costs are made);
- Finance Charge;
- Amount Financed;
- Annual Percentage Rate (APR); and

- Total Interest Percentage (TIP) (the total amount of interest paid over the loan term as a percentage of the loan amount) (12 CFR 1026.38(o); 12 CFR 1026.37(l)(3) and its commentary).

  The APR and TIP amounts should be updated from the amounts disclosed on the Loan Estimate to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation. The TIP calculation is set forth in 12 CFR 1026.37(l)(3) and its commentary.

  NOTE: See the discussion on calculating the TIP for the comparison table on page 3 of the Loan Estimate.

Other Disclosures table

The Other Disclosures table requires a notice regarding the lender's obligation to provide a free copy of the appraisal (for higher-priced mortgage loans under 12 CFR 1026.35 and loans covered by the Equal Credit Opportunity Act); a specified warning about consequences of nonpayment under the contract, whether state law provides for continued consumer liability after foreclosure, a statement concerning the consumer's ability to refinance the loan, and a statement concerning the extent that the interest on the loan can be included as a tax deduction by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(p)).

Contact information table

For each lender, mortgage broker, real estate broker (buyer and seller), and settlement agent, the contact information table discloses the name, address, NMLS or state license ID (as applicable), contact name of an individual primary contact for the consumer (and NMLS ID or license ID for that person), email, and phone number (12 CFR 1026.38(r)).

Mortgage Transfer Disclosures– 12 CFR 1026.39

Notice of new owner – No later than 30 calendar days after the date on which a mortgage loan is acquired by or otherwise sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred[43] to a third party, the "covered person"[44] shall notify the consumer clearly and conspicuously in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep, of such transfer and include:

- Identification of the loan that was sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred;
- Name, address, and telephone number of the covered person;
- Date of transfer;
- Name, address, and telephone number of an agent or party having authority, on behalf of the covered person, to receive notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer's payments on the mortgage loan;
- Location where transfer of ownership of the debt to the covered person is or may be recorded in public records or, alternatively, that the transfer of ownership has not been recorded in public records at the time the disclosure is provided; and
- At the option of the covered person, any other information regarding the transaction.

[43] The date of transfer to the covered person may, at the covered person's option, be either the date of acquisition recognized in the books and records of the acquiring party or the date of transfer recognized in the books and records of the transferring party.
[44] A "covered person" means any person, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(22), who becomes the owner of an existing mortgage loan by acquiring legal title to the debt obligation, whether through a purchase, assignment, or other transfer, and who acquires more than one mortgage loan in any 12-month period. For purposes of this section, a servicer of a mortgage loan shall not be treated as the owner of the obligation if the servicer holds title to the loan or it is assigned to the servicer solely for the administrative convenience of the servicer in servicing the obligation. See 12 CFR 1026.39(a)(1).

This notice of sale or transfer must be provided for any consumer credit transaction that is secured by the principal dwelling of a consumer, as well as a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling or real property. Thus, it applies to both closed-end mortgage loans and open-end home equity lines of credit. This notification is required of the covered person even if the loan servicer remains the same.

Regulation Z also establishes special rules regarding the delivery of the notice when there is more than one covered person. In a joint acquisition of a loan, the covered persons must provide a single disclosure that lists the contact information for all covered persons. However, if one of the covered persons is authorized to receive a notice of rescission and to resolve issues concerning the consumer's payments, the disclosure may state contact information only for that covered person. In addition, if the multiple covered persons each acquire a partial interest in the loan pursuant to separate and unrelated agreements, they may provide either a single notice or separate notices. Finally, if a covered person acquires a loan and subsequently transfers it to another covered person, a single notice may be provided on behalf of both of them, as long as the notice satisfies the timing and content requirements with respect to each of them.

In addition, there are three exceptions to the notice requirement to provide the notice of sale or transfer:

- The covered person sells, assigns, or otherwise transfers legal title to the mortgage loan on or before the 30th calendar day following the date of transfer on which it acquired the mortgage loan;
- The mortgage loan is transferred to the covered person in connection with a repurchase agreement that obligates the transferring party to repurchase the mortgage loan (unless the transferring party does not repurchase the mortgage loan); or
- The covered person acquires only a partial interest in the mortgage loan and the agent or party authorized to receive the consumer's rescission notice and resolve issues concerning the consumer's payments on the mortgage loan does not change as a result of that transfer.

If, upon confirmation, a servicer provides a confirmed successor in interest who is not liable on the mortgage loan obligation with an optional notice and acknowledgment form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1), the servicer is not required to provide to the confirmed successor in interest the notice of sale or transfer unless and until the confirmed successor in interest either assumes the mortgage loan obligation under state law or has provided the servicer an executed acknowledgment in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1)(iv), that the confirmed successor in interest has not revoked (12 CFR 1026.39(f)).

Mortgage transfer notices – partial payment policies

If a creditor or servicer is required by Regulation Z to provide mortgage transfer notices when the ownership of a mortgage loan is being transferred, the notice must include information related to the partial payment policy that will apply to the mortgage loan. This post-consummation partial payment disclosure is required for a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling or real property, other than a reverse mortgage (12 CFR 1026.39(a) and (d)).

The partial payment disclosure must include (12 CFR 1026.39(d)(5)):

- The heading "Partial Payment" over all of the following additional information:
  - If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are accepted, a statement that the covered person, using the term "lender," may accept partial payments and apply such payments to the consumer's loan;
  - If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are accepted but not applied to a consumer's loan until the consumer pays the remainder of the full amount due, a statement that the covered person, using the term "lender," may hold partial payments in a separate account until the consumer pays the remainder of the payment and then apply the full periodic payment to the consumer's loan;
  - If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are not accepted, a statement that the covered person, using the term "lender," does not accept any partial payments; and
  - A statement that, if the loan is sold, the new covered person, using the term "lender," may have a different policy.

The text illustrating the disclosure in Form H-25 may be modified to suit the format of the mortgage transfer notice. Any modifications must be appropriate and not affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure (Comment 39(d)(5)-1).

Periodic Statements for Residential Mortgage Loans – 12 CFR 1026.41

Creditors, assignees, or servicers[45] of closed-end mortgages are generally required to provide consumers with periodic statements for each billing cycle unless the loan is a fixed-rate loan and the servicer provides the consumer with a coupon book meeting certain conditions. Periodic statements must be provided by the servicer within a reasonably prompt time after the payment is due, or at the end of any courtesy period provided by the servicer for the previous billing cycle. Delivering, emailing or placing the periodic statements in the mail within four days of the close of the courtesy period of the previous billing cycle is generally acceptable. However, periodic statements are not required for:

[45] Creditors, assignees, and servicers are all subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.41, as applicable. Creditors, assignees, or servicers may decide among themselves which of them will provide the required disclosures. However, establishing a business relationship where one party agrees to provide disclosures on behalf of the other parties does not absolve all other parties from their legal obligations. However, a creditor or assignee that currently does not own the mortgage loan or mortgage servicing rights is not subject to the periodic statement requirement.

- Reverse mortgage transactions covered under 12 CFR 1026.33;
- Mortgage loans secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan;
- Fixed-rate loans where the servicer currently provides consumers with coupon books that contain certain specified account information, contact information for the servicer, delinquency information (if applicable), and information that consumers can use to obtain more information about their account;
- Creditors, assignees, or servicers that meet the "small servicer" exemption;

  NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) and (iii) define a "small servicer" and provide clarification how a small servicer will be determined. A small servicer is a servicer that: (1) services, together with any affiliates, 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, for all of which it or an affiliate is the creditor or assignee, (2) meets the definition of a Housing Finance Agency under 24 CFR 266.5, or (3) is a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit entity is the creditor. To determine whether a servicer is a small servicer, generally, a servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliate as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. A servicer that ceases to qualify as a small servicer has the later of six months from the time it ceases to qualify or until the next January 1 to come into compliance with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.41. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in (12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5)).

- A mortgage loan while the consumer is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the U.S. Code. Servicers, however, are required to send modified periodic statements (or coupon books) to consumers who have filed for bankruptcy, subject to certain exceptions (See the Certain Consumers in Bankruptcy discussion below);
- Charged-off loans, if the servicer will not charge any additional fees or interest on the account and provides a periodic statement including additional disclosures related to the effects of charge-off in accordance with (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6));
- A successor in interest under certain conditions: if, upon confirmation, a servicer provides a confirmed successor in interest who is not liable on the mortgage loan obligation with an optional notice and acknowledgment form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1), the servicer is not required to provide to the confirmed successor in interest a periodic statement unless and until the confirmed successor in interest either assumes the mortgage loan obligation under state law or has provided the servicer an executed acknowledgment in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR1024.32(c)(1)(iv), that the confirmed successor in interest has not revoked (12 CFR 1026.41(g)).

Servicers must provide consumers with the following information in the specified format on the periodic statements:

Amount Due

- The payment due date, the amount of any late payment fee, the date that late payment fees will be assessed to the consumer's account if timely payment is not made, and the amount due, which must be shown more prominently than other disclosures on the page;

  NOTE: If the transaction has multiple payment options, the amount due under each of the payment options must be provided.

The commentary to Regulation Z clarifies how servicers must disclose the amount due on periodic statements when the mortgage loan has been accelerated, is in a temporary loss mitigation program, or has been permanently modified. The commentary states the following:

- Acceleration. If the balance of a mortgage loan has been accelerated but the servicer will accept a lesser amount to reinstate the loan, the amount due must identify only the lesser amount that will be accepted to reinstate the loan. The periodic statement must be accurate when provided and should indicate, if applicable, that the amount due is accurate only for a specified period of time. For example, the statement may include language such as "as of [date]" or "good through [date]" and provide an amount due that will reinstate the loan as of that date or good through that date, respectively (Comment 41(d)(1)-1).

- Temporary loss mitigation programs. If the consumer has agreed to a temporary loss mitigation program, the amount due may identify either the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program or the amount due according to the loan contract (Comment 41(d)(1)-2).

  - Permanent loan modifications. If the loan contract has been permanently modified, the amount due must identify only the amount due under the modified loan contract (Comment 41(d)(1)-3).

Explanation of Amount Due

- An explanation of the amount due, including the monthly payment amount with a breakdown of how much will be applied to principal, interest, and escrow, the total sum of any fees/charges imposed since the last statement, and any payment amount past due. Mortgage loans with multiple payment options must also have a breakdown of each payment option, along with information regarding how each payment option will impact the principal;

NOTE: The commentary to Regulation Z clarifies the explanation of amount due disclosures that must be included on periodic statements when mortgage loans have been accelerated or are in temporary loss mitigation programs. The commentary states the following:

- Acceleration. If the balance of a mortgage loan has been accelerated but the servicer will accept a lesser amount to reinstate the loan, the explanation of amount due must list both the reinstatement amount that is disclosed as the amount due and the accelerated amount. The servicer is not required to list the monthly payment amount that would otherwise be required under (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(2)(i)).

  The periodic statement must also include an explanation that the reinstatement amount will be accepted to reinstate the loan through the "as of [date]" or "good through [date]," as applicable, along with any special instructions for submitting the payment. The explanation should be on the front page of the statement or, alternatively, may be included on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement. The explanation may include related information, such as a statement that the amount disclosed is "not a payoff amount" (Comment 41(d)(2)-1).

- Temporary loss mitigation programs. If the consumer has agreed to a temporary loss mitigation program and the amount due identifies the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program, the explanation of amount due must include both the amount due according to the loan contract and the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program. The statement must also include an explanation that the amount due is being disclosed as a different amount because of the temporary loss mitigation program. The explanation should be on the front page of the statement or, alternatively, may be included on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement or in a separate letter (Comment 41(d)(2)-2).

Past Payment Breakdown

- The total of all payments received since the last statement and the total of all payments received since the start of the calendar year, including, for each payment, a breakdown of how the payment(s) was applied to principal, interest, escrow, and/or fees and charges, and any amount held in a suspense or unapplied funds account (if applicable);

Transaction Activity

- A list of transaction activity (including dates, a brief description, and amount) for the current billing cycle, including any credits or debits that affect the current amount due, with the date, amount, and brief description of each transaction;

Partial Payment Information

- If a statement reflects a past partial payment held in a suspense or unapplied funds account, information explaining what the consumer must do to have the payment applied to the mortgage. Information must be on the front page or a separate page of the statement or separate letter;

Contact Information

- Contact information for the servicer, including a toll-free telephone number and email address (if applicable) that the consumer may use to obtain information regarding the account. Contact information must be on the front page of the statement; and

Account Information

- Account information, including the outstanding principal balance, the current interest rate, the date after which the interest rate may change if the loan is an ARM, and any prepayment penalty, as well as the web address for CFPB's or HUD's list of homeownership counselors or counseling organizations and the HUD toll-free telephone number to contact the counselors or counseling organizations.

Delinquency Information

Servicers must provide consumers that are more than 45 days delinquent on past payments additional information regarding their accounts on their periodic statements. For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8), the length of a consumer's delinquency is measured as of the date of the periodic statement or the date of the written notice provided under (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(3)(iv)). A consumer's delinquency begins on the date an amount sufficient to cover a periodic payment of principal, interest, and escrow, if applicable, becomes due and unpaid, even if the consumer is afforded a period after the due date to pay before the servicer assesses a late fee. A consumer is delinquent if one or more periodic payments of principal, interest, and escrow, if applicable, are due and unpaid (Comment 41(d)(8)-1).

These items must be grouped together in close proximity to one another. To meet this requirement, the items to be provided in close proximity must be grouped together, and set off from other groupings of items. Items in close proximity may not have an unrelated text between them. Text is unrelated if it does not explain or expand upon the required disclosures. This may be accomplished in a variety of ways, for example, by presenting the information in boxes, or by arranging the items on the document and including spacing between the groupings (Comment 41(d)-1). Furthermore, the additional information must include:

- The length of the consumer's delinquency;

- A notification of the possible risks of being delinquent, such as foreclosure and related expenses;

- An account history for either the previous six months or the period since the last time the account was current (whichever is shorter), which details the amount past due from each billing cycle and the date on which payments were credited to the account as fully paid;

- A notice stating any loss mitigation program that the consumer has agreed to (if applicable);

- A notice stating whether the servicer has initiated a foreclosure process;
- Total payments necessary to bring the account current; and
- A reference to homeownership counseling information (See Account Information above).

The regulation does not prohibit adding to the required disclosures, as long as the additional information does not overwhelm or obscure the required disclosures. For example, while certain information about the escrow account (such as the account balance) is not required on the periodic statement, this information may be included.

The periodic statement may be provided electronically if the consumer agrees. The consumer must give affirmative consent to receive statements electronically.

For sample periodic statements, see Appendix H-30.

NOTE: Servicers may modify the sample forms for periodic statements provided in Appendix H-30 to remove language that could suggest liability under the mortgage loan agreement if such language is not applicable (Comment 41(c)-5). For example, in the case of a confirmed successor in interest who has not assumed the mortgage loan obligation under state law and is not otherwise liable on the mortgage loan obligation, a servicer may modify the forms to:

- Use “this mortgage” or “the mortgage” instead of “your mortgage”.
- Use “The payments on this mortgage are late” instead of “You are late on your mortgage payments”.
- Use “This is the amount needed to bring the loan current” instead of “You must pay this amount to bring your loan current”.

(Comment 41(c)-5)

Certain Consumers in Bankruptcy – 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5) and 12 CFR 1026.41(f)

Servicers must send modified periodic statements (or coupon books) to certain consumers while any consumer on a mortgage loan is a debtor in a bankruptcy under Title 11 of the U.S. Code, or if such consumer has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan under Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 bankruptcy (12 CFR 1026.41(f)). The modified periodic statement requirements, however, are subject to certain exemptions.

Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5)(i), a servicer is exempt from the periodic statement requirements with regard to a mortgage loan if:

- Any consumer on the loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the U.S. Code, or if such consumer has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan under Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 bankruptcy or the consumer has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan through bankruptcy; and

- With regard to any consumer on the mortgage loan:
  - The consumer requests in writing that the servicer cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book;
  - The consumer's bankruptcy plan provides that the consumer will surrender the dwelling securing the mortgage loan, provides for the avoidance of the lien securing the mortgage loan, or otherwise does not provide for the payment of the pre-bankruptcy arrearage or the maintenance of payments due under the mortgage loan;
  - A court enters an order in the bankruptcy case providing for the avoidance of the lien securing the mortgage loan, lifting the automatic stay pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 362 with regard to the dwelling securing the mortgage loan, or requiring the servicer to cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book; or
  - The consumer files with the bankruptcy court a statement of intention pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 521(a) identifying an intent to surrender the dwelling and the consumer has not made any partial or periodic payment on the mortgage loan after the commencement of the bankruptcy case.

The bankruptcy exemption will no longer apply, however, if the consumer reaffirms personal liability for the loan, or any consumer on the loan requests in writing that the servicer provide a periodic statement or coupon book, unless a court enters an order in the bankruptcy case requiring the servicer to cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book.

Servicers not meeting the above exemption must send modified periodic statements or coupon books with regard to a mortgage loan as required by 12 CFR 1026.41(f) while any consumer on a mortgage loan is a debtor in a bankruptcy under Title 11 of the U.S. Code, or if such consumer has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan under Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 bankruptcy. The content of the periodic statements will vary depending on whether the consumer is a debtor in a Chapter 7 or 11 bankruptcy case, or a Chapter 12 or 13 bankruptcy case. Appendix H includes a Sample Form of Periodic Statement for Consumer in Chapter 7 or Chapter 11 Bankruptcy (See H-30(E)) and a Sample Form of Periodic Statement for Consumer in Chapter 12 or Chapter 13 Bankruptcy (See H-30(F)) that servicers may use for consumers in bankruptcy to ensure compliance with (12 CFR 1026.41).

Servicers not meeting the above exemption must send modified periodic statements or coupon books as required by (12 CFR 1026.41(f)).

Valuation Independence – 12 CFR 1026.42

Regulation Z seeks to ensure that real estate appraisers, and others preparing valuations, are free to use their independent professional judgment in assigning home values without influence or pressure from those with interests in the transactions. Regulation Z also seeks to ensure that appraisers receive customary and reasonable payments for their services. Regulation Z's valuation rules apply to creditors and settlement services providers for consumer credit transactions secured by the consumer's principal dwelling (covered transaction) and includes several provisions that protect the integrity of the appraisal process when a consumer's principal dwelling is securing the loan. In general, the rule prohibits "covered persons" from engaging in coercion, bribery, and other similar actions designed to cause anyone who prepares a valuation to base the value of the property on factors other than the person's independent judgment.[46] More specifically, Regulation Z:

- Prohibits coercion and other similar actions designed to cause appraisers to base the appraised value of properties on factors other than their independent judgment;
- Prohibits appraisers and appraisal management companies hired by lenders from having financial or other interests in the properties or the credit transactions;
- Prohibits creditors from extending credit based on appraisals if they know beforehand of violations involving appraiser coercion or conflicts of interest, unless the creditors determine that the values of the properties are not materially misstated;
- Prohibits a person who prepares a valuation from materially misrepresenting the value of the consumer's principal dwelling, and prohibits a covered person other than the person who prepares valuations from materially altering a valuation. A misrepresentation or alteration is material if it is likely to significantly affect the value assigned to the consumer's principal dwelling;
- Prohibits any covered person from falsifying a valuation or inducing a misrepresentation, falsification, or alteration of value;
- Requires that creditors or settlement service providers that have information about appraiser misconduct file reports with the appropriate state licensing authorities if the misconduct is material (i.e., likely to significantly affect the value assigned to the consumer's principal dwelling; and
- Requires the payment of customary and reasonable compensation to appraisers who are not employees of the creditors or of the appraisal management companies hired by the creditors.

NOTE: Voluntary donation of appraisal services by a fee appraiser[47] to an organization eligible to receive tax-deductible charitable contributions meets the customary-and-reasonable requirements (15 U.S.C.1639e(i)(2)(B)).

[46] This section applies to any consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling. A "covered person" means a creditor with respect to a covered transaction. A "covered transaction" means an extension of consumer credit that is or will be secured by a dwelling, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(19).

[47] A fee appraiser is a state-licensed or certified appraiser, or a company using their services who receives a fee for performing appraisals.

Minimum Standards for Transactions Secured by a Dwelling (Ability to Repay and Qualified Mortgages) – 12 CFR 1026.43

Minimum standards for transactions secured by a dwelling – 12 CFR 1026.43(a), (g), (h)

Creditors originating certain mortgage loans are required to make a reasonable and good faith determination at or before consummation that a consumer will have the ability to repay the loan. The ability-to-repay requirement applies to most closed-end mortgage loans; however, there are some exclusions, including:

- Home equity lines of credit;[48]
- Mortgages secured by an interest in a timeshare plan;
- Reverse mortgages;
- A temporary bridge loan with a term of 12 months or less, such as a loan to finance the purchase of a new dwelling where the consumer plans to sell a current dwelling within 12 months or a loan to finance the initial construction of a dwelling;
- A construction phase of 12 months or less of a construction-to-permanent loan; and
- An extension of credit made pursuant to a program authorized by Sections 101 and 109 of the Emergency Economic Stabilization Act of 2008 (12 U.S.C. 5211; 5219).

NOTE: There are additional exclusions under 12 CFR 1026.43(a) that generally include extensions of credit by various state or federal government agencies or programs or by creditors with specific designations under such programs or extensions of credit that meet certain criteria and are extended by certain creditors that the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) has determined are 501(c)(3) nonprofits. For a full list and criteria, (see 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)(iv)–(vii)).

Generally, loans covered under this section (which, for purposes of the prepayment penalty provisions in 12 CFR 1026.43(g), includes reverse mortgages and temporary loans otherwise excluded[49] from the ability-to-repay provisions) may not have prepayment penalties; however, there are exceptions for certain fixed-rate and step-rate qualified mortgages that are not higher-priced mortgage loans (as defined in 12 CFR 1026.35(a)), and only if otherwise permitted by law. For such mortgages, the prepayment penalties must be limited to the first three years of the loan and may not exceed 2 percent for the first two years and 1 percent for the third year. The [48] For open-end credit transactions that are high-cost mortgages as defined in 12 CFR 1026.32, creditors are required to determine a borrower's ability to repay under 12 CFR 1026.34.

[49] These include a temporary or "bridge" loan with a term of 12 months or less; a construction phase of 12 months or less of a construction-to-permanent loan; or an extension of credit made pursuant to a program administered by a housing finance agency; by certain community development or nonprofit lenders, as specified in 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)(v); or in connection with certain federal emergency economic stabilization programs (12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)).

creditor must offer the consumer an alternative loan without such penalties that the creditor has a good faith belief that the consumer likely qualifies for, with the same term, a fixed rate or step rate, substantially equal payments, and limited points and fees (See 12 CFR 1026.43(g)).

Ability to Repay – 12 CFR 1026.43(c)

Except as provided under 12 CFR 1026.43(d) (refinancing of non-standard mortgages), (e) (qualified mortgages), and (f) (balloon payment qualified mortgages by certain creditors), creditors must consider the following eight underwriting factors when making a determination of the consumer's ability to repay:

- The consumer's current or reasonably expected income or assets (excluding the value of the dwelling and any attached real property);
- The consumer's current employment status if the creditor relies on the consumer's income in determining repayment ability;
- The consumer's monthly payment for the mortgage loan;
- The consumer's monthly payment on any simultaneous loan (i.e., a covered transaction or HELOC that is being consummated generally at the same or similar time) secured by the same dwelling that the creditor knows or has reason to know will be made, calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(6);
- The consumer's monthly payment for mortgage-related obligations, including property taxes;
- The consumer's current debt obligations, alimony, and child support;
- The consumer's monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income, calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7); and
- The consumer's credit history.

Creditors are required to verify this information using reasonably reliable third-party records, with specific rules for verification of income or assets and employment status. In the case of the consumer's income or assets, the creditor must use third-party records that provide reasonably reliable evidence of such income or assets. Creditors may verify the information considered using the consumer's income tax return transcripts issued by the IRS, copies of tax returns filed by the consumer, W-2s or similar documentation, payroll statements, financial institution records, receipts from check-cashing or fund transfer services, and records from the consumer's employer or other specified records (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)).

Regulation Z also provides rules for how creditors must apply certain underwriting factors when determining whether a consumer has the ability to repay the mortgage. For example, creditors must calculate the monthly payment for the covered transaction using the greater of the fully indexed rate or any introductory interest rate, and the monthly, fully amortizing payments that are substantially equal during the loan term. However, special rules apply to mortgages with a balloon payment, interest-only loans, and negative amortization loans due to the unique characteristics of the mortgage (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)).

Finally, creditors may not evade the ability-to-repay requirements by structuring a closed-end loan secured by a dwelling as open-end credit that does not meet the definition of open-end credit plan.

Exemption from ATR Requirements for Refinancing of Non-Standard Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(d)

12 CFR 1026.43(d) provides special rules for refinancing a “non-standard mortgage” into a “standard mortgage”.

A “non-standard mortgage” is a covered transaction[50] as defined under 12 CFR 1026.43(a) that is:

- An adjustable rate mortgage with an introductory fixed interest rate for a period of one year or longer;
- An interest-only loan; or
- A negative amortization loan.

A “standard mortgage” is a covered transaction as defined under 12 CFR 1026.43(a) with:

- Periodic payments that do not cause the principal balance to increase, do not allow the consumer to defer repayment of the principal, or do not result in balloon payments;
- Total points and fees that are not more than those allowed in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(3);
- A term that does not exceed 40 years;
- An interest rate that is fixed for the first five years of the loan; and
- Proceeds that are used solely to pay off the outstanding principal on the non-standard mortgage and closing or settlement costs (that are required to be disclosed under RESPA).

Current holders of non-standard mortgages or their servicers (collectively referred to here as “holders”) can refinance non-standard mortgages into standard mortgages without considering a consumer’s ability to repay under 12 CFR 1026.43(c), if certain conditions are met.

To qualify for the exemption from the ability-to-repay requirements:

[50] A covered transaction is a consumer credit transaction that is secured by a dwelling, including any real property attached to the dwelling. A covered transaction is not a home equity line of credit under 12 CFR 1026.40; a mortgage secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan; a reverse mortgage under 12 CFR 1026.33; a temporary or “bridge” loan with a term of 12 months or less; a construction phase of 12 months or less of a construction-to-permanent loan; or an extension of credit made pursuant to a program administered by a housing finance agency; by certain community development or nonprofit lenders, as specified in 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)(v); or in connection with certain federal emergency economic stabilization programs.

- The standard mortgage must have a monthly payment that is "materially lower"[51] than the non-standard mortgage;

- The creditor must receive a written application from the consumer for the standard mortgage no later than two months after the non-standard mortgage is recast; and

- On the non-standard mortgage, consumers must have made no more than one payment more than 30 days late during the preceding 12 months and must have made no late payments more than 30 days late in the preceding six months of the holder receiving the application for a standard mortgage.

For non-standard loans consummated on or after January 10, 2014, that are refinanced into standard mortgages, the exemption from the ability-to-repay requirements for the refinancing is available only if the non-standard mortgage met the repayment ability requirements under 12 CFR 1026.43(c) or the qualified mortgage requirements under 12 CFR 1026.43(e) as applicable.

If these conditions are satisfied and if the holder has considered whether the standard mortgage is likely to prevent the consumer from defaulting on the non-standard mortgage once the loan terms are recast, the holder is not required to meet the ability-to-repay requirements in 12 CFR 1026.43(c). Finally, holders refinancing a non-standard mortgage to a standard mortgage may offer consumers rate discounts and terms that are the same as (or better than) rate discounts and terms that the holder offers to new consumers, consistent with the holder's documented underwriting practices and to the extent not prohibited by applicable laws. For example, a holder would comply with this requirement if it has documented underwriting practices that provide for offering rate discounts to consumers with credit scores above a certain threshold, even though the consumer would not normally qualify for that discounted rate.

Qualified Mortgages: Rebuttable Presumption and Safe Harbor – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)

The rule provides a presumption of compliance with the ability-to-repay requirements for creditors that originate certain types of loans called "qualified mortgages." There are several categories of qualified mortgages, which are discussed below. Qualified mortgages afford creditors and assignees greater protection against liability under the ability-to-repay provisions. Qualified mortgages that are not higher-priced covered transactions receive a safe harbor under the ability-to-repay provisions, which means the presumption of compliance cannot be rebutted. A qualified mortgage is higher-priced if the loan's APR exceeds the APOR for a comparable [51] When comparing the payments, the holder must calculate the payment for the standard mortgage based on substantially equal, monthly, fully amortizing payments based on the maximum interest rate that may apply in the first five years. The holder must calculate the non-standard mortgage payment based on substantially equal, monthly, fully amortizing payments of principal and interest using:

- The fully indexed rate as of a reasonable period of time before or after the date on which the creditor receives the consumer's application for the standard mortgage;
- The term of the loan remaining as of the date on which the recast occurs, assuming all scheduled payments have been made up to the recast date, and the payment due on the recast date is made and credited as of that date; and transaction by 1.5 percentage points or more for first-lien loans other than those that fall within the small-creditor portfolio, temporary small-creditor balloon-payment, or balloon-payment qualified mortgage definitions, and 3.5 percentage points for first-lien loans that fall within those qualified mortgage definitions or for second-lien loans. Special APR calculation rules apply to certain adjustable-rate and step-rate loans made under the general qualified mortgage definition that took effect on March 1, 2021, for purposes of determining if the loan is a higher-priced qualified mortgage.
- The remaining loan amount, which is calculated differently depending on whether the loan is an adjustable rate mortgage, interest-only loan, or negative amortization loan (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(5)).

Generally, the safe harbor provides a conclusive presumption that the creditor made a good faith and reasonable determination of the consumer's ability to repay. Qualified mortgages that are higher-priced receive a rebuttable presumption of compliance rather than a safe harbor with the ability-to-repay provisions. This means that the loan is presumed to comply with the ability-to-repay provisions, but, for example, the consumer would have the opportunity to rebut that presumption in future ability-to-repay litigation.

For a qualified mortgage that is a higher-priced covered transaction, the presumption of compliance is rebuttable by showing that at consummation, the consumer's income, debt obligations, alimony, child support, and monthly payments on the loan and mortgage-related obligations and simultaneous loans of which the creditor was aware at consummation would leave the consumer with insufficient residual income or assets (other than the value of the dwelling and real property) to meet living expenses (including recurring and material non-debt obligations that the creditor was aware of at consummation).

Requirements for Qualified Mortgages – Generally – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2) and (3)

Loans that are qualified mortgages under the general qualified mortgage definition must provide for regular periodic payments that are substantially equal (except for the effect that any interest rate change after consummation has on the payment in the case of an adjustable-rate or step-rate mortgage) and may not have negative amortization, interest-only payments, balloon payments, or terms exceeding 30 years. A qualified mortgage for loans greater than or equal to $100,000 (indexed for inflation) may not have points and fees paid by the consumer that exceed 3 percent of the total loan amount (although certain "bona fide discount points" are excluded for certain loans with pricing within prescribed ranges of APOR – the average prime offer rate). The rule provides guidance on calculating points and fees and thresholds for smaller loans.[52] The rule also requires that the creditor underwrite the loan (taking into account monthly payments for mortgage-related obligations) using the maximum interest rate that will apply in the first five years after the date on which the first periodic payment is due.

The general definition of a qualified mortgage also considers a loan's pricing. Under the amended rule issued by the Bureau, effective March 1, 2021, a loan greater than or equal to $110,260 (indexed for inflation) meets the general qualified mortgage definition if the APR exceeds the APOR for a comparable transaction by less than 2.25 percentage points as of the date the interest rate is set. The amended rule provides pricing thresholds higher than 2.25 percentage points above APOR for loans with smaller loan amounts, subordinate-lien transactions, and smaller manufactured housing loans. The amended rule also includes a special rule for calculating the APR for ARMs for purposes of these pricing thresholds. For a loan to be a qualified mortgage under the general definition, the creditor must also (1) consider the consumer's monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income; current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan; and debt obligations, alimony, and child support, and (2) verify the consumer's current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan and the consumer's current debt obligations, alimony, and child support.

For transactions for which a creditor received the consumer's application prior to the amended rule's mandatory compliance date, October 1, 2022, creditors seeking to originate general qualified mortgages will have the option of complying with either the current general qualified mortgage definition (described above) or the definition in place prior to March 1, 2021. The older definition did not include the price-based limit described in the previous paragraph and instead required that the consumer's total monthly debt to total monthly income not exceed 43 percent. Unlike the current definition, the older definition further required that creditors calculate debt and income for purposes of determining the consumer's debt-to-income ratio using the standards contained in former Appendix Q of Regulation Z.[53]

Qualified Mortgages – Other Agencies – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(4)

Regulation Z provides a temporary category of qualified mortgages that are eligible to be purchased or guaranteed by the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) or the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac) (collectively, the government-sponsored enterprises or GSEs) while under the conservatorship of the Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA). This temporary category is commonly known as the GSE Patch. The GSE Patch is available for transactions that are both (1) consummated on or before the date the applicable GSE ceases to operate under conservatorship and (2) transactions for which the creditor receives the consumer's application before October 1, 2022. However, the practical availability of the GSE Patch may be affected by policies or agreements created by parties other than the Bureau, such as the Preferred Stock Purchase Agreements (PSPAs), which include restrictions on GSE purchases that rely on the GSE Patch definition after July 1, 2021.

Further, HUD, VA, and USDA have issued definitions for qualified mortgages for loans they insure, guarantee, or provide under applicable law. These definitions may be found under 24

[53] The General QM Final Rule, effective March 1, 2021, removed Appendix Q from Regulation Z. However, for consumer applications received prior to October 1, 2022, creditors that rely on the older General QM definition must continue to calculate debt and income for purposes of determining the consumer's debt-to-income ratio in accordance with Appendix Q of Regulation Z as was in effect on February 28, 2021. For consumer applications received on or after October 1, 2022, creditors must rely on the current General QM definition, which does not include Appendix Q.

CFR 201.7 and 24 CFR 203.19 (HUD), 38 CFR 36.4300 and 38 CFR 36.4500 (VA), and 7 CFR 3555.109 (USDA).

Qualified Mortgage – Small Creditor Portfolio Loans – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)

Mortgages that are originated and held in portfolio by certain small creditors are also qualified mortgages if they meet certain requirements.

These mortgages must generally satisfy the requirements applicable to qualified mortgages, including prohibitions on negative-amortization, balloon-payment, and interest-only features; maximum loan terms of 30 years; and points-and-fees restrictions. The creditor must consider the consumer's monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income; current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan; and debt obligations, alimony, and child support, and verify the consumer's current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan and the consumer's current debt obligations, alimony, and child support.

A small creditor that satisfies the exemption criteria in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(B) and (C) is eligible to make small creditor portfolio qualified mortgages. (In contrast to 12 CFR 1026.43(f), below, eligibility for this qualified mortgage category is not conditioned on the small creditor operating in a rural or underserved area.) For a period of three years after consummation, the creditor may not transfer the loan, or the loan will lose its status as a qualified mortgage. The qualified mortgage status continues under 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(ii), however, if the creditor transfers the loan to another creditor that meets the requirements to be a small lender, or when the loan is transferred due to a capital restoration plan, bankruptcy, or state or federal governmental agency order, or if the mortgage is transferred pursuant to a merger or acquisition of the creditor. A qualified mortgage can be transferred after three years without losing its status.

Small Creditor Rural or Underserved Balloon-Payment Qualified Mortgages and Temporary Balloon-Payment Qualified Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(f) and 1026.43(e)(6)

Balloon-payment mortgages are qualified mortgages if they are originated and held in portfolio by small creditors operating in a rural or underserved area and meet certain other requirements. These mortgages must satisfy certain requirements applicable to qualified mortgages, including prohibitions on negative-amortization and interest-only features; maximum loan terms of 30 years; and points-and-fees restrictions. These loans must have a term of at least five years and a fixed interest rate and meet certain basic underwriting standards. The creditor must consider the consumer's monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income; current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan; and debt obligations, alimony, and child support, and verify the consumer's current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan and the consumer's current debt obligations, alimony, and child support. This category of qualified mortgage is not available for a loan that, at origination, is subject to a forward commitment to be acquired by a person that does not itself qualify for the category (under the requirements outlined in the next paragraph).

A small creditor that satisfies the exemption criteria in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)) (A), (B), and (C) (higher-priced mortgage escrow requirements) is eligible to make rural or underserved balloon-payment qualified mortgages. For a period of three years after consummation, the creditor may not transfer the loan, or it will lose its status as a qualified mortgage. The qualified mortgage status continues under 12 CFR 1026.43(f)(2), however, if the creditor transfers the loan to another creditor that meets the requirements to be a small rural lender, or when the loan is transferred due to a capital restoration plan, bankruptcy, or state or federal governmental agency order, or if the mortgage is transferred pursuant to a merger or acquisition of the creditor. A qualified mortgage can be transferred after three years without losing its status.

There is also a temporary qualified mortgage category for balloon-payment mortgages that would otherwise meet the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(f) but that are originated by small creditors that do not operate in a rural or underserved area. This category is applicable to covered transactions for which the application was received before April 1, 2016 (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(6)(ii)).

Qualified Mortgage – Seasoned Loans – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)

The Seasoned QM Final Rule, effective March 1, 2021, created a new category of qualified mortgage known as seasoned qualified mortgages. To be eligible to be a seasoned qualified mortgage, a covered transaction must be a first-lien, fixed-rate loan that has met certain performance requirements over a seasoning period of at least 36 months, be held in portfolio by the originating creditor or first purchaser until the end of the seasoning period (subject to certain enumerated exceptions), comply with general restrictions on product features and points and fees, and meet certain underwriting requirements.

A loan made by any creditor, regardless of size, is eligible to become a seasoned qualified mortgage if at the end of the seasoning period it meets the requirements in the Seasoned QM Final Rule. Loans that satisfy another QM definition at consummation also can be seasoned qualified mortgages if the requirements for seasoned qualified mortgages are met.

Qualified Mortgage – Insured depository institution or insured credit union that, together with its affiliates, has less than $10 billion in total consolidated assets (covered institution): Portfolio loans – 15 U.S.C. 1639c(b)(2)(F)[54]

Under EGRRCPA, residential mortgages that are originated and held in portfolio by covered institutions (insured depository institutions or insured credit unions with less than $10 billion in total consolidated assets, together with their affiliates) are qualified mortgages if they meet certain statutory requirements. Such loans are subject to prepayment penalty limitations and must not have negative amortization or interest-only features, have points and fees within applicable limits, and the creditor must consider and document debt, income and assets. The creditor must consider and document (as described in the statute) debt, income, and financial resources of the consumer in underwriting the loan. The loan loses its qualified mortgage status upon sale, assignment, or transfer, except in the case of a transfer (1) due to bankruptcy or failure; (2) to another covered institution that also retains the loan in portfolio; (3) pursuant to a merger or acquisition by or to another person who retains the loan in portfolio; or (4) to a wholly owned subsidiary, provided that the loan is considered an asset by the covered institution for regulatory accounting purposes.

Subpart F – Special Rules for Private Education Loans

Subpart F relates to private education loans. It contains rules on disclosures 12 CFR 1026.46, the right to cancel the loan 12 CFR 1026.47, and limitations on changes in terms after approval and on co-branding in the marketing of private education loans (12 CFR 1026.48).

Special Disclosure Requirements for Private Education Loans – 12 CFR 1026.46

The disclosures required under Subpart F apply only to private education loans. Except where specifically provided otherwise, the requirements and limitations of Subpart F are in addition to the requirements of the other subparts of Regulation Z.

A private education loan means an extension of credit that:

- Is not made, insured, or guaranteed under Title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965;
- Is extended to a consumer expressly, in whole or part, for postsecondary educational expenses, regardless of whether the loan is provided by the educational institution that the student attends; and
- Does not include open-end credit or any loan that is secured by real property or a dwelling.

A private education loan does not include an extension of credit in which the covered educational institution is the creditor if:

- The term of the extension of credit is 90 days or less; or
- An interest rate will not be applied to the credit balance, and the term of the extension of credit is one year or less, even if the credit is payable in more than four installments.

Content of Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.47

Disclosure Requirements

This section establishes the content that a creditor must include in its disclosures to a consumer at three different stages in the private education loan origination process:

- Application or Solicitation Disclosures – With any application or solicitation;
- Approval Disclosures – With any notice of approval of the private education loan; and
- Final Disclosures – After the consumer accepts the loan. In addition, 12 CFR 1026.48(d) requires that the disclosures must be provided at least three business days prior to disbursement of the loan funds.

Rights of the Consumer

The creditor must disclose that, if approved for the loan, the consumer has the right to accept the loan on the terms approved for up to 30 calendar days. The disclosure must inform the consumer that the rate and terms of the loan will not change during this period, except for changes to the rate based on adjustments to the index used for the loan and other changes permitted by law. The creditor must disclose that the consumer also has the right to cancel the loan, without penalty, until midnight of the third business day following the date on which the consumer receives the final disclosures.

Limitations on Private Education Loans – 12 CFR 1026.48

This section contains rules and limitations on private education loans, including:

1. A prohibition on co-branding in the marketing of private education loans;
2. Rules governing the 30-day acceptance period and three business-day cancellation period and prohibition on disbursement of loan proceeds until the cancellation period has expired;
3. The requirement that the creditor obtain a self-certification form from the consumer before consummation; and
4. The requirement that creditors in preferred lender arrangements provide certain information to covered educational institutions.

Co-Branding Prohibited

Regulation Z prohibits creditors from using the name, emblem, mascot, or logo of a covered institution (or other words, pictures, or symbols readily identified with a covered institution) in the marketing of private education loans in a way that implies endorsement by the educational institution. Marketing that refers to an educational institution does not imply endorsement if the marketing includes a clear and conspicuous disclosure that is equally prominent and closely proximate to the reference to the institution that the educational institution does not endorse the creditor's loans, and that the creditor is not affiliated with the educational institution. There is also an exception in cases where the educational institution actually does endorse the creditor's loans, but the marketing must make a clear and conspicuous disclosure that is equally prominent and closely proximate to the reference to the institution that the creditor, and not the educational institution, is making the loan.

Private Education Loan Protections in the Event of Death or Bankruptcy – 15 U.S.C. 1650

TILA defines a cosigner with respect to a private education loan as any individual who is liable for the obligation of another without compensation regardless of how designated in the contract or instrument, and includes any person whose signature is requested as a condition to grant credit or to forbear on collection of the private education loan. This definition does not extend to obligations intended to consolidate a consumer's pre-existing private education loan. A cosigner does not include a spouse whose signature is required to perfect a security interest in the loan.

EGRRCPA amended TILA to enhance consumer protections for student borrowers and cosigners of private education loans. Specifically, a private education loan creditor may not declare a default or accelerate a debt against a student obligor on the sole basis of bankruptcy or death of a cosigner. Additionally, the holder of a private education loan must release, within a reasonable time frame, any cosigner of their obligations related to the loan, when the holder is notified of the death of a student obligor. The holder or servicer of the private education loan, as applicable, must notify, within a reasonable time frame, a cosigner who is released of their obligations. A private education loan creditor also must provide a student obligor the option to designate an individual to have the legal authority to act on behalf of the student obligor in the event of death of the obligor. These protections apply only to private education loan agreements entered into on or after November 24, 2018.

Subpart G – Special Rules Applicable to Credit Card Accounts and Open-End Credit Offered to College Students

Subpart G relates to credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (except for 12 CFR 1026.57(c)), which applies to all open-end credit plans). This subpart contains rules regarding credit and charge card application and solicitation disclosures 12 CFR 1026.60, as well as hybrid prepaid-credit cards (12 CFR 1026.61). It also contains rules on evaluation of a consumer's ability to make the required payments under the terms of an account 12 CFR 1026.51, limits the fees that a consumer can be required to pay 12 CFR 1026.52, and contains rules on allocation of payments in excess of the minimum payment (12 CFR 1026.53). The subpart also sets forth certain limitations on the imposition of finance charges as the result of a loss of a grace period 12 CFR 1026.54 and on increases in annual percentage rates, fees, and charges for credit card accounts (12 CFR 1026.55), including the reevaluation of rate increases (12 CFR 1026.59). This subpart prohibits the assessment of fees or charges for over-the-limit transactions unless the consumer affirmatively consents to the creditor's payment of over-the-limit transactions (12 CFR 1026.56). This subpart also sets forth rules for reporting and marketing of college student open-end credit (12 CFR 1026.57). Finally, it sets forth requirements for the Internet posting of credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (12 CFR 1026.58).

Evaluation of the Consumer's Ability to Pay – 12 CFR 1026.51

Regulation Z requires credit card issuers to consider a consumer's ability to pay before opening a new credit card account or increasing the credit limit for an existing credit card account. Additionally, the rule provides specific requirements that must be met before opening a new credit card account or increasing the credit limit on an existing account when the consumer is under the age of 21.

When evaluating a consumer's ability to pay, credit card issuers must perform a review of a consumer's income or assets and current obligations. Card issuers are permitted, however, to rely on information provided by the consumer. The rule does not require card issuers to verify a consumer's statements; a card issuer may base its determination of ability to repay on facts and circumstances known to the card issuer (Comment 51(a)(1)(i)-2). A card issuer may also consider information obtained through any empirically derived, demonstrably, and statistically sound model that reasonably estimates a consumer's income or assets.

Card issuers may consider any income and assets to which the consumer has a reasonable expectation of access or may limit their consideration to the consumer's independent income and assets. The rule also requires that issuers consider at least one of the following:

- The ratio of debt obligations to income,

- The ratio of debt obligations to assets, or
- The income the consumer will have after paying debt obligations (i.e., residual income).

The rule also provides that it would be unreasonable for a card issuer not to review any information about a consumer's income, assets, or current obligations, or to issue a credit card to a consumer who does not have any income or assets.

Because credit card accounts typically require consumers to make a minimum monthly payment that is a percentage of the total balance (plus, in some cases, accrued interest and fees), card issuers are required to consider the consumer's ability to make the required minimum payments. Card issuers must also establish and maintain reasonable written policies and procedures to consider a consumer's income or assets and current obligations. Because the minimum payment is unknown at account opening, the rule requires that card issuers use a reasonable method to estimate a consumer's minimum payment. The regulation provides a safe harbor for card issuers to estimate the required minimum periodic payment if the card issuer:

1. Assumes utilization, from the first day of the billing cycle, of the full credit line that the card issuer is considering offering to the consumer; and
2. Uses a minimum payment formula employed by the card issuer for the product that the card issuer is considering offering to the consumer or, in the case of an existing account, the minimum payment formula that currently applies to that account, provided:
    a. If the minimum payment formula includes interest charges, the card issuer estimates those charges using an interest rate that the card issuer is considering offering to the consumer for purchases or, in the case of an existing account, the interest rate that currently applies to purchases; and
    b. If the applicable minimum payment formula includes mandatory fees, the card issuer must assume that such fees have been charged to the account.

Specific Requirements for Underage Consumers – 12 CFR 1026.51(b)(1)

Regulation Z prohibits the issuance of a credit card to a consumer who has not attained the age of 21 unless the consumer has submitted a written application and the creditor has:

- Information indicating that the underage consumer has an independent ability to make the required minimum payments on the account; or
- The signature of a cosigner, guarantor, or joint applicant who has attained the age of 21, who has the ability to repay debts (based on 12 CFR 1026.51) incurred by the underage consumer in connection with the account, and who assumes joint liability for all debts or secondary liability for any debts incurred before the underage consumer attains 21 years of age.
- For credit line increases:

- If an account was opened based on the underage consumer's independent ability to repay, in order to increase the consumer's credit line before he or she turns 21, the issuer either must determine that the consumer has an independent ability to make the required minimum payments at the time of the contemplated increase, or must obtain an agreement from a cosigner, guarantor, or joint applicant who is 21 or older and who has the ability to repay debts to assume liability for any debt incurred on the account.
- If the account was opened based on the ability of a cosigner over the age of 21 to pay, the issuer must obtain written consent from that cosigner before increasing the credit limit.

Limitations of Fees – 12 CFR 1026.52

Limitations on Fees During First Year After Account Opening – 12 CFR 1026.52(a)

During the first year after account opening, issuers are prohibited from requiring consumers to pay fees (other than fees for late payments, returned payments, and exceeding the credit limit) that in the aggregate exceed 25 percent of the initial credit limit in effect when the account is opened. An account is considered open no earlier than the date on which the account may first be used by the consumer to engage in transactions. With regard to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, where the credit feature is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, this restriction also applies to fees or charges imposed on the asset feature of the prepaid account that are charges imposed as part of the plan under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) (Comments 6(b)(3)(iii)(D)-1 and 52(a)(2)-2).

NOTE: The 25 percent limitation on fees does not apply to fees assessed prior to opening the account.

Limitations on Penalty Fees – 12 CFR 1026.52(b)

TILA requires that penalty fees imposed by card issuers be reasonable and proportional to the violation of the account terms. Among other things, the regulation prohibits credit card issuers from charging a penalty fee of more than $28 for paying late or otherwise violating the account's terms for the first violation, $39 for an additional violation of the same type during the same billing cycle or one of the next six billing cycles, or 3 percent of the delinquent balance on the charge card account that requires payment of outstanding balances in full at the end of each billing cycle if payment has not been received for two or more consecutive billing cycles unless the issuer determines that a higher fee represents a reasonable proportion of the costs it incurs as a result of that type of violation and reevaluates that determination at least once every 12 months.[55] With regard to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, where the credit feature is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, this provision also applies to any fee for violating the terms or other requirements of the credit feature, regardless of whether those fees are imposed on the credit or asset feature of the prepaid account (Comment 52(b)-3).

[55] The dollar amounts in this paragraph may be adjusted annually by the CFPB to reflect changes in the Consumer Price Index that warrant an increase or decrease of a whole dollar. The amounts were increased to $28 and $39, respectively, effective January 1, 2019. Further adjustments may be made in subsequent years. (See 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(ii)(D); Comment 52(b)(1)(ii) – 2.)

Credit card issuers are not permitted to charge penalty fees that exceed the dollar amount associated with the consumer's violation of the terms or other requirements of the credit card account. For example, card issuers are not permitted to charge a $39 fee when a consumer is late making a $20 minimum payment. Instead, in this example, the fee cannot exceed $20. The regulation also bans imposition of penalty fees when there is no dollar amount associated with the violation, such as fees based on "inactivity" fees based on the consumer's failure to use the account to make new purchases, or declined transaction fees for credit transactions that the card issuer declines to authorize. With regard to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card where the credit feature is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, the regulation prohibits a card issuer from imposing declined transaction fees in connection with the credit feature, regardless of whether the declined transaction fee is imposed on the credit feature or on the asset feature of the prepaid account (Comment 52(b)(2)(i)-7). The regulation also prohibits issuers from charging multiple penalty fees based on a single late payment or other violation of the account terms.

Payment Allocation – 12 CFR 1026.53

When different rates apply to different balances on a credit card account, issuers are generally required to allocate payments in excess of the minimum payment first to the balance with the highest APR and then to any remaining portion to the other balances in descending order based on the applicable APR.

For deferred interest programs, however, issuers must allocate excess payments first to the deferred interest balance during the last two billing cycles of the deferred interest period. In addition, during a deferred interest period, issuers are permitted (but not required) to allocate excess payments in the manner requested by the consumer.

For accounts with secured balances, issuers are permitted (but not required) to allocate excess payments to the secured balance if requested by the consumer.

Double-Cycle Billing and Partial Grace Period – 12 CFR 1026.54

Issuers are generally prohibited from imposing finance charges on balances for days in previous billing cycles as a result of the loss of a grace period. In addition, when a consumer pays some, but not all, of a balance prior to the expiration of a grace period, an issuer is prohibited from imposing finance charges on the portion of the balance that has been repaid.

Restrictions on Applying Increased Rates to Existing Balances and Increasing Certain Fees and Charges – 12 CFR 1026.55

Unless an exception applies, a card issuer must not increase an annual percentage rate or a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) on a credit card account. With regard to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card where the credit feature is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, this restriction applies regardless of whether these fees or annual percentage rates are imposed on the asset feature of the prepaid account or on the credit feature (Comment 55(a)-3). There are some general exceptions to the prohibition against applying increased rates to existing balances and increasing certain fees or charges:

- A temporary or promotional rate or temporary fee or charge that lasts at least six months, and that is required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii), provided that the card issuer complied with applicable disclosure requirements. Fees and charges required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) are periodic fees for issuance or availability of an open-end plan (such as an annual fee); a fixed finance charge (and any minimum interest charge) that exceeds $1; or a charge for required insurance, debt cancellation, or debt suspension;

- The rate is increased due to the operation of an index available to the general public and not under the card issuer's control (i.e., the rate is a variable rate);

- The minimum payment has not been received within 60 days after the due date, provided that the card issuer complied with applicable disclosure requirements and adheres to certain requirements when a series of on-time payments are received;

- The consumer successfully completes or fails to comply with the terms of a workout arrangement, provided that card issuer complied with applicable disclosure requirements and adheres to certain requirements upon the completion or failure of the arrangement; and

- The APR on an existing balance or a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) has been reduced pursuant to the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (SCRA) or a similar federal or state statute or regulation. The creditor is permitted to increase the rate, fee, or charge once the SCRA ceases to apply, but only to the rate, fee, or charge that applied prior to the reduction.

Regulation Z's limitations on the application of increased rates and certain fees and charges to existing balances continue to apply when the account is closed, acquired by another institution through a merger or the sale of a credit card portfolio, or when the balance is transferred to another credit account issued by the same creditor (or its affiliate or subsidiary).

Issuers are generally prevented from increasing the APR applicable to new transactions or a fee or charge subject to 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) during the first year after an account is opened. After the first year, issuers are permitted to increase the APRs that apply to new transactions or a fee or charge subject to 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) so long as the creditor complies with the regulation's 45-day advance notice requirement (12 CFR 1026.9).

Regulation Z's limitations on the application of increased rates to existing balances and limitations on the increase of certain fees or charges apply upon cessation of a waiver or rebate of interest, fees, or charges if the issuer promotes the waiver or rebate.

Fees for Transactions that Exceed the Credit Limit – 12 CFR 1026.56

Consumer consent requirement – Regulation Z requires an issuer to obtain a consumer's express consent (or opt in) before the issuer may impose any fees on a consumer's credit card account for making an extension of credit that exceeds the account's credit limit. Prior to providing such consent, the consumer must be notified by the issuer of any fees that may be assessed for an over-the-limit transaction. If the consumer consents, the issuer is also required to provide written confirmation (or electronic confirmation if the consumer agrees) of the consumer's consent and a notice of the consumer's right to revoke that consent on the front page of any periodic statement that reflects the imposition of an over-the-limit fee.

Prior to obtaining a consumer's consent to the payment of over-the-limit transactions, the issuer must provide the consumer with a notice disclosing, among other things, the dollar amount of any charges that will be assessed for an over-the-limit transaction, as well as any increased rate that may apply if the consumer exceeds the credit limit. Issuers are prevented from assessing any over-the-limit fee or charge on an account unless the consumer consents to the payment of transactions that exceed the credit limit.

Prohibited practices – Even if the consumer has affirmatively consented to the issuer's payment of over-the-limit transactions, Regulation Z prohibits certain issuer practices in connection with the assessment of over-the-limit fees or charges. An issuer can only charge one over-the-limit fee or charge per billing cycle. In addition, an issuer cannot impose an over-the-limit fee on the account for the same transaction in more than three billing cycles. Furthermore, fees may not be imposed for the same transaction in the second or third billing cycle unless the consumer has failed to reduce the account balance below the credit limit by the payment due date in that cycle.

Regulation Z also prohibits unfair or deceptive acts or practices in connection with the manipulation of credit limits in order to increase over-the-limit fees or other penalty charges. Specifically, issuers are prohibited from engaging in three practices:

- Assessing an over-the-limit fee because the creditor failed to promptly replenish the consumer's available credit;

- Conditioning the amount of available credit on the consumer's consent to the payment of over-the-limit transactions (e.g., opting in to an over-the-limit service to obtain a higher credit limit); and
- Imposing any over-the-limit fee if the credit limit is exceeded solely because of the issuer's assessment of accrued interest charges or fees on the consumer's account.

Special Rules for Marketing to Students – 12 CFR 1026.57

Regulation Z establishes several requirements related to the marketing of credit cards and other open-end consumer credit plans to students at an institution of higher education, including the marketing of a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card and prepaid account and a prepaid account where a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card may be added in the future, to students at an institution of higher education (Comments 57(a)(1)-1, 57(a)(5)-1, and 57(c)-7). The regulation limits a creditor's ability to offer a college student any tangible item to induce the student to apply for or participate in an open-end consumer credit plan offered by the creditor. Specifically, Regulation Z prohibits a card issuer from offering tangible items as an inducement:

- On the campus of an institution of higher education;
- Near the campus of an institution of higher education; or
- At an event sponsored by or related to an institution of higher education.

A tangible item means physical items, such as gift cards, T-shirts, or magazine subscriptions, but does not include nonphysical items such as discounts, reward points, or promotional credit terms. With respect to offers "near" the campus, the commentary to the regulation states that a location that is within 1,000 feet of the border of the campus is considered near the campus.

Regulation Z also requires card issuers to submit an annual report to the CFPB containing the terms and conditions of business, marketing, or promotional agreements with an institution of higher education or an alumni organization or foundation affiliated with an institution of higher education.

Online Disclosure of Credit Card Agreements – 12 CFR 1026.58

The regulation requires that issuers post credit card agreements on their websites and to submit those agreements to the CFPB for posting on a website maintained by the Bureau. There are three exceptions for when issuers are not required to provide statements to the Bureau:

- The issuer has fewer than 10,000 open credit card accounts; or
- The agreement currently is not offered to the public and the agreement is used only for one or more private label credit card plans with credit cards usable only at a single merchant or group of affiliated merchants and that involves fewer than 10,000 open accounts; or

- The agreement currently is not offered to the public and the agreement is for one or more plans offered to test a new product offered only to a limited group of consumers for a limited time that involves fewer than 10,000 open accounts.

Reevaluation of Rate Increases – 12 CFR 1026.59

For any rate increase imposed on or after January 1, 2009, that requires 45 days advance notice, the regulation requires card issuers to review the account no less frequently than once each six months and, if appropriate based on that review, reduce the annual percentage rate. The requirement to reevaluate rate increases applies both to increases in annual percentage rates based on consumer-specific factors, such as changes in the consumer's creditworthiness, and to increases in annual percentage rates imposed based on factors that are not specific to the consumer, such as changes in market conditions or the issuer's cost of funds. If, based on its review, a card issuer is required to reduce the rate applicable to an account, the final regulation requires that the rate be reduced within 45 days after completion of the evaluation.

This review must consider either the same factors on which the increase was originally based or the factors the card issuer currently considers in determining the annual percentage rate applicable to similar new credit card accounts.

Hybrid Prepaid-Credit Cards – 12 CFR 1026.61

Generally, this section applies to credit offered in connection with a prepaid account. A prepaid card is a hybrid prepaid-credit card when it has a separate accessible credit feature, or a credit feature structured as a negative balance on the asset feature of the prepaid account (except as described below). Further, a hybrid prepaid-credit card is a credit card for the purposes of this regulation with respect to those credit features.

A prepaid card is a hybrid prepaid-credit card with respect to a separate credit feature when it is a single device that can be used from time to time to access the separate credit feature where the following two conditions are both satisfied: (1) The card can be used to draw, transfer, or authorize the draw or transfer of credit from the separate credit feature in the course of authorizing, settling, or otherwise completing transactions conducted with the card to obtain goods or services, obtain cash, or conduct person-to-person transfers; and (2) the separate credit feature is offered by the prepaid account issuer, its affiliate, or its business partner. A separate credit feature that is accessed by a hybrid prepaid-credit card is described as a "covered separate credit feature". A prepaid card is not a hybrid prepaid-credit card with respect to a separate credit feature if it does not meet the two conditions discussed above, although that separate credit feature may be subject to other provisions of Regulation Z depending on its own terms and conditions, independent of the connection to the prepaid account.

Generally, the regulation prohibits structuring a hybrid prepaid-credit card to access credit through a negative balance on the asset feature of a prepaid account. However, a prepaid card is not a hybrid prepaid-credit card with respect to credit extended through a negative balance on the asset feature of a prepaid account if several conditions are met. One condition is that the prepaid card cannot access credit from a covered separate credit feature that is offered by a prepaid account issuer or its affiliate. In addition, the prepaid account issuer must have an established policy and practice of either: declining to authorize any transaction for which it reasonably believes a consumer has insufficient or unavailable funds in the asset feature of the prepaid account at the time the transaction is authorized to cover the amount of the transaction; or declining to authorize such transactions except when (1) the amount of the transaction will not cause the asset feature balance to become negative by more than $10 at the time of the authorization, or (2) the issuer has received an instruction, confirmation, or request to load funds from a separate asset account to the prepaid account, but the funds have not yet settled and the amount of the transaction will not cause the asset balance to become negative at the time of the authorization by more than the incoming or requested load amount. Furthermore, under this exception, the issuer may not impose any of the following fees or charges on the asset feature of the prepaid account:

- Fees or charges for opening, issuing, or holding a negative balance on the asset feature, or for the availability of credit, whether imposed on a one-time or periodic basis;[56]
- Fees or charges that will be imposed only when credit is extended on the asset feature or when there is a negative balance on the asset feature;[57] and
- Fees or charges where the amount of the fee or charge is higher when credit is extended on the asset feature or when there is a negative balance on the asset feature.

Issuers must wait at least 30 days after a prepaid account is registered before opening a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, making a solicitation or providing an application to open a covered separate credit feature that could be accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card, or allowing an existing credit feature opened prior to the consumer obtaining the prepaid account to become a covered separate credit feature accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card. Issuers must obtain an application or specific request from the consumer to link such a credit feature to a prepaid account (Comment 12(a)(1)-7.ii).

Liability and Defenses

Civil Liability – TILA Sections 129B, 129C, 130, and 131

If a creditor fails to comply with any requirements of TILA, other than with the advertising provisions of Chapter 3, it may be held liable to the consumer for:

- Actual damage, and [56] This provision does not prohibit fees or charges to open, issue, or hold the prepaid account generally, where the amount of the fee or charge imposed on the asset feature is not higher based on whether credit might be offered or has been accepted, whether or how much credit the consumer has accessed, or the amount of credit available.

[57] This provision does not prohibit fees or charges for the actual costs of collecting the credit extended, if otherwise permitted by law.

- Cost of any successful legal action together with reasonable attorney's fees.

The creditor also may be held liable for any of the following:

- In an individual action, twice the amount of the finance charge involved.
- In an individual action relating to an open-end credit transaction that is not secured by real property or a dwelling, twice the amount of the finance charge involved, with a minimum of $500 and a maximum of $5,000 or such higher amount as may be appropriate in the case of an established pattern or practice of such failure.
- In an individual action relating to a closed-end credit transaction secured by real property or a dwelling, not less than $400 and not more than $4,000.
- In a class action, such amount as the court may allow (with no minimum recovery for each class member). However, the total amount of recovery in any class actions arising out of the same failure to comply by the same creditor cannot be more than $1 million or 1 percent of the creditor's net worth, whichever is less.

A creditor that fails to comply with TILA Section 129, 15 U.S.C. Section 1639 (requirements for certain mortgages), may be held liable to the consumer for all finance charges and fees paid by the consumer unless the creditor demonstrates that the failure was not material. A mortgage originator that is not a creditor and that fails to comply with TILA Section 129B (requirements for mortgage loan originators) also may be liable to consumers for the greater of actual damages or an amount equal to three times the total amount of direct and indirect compensation or gain to the mortgage originator in connection with the loan, plus costs, including reasonable attorney's fees. In addition, TILA Section 130(a) provides that a creditor may be liable for failure to comply with the ability-to-repay requirements of TILA Section 129C(a) unless the creditor demonstrates that failure to comply was not material.

Generally, civil actions that may be brought against a creditor may be maintained against any assignee of the creditor only if the violation is apparent on the face of the disclosure statement or other documents assigned, except where the assignment was involuntary. For high-cost mortgage loans (under 12 CFR 1026.32(a)), any subsequent purchaser or assignee is subject to all claims and defenses that the consumer could assert against the creditor, unless the assignee demonstrates that it could not reasonably have determined that the loan was a high-cost mortgage loan subject to (12 CFR 1026.32).

In specified circumstances, the creditor or assignee has no liability if it corrects identified errors within 60 days of discovering the errors and prior to the institution of a civil action or the receipt of written notice of the error from the obligor. Additionally, a creditor and assignee will not be liable for bona fide errors that occurred despite the maintenance of procedures reasonably adapted to avoid any such error.

Moreover, TILA also provides consumers with the right to assert a violation of TILA's anti-steering provisions or the ability-to-repay standards for residential mortgage loan requirements "as a matter of defense by recoupment or setoff" against a foreclosure action. In general, the amount of recoupment or setoff shall be equal to the amount that the consumer would be entitled to generally under 15 U.S.C. 1640(a) for a valid claim, plus the cost to the consumer of the action (including reasonable attorney's fees).

Refer to Sections 129B, 129C, 130, and 131 of TILA for more information.

Criminal Liability – TILA Section 112

Anyone who willingly and knowingly fails to comply with any requirement of TILA will be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Administrative Actions – TILA Section 108

TILA authorizes federal regulatory agencies,[58] when carrying out enforcement activities, to require financial institutions to make monetary and other adjustments to the consumers' accounts when the true finance charge or APR exceeds the disclosed finance charge or APR by more than a specified accuracy tolerance. That authorization extends to unintentional errors, including isolated violations (e.g., an error that occurred only once or errors, often without a common cause, that occurred infrequently and randomly).

Under certain circumstances, TILA requires federal regulatory agencies to order financial institutions to reimburse consumers when understatement of the APR or finance charge involves:

- Patterns or practices of violations (e.g., errors that occurred, often with a common cause, consistently or frequently, reflecting a pattern with a specific type or types of consumer credit);
- Gross negligence; or
- Willful noncompliance intended to mislead the person to whom the credit was extended.

Any administrative enforcement proceeding that may be brought by a regulatory agency against a creditor may be maintained against any assignee of the creditor if the violation is apparent on the face of the disclosure statement or other documents assigned, except where the assignment was involuntary under Section 131 (15 U.S.C. 1641).

Specific Defenses – TILA Section 108

Defense Against Civil, Criminal, and Administrative Actions

A financial institution in violation of TILA may avoid liability by:

[58] For FFIEC guidance on how agencies implement this provision, see FFIEC, Administrative Enforcement of the Truth in Lending Act, 63 Fed. Reg. 47495 (Sept. 8, 1998).

- Discovering the error before an action is brought against the financial institution, or before the consumer notifies the financial institution, in writing, of the error;
- Notifying the consumer of the error within 60 days of discovery; and
- Making the necessary adjustments to the consumer's account, also within 60 days of discovery. (The consumer will pay no more than the lesser of the finance charge actually disclosed or the dollar equivalent of the APR actually disclosed.)

The above three actions also may allow the financial institution to avoid a regulatory order to reimburse the customer.

An error is "discovered" if it is:

- Discussed in a final, written report of examination;
- Identified through the financial institution's own procedures; or
- An inaccurately disclosed APR or finance charge included in a regulatory agency notification to the financial institution.

When a disclosure error occurs, the financial institution is not required to re-disclose after a loan has been consummated or an account has been opened. If the financial institution corrects a disclosure error by merely re-disclosing required information accurately, without adjusting the consumer's account, the financial institution may still be subject to civil liability and an order to reimburse from its regulator.

The circumstances under which a financial institution may avoid liability under TILA do not apply to violations of the Fair Credit Billing Act (Chapter 4 of TILA).

Additional Defenses Against Civil Actions

The financial institution may avoid liability in a civil action if it shows by a preponderance of evidence that the violation was not intentional and resulted from a bona fide error that occurred despite the maintenance of procedures to avoid the error.

A bona fide error may include a clerical, calculation, computer malfunction, programming, or printing error. It does not include an error of legal judgment.

Showing that a violation occurred unintentionally could be difficult if the financial institution is unable to produce evidence that explicitly indicates it has an internal controls program designed to ensure compliance. The financial institution's demonstrated commitment to compliance and its adoption of policies and procedures to detect errors before disclosures are furnished to consumers could strengthen its defense.

Statute of Limitations – TILA Sections 108, 129, 129B, 129C, 129D, 129E, 129F, 129G, 129H, and 130

In general, civil actions may be brought within one year after the violation occurred. For private education loans, civil actions may be brought within one year from the date on which the first regular payment of principal and interest is due. After that time, and if allowed by state law, the consumer may still assert the violation as a defense if a financial institution were to bring an action to collect the consumer's debt.

A civil action for a violation of TILA Section 129 (requirements for certain mortgages), 129B (residential mortgage loan origination), or 129C (minimum standards for residential mortgage loans) may be brought three years from the date of the occurrence of the violation (as compared with one year for most other TILA violations) (TILA Section 130(e)).

Moreover, TILA provides that when a creditor, assignee, other holder, or anyone acting on such a person's behalf initiates a foreclosure action on, or any other action to collect the debt in connection with a residential mortgage loan, a consumer may assert a violation of TILA Section 129B(c)(1) or (2) or 129C(a) "as a matter of defense by recoupment or setoff" (TILA Section 130(k)). There is no time limit on the use of this defense, and the amount of recoupment or setoff is limited, with respect to the special statutory damages, to no more than three years of finance charges and fees.

Criminal actions and actions brought by regulators[59] are not subject to the general one-year statute of limitations. Actions brought by a state attorney general to enforce a violation of Sections 129, 129B, 129C, 129D, 129E, 129F, 129G, or 129H may be brought not later than three years after the date on which the violation occurs.

However, administrative enforcement actions under the policy guide involving erroneously disclosed APRs and finance charges may be subject to time limitations by TILA. Those limitations range from the date of the last regulatory examination of the financial institution, to as far back as 1969, depending on when loans were made, when violations were identified, whether the violations were repeat violations, and other factors.

There is no time limitation on willful violations intended to mislead the consumer. A general summary of the various time limitations that otherwise apply follows.

- For open-end credit, reimbursement applies to violations not older than two years.
- For closed-end credit, reimbursement is generally directed for loans with violations occurring since the immediately preceding examination.

[59] However, reimbursement required by regulatory action may be limited to the last examination conducted at the institution.

Rescission Rights (Open-End and Closed-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.15 and 1026.23

TILA provides that for certain transactions secured by the consumer's principal dwelling, a consumer has three business days after becoming obligated on the debt to rescind the transaction. The right of rescission allows consumer(s) time to reexamine their credit agreements and cost disclosures and to reconsider whether they want to place their homes at risk by offering them as security for the credit. A higher-priced mortgage loan (whether or not it is a HOEPA loan) having a prepayment penalty that does not conform to the prepayment penalty limitations (12 CFR 1026.32(c) and (d) and 12 CFR 1026.43(g) (subject to certain exclusions)), is also subject to a three-year right of rescission. Transactions exempt from the right of rescission include residential mortgage transactions (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(24)) and refinancings or consolidations with the original creditor where no "new money" is advanced.

If a transaction is rescindable, consumers must be given a notice explaining that the creditor has a security interest in the consumer's home, that the consumer may rescind, how the consumer may rescind, the effects of rescission, and the date the rescission period expires.

To rescind a transaction, a consumer must notify the creditor in writing by midnight of the third business day after the latest of three events:

- Consummation of the transaction;
- Delivery of material TILA disclosures; or
- Receipt[60] of the required notice of the right to rescind.

For purposes of rescission, business day means every calendar day except Sundays and the legal public holidays (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6)). The term "material disclosures" is defined in 12 CFR 1026.23(a)(3) to mean the required disclosures of the APR, the finance charge, the amount financed, the total of payments, the payment schedule, and the disclosures and limitations referred to in 12 CFR 1026.32(c) and (d) and 1026.43(g).

The creditor may not disburse any monies (except into an escrow account) and may not provide services or materials until the three-day rescission period has elapsed and the creditor is reasonably satisfied that the consumer has not rescinded. If the consumer rescinds the transaction, the creditor must refund all amounts paid by the consumer (even amounts disbursed to third parties) and terminate its security interest in the consumer's home.

A consumer may waive the three-day rescission period and receive immediate access to loan proceeds if the consumer has a "bona fide personal financial emergency." The consumer must give the creditor a signed and dated waiver statement that describes the emergency, specifically [60] 12 CFR 1026.15(b) and 1026.23(b)(1) were amended to include the electronic delivery of the notice of the right to rescind. If a paper notice of the right to rescind is used, a creditor must deliver two copies of the notice to each consumer entitled to rescind. However, under the final rule on electronic delivery of disclosures, if the notice is in electronic form, in accordance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the E-Sign Act, only one copy to each customer is required.

waives the right, and bears the signatures of all consumers entitled to rescind the transaction. The consumer provides the explanation for the bona fide personal financial emergency, but the creditor decides the sufficiency of the emergency.

If the required rescission notice or material TILA disclosures are not delivered or if they are inaccurate, the consumer's right to rescind may be extended from three days after becoming obligated on a loan to up to three years.

Truth in Lending Act Examination Procedures[61]

Examination Objectives

1. To determine the financial institution's compliance with the Truth in Lending Act (TILA) and Regulation Z.

2. To initiate corrective action when policies or internal controls are deficient, or when violations of law or regulation are identified.

General Procedures

3. Obtain information pertinent to the area of examination from the financial institution's compliance management system program (historical examination findings, complaint information, and significant findings from compliance review and audit).

4. Through discussions with management and review of the following documents, determine whether the financial institution's internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance in the area under review. Identify procedures used daily to detect errors/violations promptly. Also, review the procedures used to ensure compliance when changes occur (e.g., changes in interest rates, service charges, computation methods, and software programs).

   - Organizational charts
   - Process flowcharts
   - Policies and procedures
   - Loan documentation and disclosures
   - Checklists/worksheets and review documents
   - Computer programs

5. Review compliance review and audit workpapers and determine whether:

   a. The procedures used address all regulatory provisions (See Transactional Testing section).

   b. Steps are taken to follow up on previously identified deficiencies.

[61] These procedures reflect changes to TILA and Regulation Z through May 2018, including applicable provisions of the Economic Growth, Regulatory Relief, and Consumer Protection Act P.L 115-174 (May 24, 2018) that do not require rulemaking to be effective.

c. The procedures used include samples that cover all product types and decision centers.

d. The work performed is accurate (through a review of some transactions).

e. Significant deficiencies, and the root cause of the deficiencies, are included in reports to management/board.

f. Corrective actions are timely and appropriate.

g. The area is reviewed at an appropriate interval, based upon appropriate risks.

6. Review the financial institution's record retention practices to determine whether the required documentation or evidence of compliance is retained for at least:

Two years after the disclosures were required to be made or other action was required to be taken, other than for the advertising requirements, requirements for mortgages subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), and certain requirements for mortgages, which are described below (12 CFR 1026.25(a)).

Three years after the later of the date of consummation, the date disclosures are required to be made, or the date action is required to be taken, for evidence of compliance with 12 CFR 1026.19(e)-(f) (regarding closed-end loans that are secured by real property or a cooperative unit and subject to those sections) other than as set forth in 4.c below (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(1)(i)).

Five years after consummation for completed Closing Disclosure forms, and all documents related to these disclosures, as required by 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i) or (f)(4)(i). If the loan is sold, transferred, or otherwise disposed of during that time, the creditor must provide a copy of the Closing Disclosure to the owner or servicer as part of the loan file transfer, who must retain the disclosure for the remainder of the five-year period (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(1)(ii)).

Three years after the date of receipt of payment to show compliance with loan originator compensation requirements (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(2)).

Three years after consummation to show compliance with ability-to-repay minimum standards (12 CFR 1026.43(c)-(f)) and prepayment penalty restrictions (12 CFR 1026.43(g)) for loans secured by a dwelling (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(3)).

Disclosure Forms

1. Determine if the financial institution has changed any TILA disclosure forms or if there are forms that have not been previously reviewed for accuracy. If so:

   Verify the accuracy of each disclosure by reviewing the following (as applicable):

   - Credit card application/solicitation disclosures (12 CFR 1026.60(b)-(e))
   - HELOC disclosures (12 CFR 1026.40(d) and (e))

- Initial disclosures 12 CFR 1026.6 and, if applicable, additional HELOC disclosures (12 CFR 1026.40)
- Periodic statement disclosures (12 CFR 1026.7 and 12 CFR 1026.41)
- Statement of billing rights and change in terms notice (12 CFR 1026.9(a), (b), (c) or (g))
- Note and/or contract forms (including those furnished to dealers)
- Notice of Right to Rescind/Cancel (12 CFR 1026.15(b), 1026.23(b)(1)) and 1026.47(c)(4))
- Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e) and 1026.37)
- Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.19(f) and 1026.38)

Closed-End Credit Disclosure Forms Review Procedures

Closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33, are subject to the disclosure, timing, and other requirements under the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure rule. Thus, for most closed-end mortgages, including construction-only loans and loans secured by vacant land or by 25 or more acres, creditors must provide the Loan Estimate and the Closing Disclosure. There is a partial exemption in 12 CFR 1026.3(h) from the requirement to provide the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure if the transaction meets all of the following criteria: (i) The transaction is secured by a subordinate lien; (ii) the transaction is for the purpose of home buyer assistance, such as down payments or closing costs, rehabilitation loans, energy efficiency assistance, or foreclosure prevention; (iii) the credit contract does not require the payment of interest; (iv) the credit contract provides for repayment that is forgiven, deferred for 20 years, or deferred until the property is sold or is no longer the consumer's principal dwelling; and (v) the total costs payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction at consummation are limited to (A) recording fees, (B) transfer taxes, (C) a bona fide and reasonable application fee, and (D) a bona fide and reasonable fee for housing counseling services; and the total of costs payable by the consumer for the application fee and housing counseling services is less than 1 percent of the amount of credit extended. For those transactions meeting the criteria for a partial exemption, creditors may provide either a compliant disclosure of the cost of credit under 12 CFR 1026.18 or a compliant Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure, and do not need to provide the special information booklet, Good Faith Estimate, or HUD-1 settlement statement (12 CFR 1024.5(d)).

NOTE: The GFE, HUD-1, and Truth in Lending forms continue to be used for transactions covered by the other disclosure requirements of TILA or RESPA (e.g., reverse mortgages) or before the effective date of the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule (October 3, 2015) (12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f)).

Closed-End Credit Disclosure Forms – For Transactions Under 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)

NOTE: The 2017 TILA-RESPA rule includes an optional compliance period, which began on October 10, 2017, and is for transactions for which a creditor or mortgage broker received an application prior to October 1, 2018. During this period, early compliance with the 2017 rule was allowed but not required.

1. For a closed-end credit transaction subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), determine whether the creditor provides disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.37 (Loan Estimate) and 12 CFR 1026.38 (Closing Disclosure) (12 CFR 1026.19(e) and 1026.19(f)).

    a. For loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e), determine whether the creditor provides the good faith disclosures in the form required by 12 CFR 1026.37 and conforming to the Loan Estimate in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.19(e), 1026.37(o)).

    b. For loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(f), determine whether the creditor provides the Closing Disclosure in the form required by 12 CFR 1026.38 and conforming to the Closing Disclosure in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.19(f), 1026.38(t)).

    NOTE: Use of the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure is mandatory for RESPA-covered transactions. For transactions not covered by RESPA, the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure may be considered a model form.

Loan Estimate – 12 CFR 1026.37(a) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

1. Loan Estimate. Determine whether the disclosures required for the Loan Estimate are accurately completed and include the following disclosures on the first page (12 CFR 1026.37(a)). Disclosures are detailed below according to the designations made on the Loan Estimate form:

    a. The statement: “Save this Loan Estimate to compare with your Closing Disclosure” (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(2));

    b. Name and address of creditor (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(3));

c. Date Issued (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(4));

d. Applicants (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(5));

e. Property. The property address, including ZIP code (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(6));

f. Sale Price (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(7):

- For transactions that do not have a seller, the estimated value of the property identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(6), labeled “Prop. Value”.

g. Loan Term. Stated in years, months, or both, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(8));

i. Product. Product type, including the type of interest rate categorized as “Adjustable Rate”, “Step Rate,” or “Fixed Rate.” This disclosure must be preceded by the type of feature that may change the consumer’s periodic payment, such as “Negative Amortization,” “Interest Only,” “Step Payment,” “Balloon Payment,” or “Seasonal Payment,” with the duration of any introductory rate or payment period and the first adjustment period if applicable (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10));

j. Loan Type. Categorized as “Conventional”, “FHA”, “VA”, or “Other” (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(11));

k. Loan ID # (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(12)); and

l. Rate Lock. A statement of whether the disclosed interest rate is locked for a specific period. If so, the date and time (including time zone) that the lock will expire, along with an accompanying statement that the interest rate, any points, and any lender credits may change unless the interest rate has been locked (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(13)).

Loan Terms – 12 CFR 1026.37(b) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

2. Loan Terms. Determine whether, under the heading “Loan Terms”, all disclosures are completed and accurate (12 CFR 1026.37(b)):

a. Loan Amount (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1));

b. Interest Rate (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2));

c. Principal and Interest. The applicable unit period (i.e., biweekly, monthly, yearly) must precede the initial periodic payment amount that will be due under the terms of the legal obligation, labeled “Principal & Interest” (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(3));

d. Prepayment Penalty. A statement of whether the loan contains a prepayment penalty, an affirmative or negative response to the question, the maximum amount of the prepayment penalty that may be imposed, and the date on which the penalty may no longer be applied (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(4), 1026.37(b)(7)(i)). If the date is disclosed (for an affirmative response), determine whether it is disclosed as the year in which the event occurs, counting from the date of consummation (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(8)(iii));

e. Balloon Payment. A statement of whether the loan contains a balloon payment, an affirmative or negative response to the question, the maximum amount of the balloon payment, and the due date of such payment (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(5), 1026.37(b)(7)(ii)). If the date is disclosed (for an affirmative response), determine whether it is disclosed as the year in which the event occurs, counting from the due date of the initial periodic payment (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(8)(ii)); and

f. Whether the loan amount, interest rate, or monthly principal and interest can increase after closing (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)) and, if so, the information required by 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(i) -(iii) and 1026.37(b)(8)(i)-(ii).

Projected Payments – 12 CFR 1026.37(c) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

3. Projected Payments. Determine whether, under the heading “Projected Payments” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)):

   a. All required fields in the table are completed, follow the formatting and statement requirements, are accurate, and itemize the periodic payments or range of payments together with an itemized estimate of taxes, insurance, assessments, and payments to be made with escrow account funds (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1) – (5));

   NOTE: If accurate, a creditor can indicate that a portion of taxes, insurance, and assessments will be paid with escrow account funds, such as by using the word “some” (Comment 37(c)(4)(iv)-2);

   b. Each separate periodic payment or range of payments is itemized as follows (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)):

      i. Principal and Interest. The amount payable for principal and interest labeled “Principal & Interest”, including the term “only interest” if the payment or range of payments includes any interest-only payment (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(i));

A. Adjustable Rate Loans. The maximum principal and interest payment must be determined by assuming that the interest rate in effect throughout the loan term is the maximum possible interest rate. The minimum amounts must be determined by assuming that the interest rate in effect throughout the loan term is the minimum possible interest rate (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(i)(A));

B. Adjustable Rate and Negative Amortization Loans. The maximum principal and interest amounts (after the loan term period for which the loan principal balance may increase) must be determined by assuming the maximum principal amount permitted under the terms of the legal obligation at the end of the loan term period. The minimum amounts must be determined by assuming that the interest rate in effect throughout the loan term is the minimum possible interest rate (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(i)(B)).

ii. Mortgage Insurance. The maximum amount payable for mortgage insurance premiums corresponding to the principal and interest payment disclosed, labeled "Mortgage Insurance" (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(ii));

iii. Escrow. The amount payable into an escrow account to pay some or all of the charges described in 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(ii), as applicable, labeled "Escrow," together with a statement that the amount disclosed can increase over time (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(iii); and

iv. Total Monthly Payment. The total periodic payment, calculated as the sums disclosed as the "Principal &Interest", "Mortgage Insurance," and "Escrow," labeled "Total Monthly Payment" (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(iv)).

NOTE: The labels required pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2) must be listed under the subheading "Payment Calculation" (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(3)(i)).

c. If the amount of a periodic monthly payment may change, additional, separate periodic payments, or range of payments have been disclosed. Events requiring additional disclosure(s) include: (i) the change of the periodic principal and interest payment or range of such payments, (ii) a scheduled balloon payment, (iii) the automatic termination of mortgage insurance, or (iv) the anniversary of the due date of the initial periodic payment or range of payments immediately following the occurrence of a change in the principal and interest payment or range of such payments (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(i));

d. The creditor has met the following in disclosing a range of payments (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii)):

i. The creditor has disclosed both the minimum and maximum amount for both the principal and interest payment and the total periodic payment (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii));

ii. The creditor has accurately disclosed a range of payments where multiple events are combined into a single range of payments in order to meet the requirement that only four disclosures may be made (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii)(A));

iii. The creditor has accurately disclosed a range of payments where multiple events occur during a single year or an event occurs during the same year as the initial periodic payment or range of payments. If the event occurs during the same year as the initial periodic payment or range of payments, the creditor has disclosed the range that would apply during the year in which the events will occur (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii)(B));

NOTE: If multiple changes to periodic principal and interest payments would result in more than one separate periodic payment or range of payments in a single year, the creditor must combine the changes and disclose them as a single range of payments (Comment 37(c)(1)(iii)(B)-1); and

iv. The creditor has accurately disclosed a range of payments if the periodic principal and interest payment may adjust based on index rates at the time an interest rate adjustment may occur (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii)(C)).

e. The creditor has not disclosed more than four separate periodic payments or ranges of payments (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(ii)):

i. If additional separate periodic payments or range of payments disclosures are required after the third separate periodic payment or range of payment disclosure, and the transaction does not involve a balloon payment, determine whether the creditor has disclosed the additional separate periodic payment or range of payments as a single fourth range of payments disclosure (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(ii));

ii. If additional separate periodic payments or range of payments disclosures are required and the transaction involves a final balloon payment, determine whether the creditor has disclosed the additional separate periodic payment or range of payments as a single range of payments after the second separate periodic payment disclosure. Disclosure of the final balloon payment must appear as the final disclosure, under the heading "Final Payment" (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(ii)(A), 1026.37(c)(3)(iii));

iii. The automatic termination of mortgage insurance requires disclosure of an additional separate periodic payment or range of payments only if the total number of separate periodic payments or ranges of payments does not exceed three (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(ii)(B)); and

iv. Each separate periodic payment or range of payments must be disclosed under a subheading stating the years of the loan during which that payment or range of payments will apply. The years must be disclosed in sequence of whole years from the due date of the initial periodic payment (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(3)(ii)).

NOTE: See the Narrative for further discussion of requirements related to the Projected Payments table.

f. Taxes, Insurance, and Assessments. Determine whether the creditor accurately discloses (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)):

i. The sum of all mortgage-related obligations, expressed as a monthly amount, even if no escrow account for the payment of some or any of such charges will be established, labeled "Taxes, Insurance & Assessments" (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(i-ii));

NOTE: The term "mortgage-related obligations," as used here, takes the definition used in 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(8); however, it does not include amounts identified in 12 CFR 1026.4(b)(5). Amounts that must be disclosed as "Taxes, Insurance & Assessments" include premiums or other charges for credit life, accident, health, or loss-of-income insurance; premiums or other charges for insurance against loss of or damage to property, or against liability arising out of the ownership or use of property; or premiums or charges paid for debt cancellation or debt suspension coverage (12 CFR 1026.43(b)(8)).

ii. A statement that the mortgage-related obligations disclosed can increase over time (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(iii)). If estimates are used for property taxes and homeowner's insurance, they must reflect (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)):

A. The taxable assessed value of the real property or cooperative unit securing the transaction after consummation, including the value of any improvements on the property or to be constructed on the property if known. The disclosure must be made whether or not such construction will be financed from the proceeds of the transaction for property taxes (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)(i)); and

B. The replacement costs of the property during the initial year after the transaction for premiums or other charges for insurance against loss of or damage to property, or against liability arising out of the ownership or use of property (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)(ii)).

iii. A statement of whether the mortgage-related obligations include payments for property taxes; premiums or other charges for insurance against loss of or damage to property, or against liability arising out of the ownership or use of property; or as otherwise identified by 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(8). The creditor must disclose whether the amounts will be paid by the creditor using escrow account funds (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(iv));

NOTE: If only a portion of such amounts are to be paid with escrow account funds, a creditor may so indicate, such as by using the word "some" (Comment 37(c)(4)(iv)-2).

iv. A statement that the consumer must pay separately any mortgage-related obligations that are not paid by the creditor using escrow account funds (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(v)); and

v. A reference to the escrow account information contained on page 2 of the Loan Estimate, captioned "Initial Escrow Payment at Closing" (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(vi)).

Costs at Closing – 12 CFR 1026.37(d) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

4. Costs at Closing. Determine whether, under the heading "Costs at Closing," the creditor discloses the Estimated Closing Costs (including Loan Costs and Other Costs, less Lender Credits) and the Estimated Cash to Close (including Closing Costs), based upon the calculations required by 12 CFR 1026.37(f), (g), and (h) (and found on page 2 of the Loan Estimate) (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)).

5. Optional Alternative Table for Transactions without a Seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing. Determine whether, for transactions that do not involve a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing, the creditor chose to use the alternative "Cash to Close" table. If so, determine whether the amount is calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iv) (Calculating Cash to Close), includes a statement of whether the disclosed estimated amount is due from or to the consumer; and includes a statement referring the consumer to the alternative "Calculating Cash to Close" table pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2) (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(2)).

   NOTES:

   - In a purchase transaction, the optional alternative disclosure may be used for the simultaneous subordinate financing Loan Estimate only if the first-lien Closing Disclosure will record the entirety of the seller's transaction. (Comment 37(d)(2)-1) Creditors may only use this alternative estimated cash to close disclosure in conjunction with the alternative disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2) (Comment 37(d)(2)-1).

   - See the Narrative for further discussion of requirements related to the Costs at Closing table.

Website Disclosure – 12 CFR 1026.37(e) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

6. Website Reference. Determine whether the creditor discloses that the consumer may obtain general information and tools on the CFPB's website and has included a link to the site specified in 12 CFR 1026.37(e) (12 CFR 1026.37(e)).

Closing Cost Details: Loan Costs – 12 CFR 1026.37(f) (Page 2 of the Loan Estimate)

7. Loan Costs. Determine on page 2 whether, under the heading "Loan Costs", the creditor makes the following disclosures (12 CFR 1026.37(f)):

   a. Origination charges. Accurately itemized to reflect each amount and a subtotal of all amounts that the consumer will pay to each creditor and loan originator for originating and extending the credit. Determine whether the points paid to the creditor to reduce the interest rate are itemized separately, as both a percentage of the amount of credit extended and a dollar amount and using the label "__% of Loan Amount (Points)." Determine whether points paid is the first item listed. If points to reduce the interest rate are not paid, this disclosure must be left blank (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(1));

   b. Services You Cannot Shop For. An accurate itemization, limited to 13 items, of each amount and subtotal of all amounts that the consumer will pay for settlement services that the consumer cannot shop for and that are provided by persons other than the creditor or mortgage broker. Determine whether the terms related to title insurance include "Title" as an introductory description (12 CFR 1026.37)(f)(2));

   c. Services You Can Shop For. An accurate itemization, limited to 14 items, of each amount and subtotal of all amounts that the consumer will pay for settlement services that the consumer can shop for and that are provided by persons other than the creditor or mortgage broker. Determine whether the terms related to title insurance include "Title" as an introductory description (12 CFR 1026.37)(f)(3));

   d. Total Loan Costs. An accurate sum of the subtotals required to be disclosed under 1026.37(f) as Origination Charges, Services You Cannot Shop for and Services You Can Shop For (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(4)); and

   e. Other than as noted in item 1.a above, determine that items are ordered alphabetically by label under the applicable subheading. If there are more than the maximum allowable number of line items, determine that the remaining charges are disclosed in the aggregate in the last line as "Additional Charges" (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(5) and (f)(6)).

Closing Cost Details: Other Costs – 12 CFR 1026.37(g) (Page 2 of the Loan Estimate)

8. Other Costs. Determine whether the creditor makes the following disclosures (12 CFR 1026.37(g)):

   a. Taxes and Other Government Fees. Accurately itemized to reflect amounts to be paid to state and local governments for taxes and other government fees, including subtotals for recording fees and other taxes. A separate line must be included for transfer taxes paid by the consumer. If not charged to the consumer, these fields must be left blank (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(1));

b. Prepaids. Accurately itemized to reflect amounts to be paid by the consumer in advance of the first scheduled payment and the subtotals of all such amounts. The disclosures must follow the required order and include the number of months and the total dollar amount to be paid at consummation for homeowner's insurance and mortgage insurance premiums; the prepaid interest to be paid at consummation, based on daily interest, number of days, interest rate, and the total to be collected; the number of months for which property taxes are to be paid; and the amount the consumer will pay at consummation. If any of these items are not charged to the consumer, the field must be left blank. A maximum of three additional items may be disclosed (including applicable time period covered by the payment at consummation and total to be paid) as Prepaids (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(2));

c. Initial Escrow Payment at Closing. Accurately itemized to reflect the amounts that the consumer will be expected to place into an escrow account at consummation to be applied to recurring periodic charges and subtotals of all amounts. The disclosure must provide the amount escrowed each month, the number of months of escrow, and the total amount to be paid into the escrow account by the consumer at consummation. Homeowner's insurance premiums, mortgage insurance premiums, and property taxes must be separately subtotaled. If any of these items are not charged to the consumer, that field must be left blank. A maximum of five additional items may be disclosed as part of Initial Escrow Payment at Closing (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(3));

d. Other. An accurate itemization of costs that the consumer is likely to pay or has contracted with a person other than the creditor or loan originator to pay, at closing and of which the creditor is aware at the time of issuing the Loan Estimate. Determine whether the creditor has used a descriptive label for each such amount and provided the subtotal of all such amounts. Determine whether the terms related to title insurance include "Title" as an introductory description and whether the parenthetical description "(optional)" is used at the end of the label for items disclosing any premiums paid for separate insurance, warranty, guarantee, or event-coverage products. A maximum of five items may be disclosed as "Other" (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(4));

e. Total Other Costs. An accurate sum of the subtotals for Taxes and Other Government Fees, Prepaids, Initial Escrow Payment at Closing, and Other disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(1) through (4) (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(5));

f. Total Closing Costs. Accurate component amounts and sum of the following (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)):

i. D+I. A sum of the Total Loan Costs and Total Other Costs (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(i)); and

ii. Lender Credits. The amount of any lender credits, disclosed as a negative number. If no such amount is disclosed, this line must be left blank (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii)); and

NOTE: The disclosure of "lender credits", as identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii), is required by (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(i)). "Lender credits", as identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii), represent the sum of non-specific lender credits and specific lender credits. Non-specific lender credits are generalized payments from the creditor to the consumer that do not pay for a particular fee on the disclosures provided pursuant to (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)). Specific lender credits are specific payments, such as a credit, rebate, or reimbursement, from a creditor to the consumer to pay for a specific fee. Non-specific lender credits and specific lender credits are negative charges to the consumer (Comment 19(e)(3)(i)-5)).

g. Determine that items follow the alphabetical ordering and addenda restrictions of 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(7) and (g)(8).

Closing Cost Details: Calculating Cash to Close – 12 CFR 1026.37(h) (Page 2 of the Loan Estimate)

9. Calculating Cash to Close. Determine whether, under the heading "Calculating Cash to Close," the creditor has accurately disclosed the total amount of cash or other funds that must be provided by the consumer at consummation, itemized into the following component amounts (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)):

   a. Total Closing Costs. The amount disclosed as the sum of the loan costs, other costs, and lender credits, labeled "Total Closing Costs" (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(i));

   b. Closing Costs Financed (Paid from your Loan Amount). The amount of any closing costs to be paid out of loan proceeds, disclosed as a negative number, labeled "Closing Costs Financed (Paid from your Loan Amount)" (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(ii). Determined by subtracting the estimated total amount of payments to third parties not otherwise disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(f) and (g) from the loan amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1);

   NOTE: (1) If the result of the calculation is zero or negative, the amount of zero dollars is disclosed. (2) If the result of the calculation is a positive number, the amount is disclosed as a negative number but only to the extent that the absolute value of the number does not exceed the total amount of closing costs (Comment 37(h)(1)(ii)-1).

   c. Down payment/Funds from Borrower. Labeled "Down Payment/Funds from Borrower":

i. In a purchase transaction as defined in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(9)(i), disclosed as the amount determined by subtracting the sum of the loan amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1) and any amount of existing loans assumed or taken subject to that will be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(iv), from the sale price of the property disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(7)(i), except as required by 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(A)(2) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(A)(1));

ii. For a purchase transaction as defined in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(9)(i) that is a simultaneous subordinate financing transaction, a transaction involving improvements to be made on the property, or when the sum of the loan amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1) and any amount of existing loans assumed or taken subject to on the Closing Disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(iv) exceeds the sale price of the property disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(7)(i), disclosed as the amount of estimated funds from the consumer determined in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(A)(2)); and

iii. For all other transactions, disclosed as the amount of estimated funds from the consumer determined in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(B)).

d. Deposit.

i. For a purchase transaction, disclosed as the amount that is paid to the seller or held in trust or escrow by an attorney or other party under the terms of the agreement for the sale of the property, as a negative number, labeled "Deposit"; and

ii. For all other transactions, disclosed as zero dollars, labeled "Deposit" (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iv)).

e. Funds for Borrower. Disclosed as the amount of funds for the consumer, labeled "Funds for Borrower". Determined in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v) by subtracting the sum of the loan amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1) and any amount of existing loans assumed or taken subject to that will be disclosed on the Closing Disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(iv) (excluding any closing costs financed disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(ii)) from the total amount of all existing debt being satisfied in the transaction. The total amount of all existing debt being satisfied in the transaction is the sum of the amounts that will be disclosed on the Closing Disclosure in the summaries of transactions table under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(ii), (iii), and (v), as applicable:

i.   B. By reducing the amount of the specific charge in the Loan Costs or Other Costs table (Comment 37(h)(1)(vi)-2).

g. Adjustments and Other Credits. Determined by combining the Total Loan Costs (determined under 12 CFR 1026.37(f)) and Total Other Costs (determined under 12 CFR 1026.37(g)) that are paid by persons other than the loan originator, creditor, consumer, or seller, together with any other amounts not otherwise disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(f) or (g) that are required to be paid by the consumer at closing in a transaction using the "Down Payment/Funds from Borrower" calculation under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(A)(1) or pursuant to a purchase and sale contract, labeled "Adjustments and Other Credits" (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(vii)).

    NOTE: The optional Alternative Calculating Cash to Close table may only be provided in transactions without a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing. In a purchase transaction, the optional alternative disclosure may be used for the simultaneous subordinate financing Loan Estimate only if the first lien Closing Disclosure will record the entirety of the transaction. The use of the alternative table for transactions without a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing is optional, but creditors may only use this alternative estimated cash to close disclosure in conjunction with the alternative disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.37(d)(2) (Comment 37(h)(2)-1).

If the transaction does not contain such loan terms, this table may not appear on the Loan Estimate (Comment 37(i)-1).

If 12 CFR 1026.38(k) applies to a simultaneous subordinate financing transaction, 12 CFR 1026.38(k) is completed based only on the terms and conditions of the simultaneous subordinate financing transaction and no contract sales price is disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(ii) on the Closing Disclosure for the simultaneous subordinate financing. (Comment 38(k)(1)-1)

Payoffs and Payments Table for Transactions Without a Seller or Simultaneous Subordinate Financing Transaction – 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B) (Page 3 of the Closing Disclosure)

The following modifications to Form H-25 of Appendix H may be made for a transaction that does not involve a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing, and for which the alternative tables are disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2) and (e), as illustrated by Form H-25(J).

23. Payoff and Payments. For transactions without a seller, determine whether a creditor, using an optional modified Closing Disclosure (as illustrated by Form H-25(J) in Appendix H), has provided alternative tables for Cash to Close, pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2), and for Calculating Cash to Close pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(e), and that the creditor itemizes the amounts of payments made at consummation to other parties from the credit extended to the consumer or funds provided by the consumer in connection with the transaction, including designees of the consumer, the payees, and a description of the purpose of such disbursements under the subheading "To;" and the total amount of such payments, labeled "Total Payoffs and Payments."

NOTE: Funds provided by designees of the consumer may include gift funds, grants, proceeds from loans that satisfy the partial exemption criteria in 12 CFR 1026.3(h), and, on the Closing Disclosure for a simultaneous subordinate financing transaction, contributions from a seller for costs associated with the subordinate financing (Comment 38(t)(5)(vii)(B)-1).

24. Disclosure of Subordinate Financing. For a transaction without a seller, or for a simultaneous subordinate financing transaction, if a creditor chose to disclose the alternative tables under 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2) and (e), determine whether a creditor's modifications to form H-25 of Appendix H, if any, were permissible pursuant to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii).

   A. The information required by 12 CFR 1026.38(a)(4)(ii), and 12 CFR 1026.38(f), (g), and (h) with respect to loan costs, other costs, and closing costs paid by the seller, may be deleted (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(A)).

   B. A table under the master heading "Closing Cost Details" required by 12 CFR 1026.38(f) may be added with the heading "Payoffs and Payments" that itemizes the amounts of payments made at closing to other parties from the credit extended to the consumer or funds provided by the consumer in connection with the transaction, including designees of the consumer; the payees and a description of the purpose of such disbursements under the subheading "To"; and the total amount of such payments, labeled "Total Payoffs and Payments" (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B)).

   C. The tables required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(j) and (k) may be deleted (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(C)).

NOTE: The commentary to 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B) provides guidance as follows:

- First-lien Closing Disclosure. On the Closing Disclosure for a first-lien transaction disclosed with the alternative tables pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2) and (e) that also has simultaneous subordinate financing, the proceeds of the subordinate financing are included in the payoff and payments table under 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B) by disclosing, as a credit, the principal amount of the subordinate financing, and if the net proceeds of the subordinate financing are less than the principal amount of the subordinate financing, the net proceeds (Comment 38(t)(5)(vii)(B)-2.i).

- Simultaneous subordinate financing – Closing Disclosure. On the Closing Disclosure for a simultaneous subordinate financing transaction disclosed with the alternative tables pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2) and (e), the proceeds of the subordinate financing applied to the first-lien transaction may be included in the payoffs and payments table under 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B) (Comment 38(t)(5)(vii)(B)-2.ii).

- Simultaneous subordinate financing – Seller contribution. If a creditor discloses the alternative tables pursuant 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2) and (e) on the simultaneous subordinate financing Closing Disclosure, the creditor also discloses as a credit in the payoffs and payments table on the simultaneous subordinate financing Closing Disclosure, any contributions from the seller toward the simultaneous subordinate financing. (See also Comments 38(j)-3 and 38(k)(2)(vii)-1 for disclosure requirements applicable to the first-lien transaction when the alternative disclosures are used for a simultaneous subordinate financing transaction and a seller contributes to the costs of the subordinate financing.) (Comment 38(t)(5)(vii)(B)-2.iii).

NOTE: As required by 12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(vii)(B), a form used for a transaction that does not involve a seller and is modified under 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii) must contain the label “Appraised Prop. Value”. Where an estimate is disclosed, rather than an appraisal, the label for the disclosure is changed to “Estimated Prop. Value” (Comment 38(a)(3)(vii)-1).

Additional Information About This Loan: Loan Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.38(l) (Page 4 of the Closing Disclosure)

25. Loan Disclosures. Determine whether the creditor accurately provides the required disclosures (12 CFR 1026.38(l)):

    a. Assumption. Whether the loan obligations may be assumed by a subsequent purchaser (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(1));

    b. Demand Feature. Whether the legal obligation includes a demand feature, and, if it does, a reference to the note or other loan contract for details (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(2));

    c. Late Payment. The dollar amount or percentage charge of any fee designated as a late payment (information required on the Loan Estimate by 12 CFR 1026.37(m)(4)) and the number of days after which such a charge will be triggered (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(3));

    d. Negative Amortization (Increase in Loan Amount). Whether the regular period payments may cause the principal balance to increase, and:

       i. If the regular periodic payments do not cover all of the interest due, the creditor provides a statement that the borrower’s principal balance will increase, such balance will likely become larger than the original loan amount, and increases in such balance lower the consumer’s equity in the property; and

ii. If the consumer may make regular periodic payments that do not cover all of the interest due, the creditor provides a statement that, if the consumer chooses a monthly payment option that does not cover all of the interest due, the principal balance may become larger than the original loan amount and the increases in the principal balance lower the consumer's equity in the property (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(4)(i)-(ii)).

e. Partial Payments. Whether the creditor that accepts less than the full amount due has provided a statement that the "lender" (using that label) may accept partial payments and apply such payments to the consumer's loan, and:

i. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are accepted but not applied to a consumer's loan until the consumer pays the remainder of the full amount due, a statement that the lender may hold partial payments in a separate account until the consumer pays the remainder of the payment and then apply the full periodic payment to the consumer's loan;

ii. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are not accepted, the lender does not accept any partial payments; and

iii. A statement that, if the loan is sold, the new lender may have a different policy (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(5)(i)-(iv)).

f. Security Interest. Whether the creditor states that the consumer is granting a security interest in the property securing the transaction, and that the borrower may lose the property if required payments are not made or otherwise fails to satisfy the requirements of the legal obligation. Determine that the creditor has included the property address and ZIP code (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(6));

g. Escrow Account. Under the subheading "Escrow Account" (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)), whether the creditor provides:

(i) Under the reference "For now," a statement that an escrow account may also be called an impound or trust account; a statement of whether the creditor has established or will establish (at or before consummation) an escrow account in connection with the transaction; and the following information required under 12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A) and (B);

(A) A statement that the creditor may be liable for penalties and interest if it fails to make a payment for any cost for which the escrow account is established; a statement that the consumer would have to pay such costs directly in the absence of the escrow account; and a table, entitled "Escrow," that contains, if an escrow account is or will be established, an itemization of the following:.

1) The total amount that the consumer will be required to pay into the account over the first year after consummation, labeled "Escrowed Property Costs over Year 1," together with a descriptive name of each charge to be paid (in whole or in part) from the escrow account, calculated as the Monthly Escrow Payment multiplied by the number of periodic payments scheduled to be made to the escrow account during the first year after consummation (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(1)).

2) The estimated amount that the consumer is likely to pay during the first year after consummation for the mortgage-related obligations described in 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(8) that are known to the creditor and that will not be paid using escrow account funds, labeled "Non-Escrowed Property Costs over Year 1," together with a descriptive name of each such charge and a statement that the consumer may have to pay other costs that are not listed (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(2)).

NOTE: The creditor discloses this amount only if an escrow account will be established. The disclosure is based on payments during the first year after consummation. If the creditor elects to make disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(1) and (4) based on amounts derived from the escrow account analysis required under Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17, then the creditor may make the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(2) based on a 12-month period beginning with the borrower's initial payment date (rather than beginning with consummation) (Comment 38(l)(7)(i)(A)(2)-2; Comment 38(l)(7)(i)(A)(5)-1).

3) The total amount disclosed and a reference to the disclosure made on the Closing Disclosure under the heading "Other Costs, Initial Escrow Payment at Closing," pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(g)(3), and a statement that the payment is a cushion for the escrow account, labeled "Initial Escrow Payment" (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(3)).

4) The amount the consumer will be required to pay into an escrow account with each periodic payment during the first year after consummation, labeled "Monthly Escrow Payment" (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(4)).

(ii) No Escrow. If an escrow account will not be established for the consumer, determine whether there is a statement that the consumer will not have an escrow account; the reason that an escrow account will not be established; a statement that the consumer must pay all property costs, such as taxes and homeowner's insurance, directly; a statement that the consumer may contact the creditor to inquire about the availability of an escrow account; and a table, titled "No Escrow," that itemizes:

(1) The estimated total amount the consumer will pay directly for the mortgage-related obligations described in 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(8) during the first year after consummation that are known to the creditor; and a statement that, without an escrow account, the consumer must pay the identified costs, possibly in one or two large payments, labeled “Property Costs over Year 1”; and

(2) The amount of any fee the creditor imposes on the consumer for not establishing an escrow account in connection with the transaction, labeled “Escrow Waiver Fee” (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(B)).

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(B)(1) requires disclosure based on payments during the first year after consummation. A creditor may comply with this requirement by basing the disclosure on a 12-month period beginning with the borrower’s initial payment date or on a 12-month period beginning with consummation (Comment 38(l)(7)(i)(B)(1)-2).

(A) Under the reference “In the future”, determine whether the creditor has disclosed under the reference “In the future” (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(ii)):

1) A statement that the consumer’s property costs may change and that, as a result, the consumer’s escrow payment may change (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(ii)(A));

2) A statement that the consumer may be able to cancel any escrow account that has been established, but that the consumer is responsible for directly paying all property costs in the absence of an escrow account (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(ii)(B)); and

3) A description of the consequences if the consumer fails to pay property costs, including the actions that a state or local government may take if property taxes are not paid, and the actions that the creditor may take if the consumer does not pay some or all property costs, such as adding amounts to the loan balance, adding an escrow account to the loan, or purchasing a property insurance policy on the consumer’s behalf that may be more expensive and provide fewer benefits than what the consumer could obtain directly (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(ii)(C)).

Additional Information About This Loan: Adjustable Payment (AP) Table – 12 CFR 1026.38(m) (Page 4 of the Closing Disclosure)

26. Adjustable Payment (AP) Table. Determine whether the creditor provides the AP disclosure required for the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(i) (12 CFR 1026.38(m)).

Additional Information About This Loan: Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) Table – 12 CFR 1026.38(n) (Page 4 of the Closing Disclosure)

27. Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) Table. Determine whether the creditor provides the AIR disclosures required for the Loan Estimate by 12 CFR 1026.37(j) (12 CFR 1026.38(n)).

Loan Calculations – 12 CFR 1026.38(o) (Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure)

28. Loan Calculations. Determine whether the creditor provides a separate table and accurately discloses the following information (12 CFR 1026.38(o)):

    a. Total of Payments. Expressed as a dollar amount, and a statement that the disclosure is the total the consumer will have paid after making all payments of principal, interest, mortgage insurance, and loan costs, as scheduled. The disclosed total of payments for each transaction shall be treated as accurate if the amount disclosed as the total of payments:

    i. Is understated by no more than $100, or

    ii. Is greater than the amount required to be disclosed (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(1)).

    NOTE: For transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), special tolerances apply to the disclosure of the total of payments for purposes of the right of rescission and foreclosure (12 CFR 1026.23(g)(1)(ii), (g)(2)(ii) and (h)(2)(ii)).

    b. Finance Charge. Expressed as a dollar amount, and including the statement "The dollar amount the loan will cost you." The finance charge and other disclosures affected by the disclosed finance charge (including the amount financed and the APR) is accurately calculated if the amount disclosed as the finance charge:

    i. Is understated by no more than $100, or

    ii. Is greater than the amount required to be disclosed (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(2)).

    c. Amount Financed. Expressed as a dollar amount, with the following statement: "The loan amount available after paying your up-front finance charge" (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(3));

    d. Annual Percentage Rate (APR). Expressed as a percentage, with the following statement: "Your costs over the loan term expressed as a rate. This is not your interest rate" (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(4)); and

    e. Total Interest Percentage (TIP). Expressed as a percentage, with the following statement: "The total amount of interest that you will pay over the loan term as a percentage of your loan amount" (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(5)).

Other Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.38(p) (Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure)

29. Other Disclosures. Determine whether the creditor accurately provides the following disclosures:

a. Appraisal. For transactions subject to 15 U.S.C. 1639h or 1691(e), as implemented in this part or Regulation B, 12 CFR Part 1002, respectively, under the subheading "Appraisal" (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(1)):

   i. If there was an appraisal of the property in connection with the loan, the creditor is required to provide the consumer with a copy at no additional cost to the consumer at least three days prior to consummation (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(1)(i)); and

   ii. If the consumer has not yet received a copy of the appraisal, the consumer should contact the creditor using the information disclosed in the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(1)(ii)).

b. Contract Details. A statement that the consumer should refer to the appropriate loan document and security instrument for information about nonpayment, what constitutes a default under the legal obligation, circumstances under which the creditor may accelerate the maturity of the obligation, and prepayment rebates and penalties (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(2)).

c. Liability after Foreclosure. A brief statement of whether, and the conditions under which, the consumer may remain responsible for any deficiency after foreclosure under applicable state law, a brief statement that certain protections may be lost if the consumer refinances or incurs additional debt on the property, and a statement that the consumer should consult an attorney for additional information (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(3)).

d. Refinance. The statement required on the Loan Estimate by 12 CFR 1026.37(m)(5) that "Refinancing this loan will depend on your future financial situation, the property value, and market conditions. You may not be able to refinance this loan" (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(4)).

e. Tax Deductions. A statement that, if the extension of credit exceeds the fair market value of the property, the interest on the portion of the credit extension that is greater than the fair market value of the property is not tax deductible for federal income tax purposes and a statement that the consumer should consult a tax advisor for further information (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(5)).

f. Loan Acceptance. If the creditor does not provide a line for the consumer's signature, the creditor must include with the other disclosures the same statement required in the Loan Estimate (pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(n)(2)) that "You do not have to accept this loan because you have received this form or signed a loan application" (12 CFR 1026.38(s)(2)).

Questions Notice – 12 CFR 1026.38(q) (Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure)

30. Questions. Determine whether the creditor provides a separate questions notice. The creditor must include a prominent question mark, a statement directing the consumer to use the contact information for questions, and a reference to CFPB's website for more information and to submit a complaint, and a link to http://www.consumerfinance.gov/mortgage-closing/ (12 CFR 1026.38(q)(1)-(3)).

Contact Information – 12 CFR 1026.38(r) (Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure)

31. Contact Information. Determine whether the creditor provides the required contact information for each lender, mortgage broker, consumer's real estate broker, seller's real estate broker, and settlement agent participating in the transaction; the name of the person, address, NMLS ID number, or if none, state and License ID; the name of the natural person who is the primary contact for the consumer at each entity, identified as "Contact," along with that person's Contact NMLS ID or Contact License ID, email address, and phone number (12 CFR 1026.38(r)(1)-(7)).

32. Confirm Receipt. Determine whether, if the creditor chooses to provide a signature statement, the creditor discloses, above the signature line, the statement "By signing, you are only confirming that you have received this form. You do not have to accept this loan because you have signed or received this form" (12 CFR 1026.38(s)(1)).

    NOTE: If the creditor does not provide a line for the consumer's signature, the creditor must include the following statement, labeled "Loan Acceptance": "You do not have to accept this loan because you have received this form or signed a loan application" (12 CFR 1026.38(s)(2)).

Form of Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.38(t)

33. Determine whether the creditor follows the format and content of Form H-25, set forth in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(1) and (3)), changes formatting only if there is an exception, including acceptable modifications in Appendix H for transactions without a seller (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)), and complies with the following rounding rules for dollar amounts and percentages:

    a. Rounding – nearest dollar. The following dollar amounts are rounded to the nearest whole dollar (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(4)(i)):

        i. The dollar amounts for Loan Terms (required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(b)) that are required to be rounded by 12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A) when disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6) and (7) (i.e., adjustments after consummation and details about prepayment penalty and balloon payments);

ii. The dollar amounts for projected payments or range of payments required by 12 CFR 1026.38(c) that are required to be rounded by 12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A) when disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii) (i.e., minimum and maximum amounts of principal and interest for projected periodic payments or range of payments);

iii. The dollar amounts required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(e) (Alternative Calculating Cash to Close table for transactions without a seller) and 12 CFR 1026.38(i) (Calculating Cash to Close table) under the subheading "Loan Estimate;"

iv. The dollar amounts required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(m) (adjustable payment table); and

v. The dollar amounts required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(c) (projected payments) that are required to be rounded by 12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(C) when disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(iv) (i.e., total monthly payment).

b. Percentages. The percentage amounts required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(b), (f)(1), (n), and (o)(4) and (5) must be disclosed by rounding the exact amounts to three decimal places and then dropping any trailing zeros to the right of the decimal point (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(4)(ii)).

c. Loan amount. The dollar amount required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(b) as required by 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1) is disclosed as an unrounded number, except that if the amount is a whole number, then the amount disclosed is truncated at the decimal point (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(4)(iii)).

d. Use of Form H-25 not required in certain circumstances. For a transaction that is not a federally related mortgage loan, the creditor is not required to use Form H-25 of Appendix H, but the disclosures must be made with headings, content, and format substantially similar to Form H-25 (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(3)(ii)).

NOTE: For such loans, the use of Form H-25, if properly completed with accurate content, constitutes compliance with the clear and conspicuous and segregation requirement of 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(1)(i) (Comment 38(t)(3)-1).

e. Exceptions. The changes required and permitted by 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5) are permitted for federally related mortgage loans for which the use of form H-25 is required under (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(3)). For non-federally related mortgage loans, the changes required or permitted by 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5) do not affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure, and therefore, are permissible. Any changes to the disclosure not specified in 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5) or not permitted by other provisions of 12 CFR 1026.38 are not permissible for federally related mortgage loans. Creditors in non-federally related mortgage loans making any changes that affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure will lose their protection from civil liability under TILA section 130 (Comment 38(t)(5)-1). 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5) contains important exceptions. For example, modifications of Form H-25 are permitted to separate consumer and seller information, if modifications comply with the requirements of (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(v)).

Construction or Construction-Permanent Loan Disclosures (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2), (c)(6); .19(e)(1); .37-.38; and Appendix D to Part 1026)

Regulation Z permits treating: (1) a series of advances under an agreement to extend credit up to a certain amount as one transaction, and (2) the construction and permanent phases of a multiple-advance construction loan that may be permanently financed by the same creditor as either one or more than one transaction 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6); (Comments 17(c)(6)-1 through -5).

NOTE: A creditor has the option to use the methods provided in Appendix D to part 1026 to calculate the annual percentage rate and other disclosures for construction loans in disclosing construction financing (Comment 17(c)(6)-2). Further, creditors may use, at their discretion, methods in Appendix D to estimate and disclose the terms of multiple-advance construction loans pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37 and .38 (Comment App. D-7).

The following provisions of Regulation Z and associated commentary apply to (1) construction-only, (2) construction-permanent combined (CP Loan-Combined), and/or (3) construction-permanent separate (CP Loan-Separate) disclosures, or some combination of these loan disclosures, as noted.

NOTE: Citations for violations are to be made to the appropriate regulatory provision, not to the Commentary. References below to Comments are provided for informational purposes.

Determine:

1. Timing of Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii); Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-1 and -5)
    a. Whether the creditor has delivered or placed in the mail the Loan Estimate not later than the third business day after receiving the consumer's application and not later than the seventh business day before consummation of the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)); See also Comment 17(c)(6)-2 discussing disclosures for construction loans).

       NOTES:
       - For a CP Loan-Combined, the creditor delivers or places in the mail one combined disclosure within these time frames (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-5).

- For a CP Loan-Separate for which an application for the construction and permanent financing has been received (either as one application or as a separate application), the creditor delivers or places in the mail the separate Loan Estimates for each phase within these time frames (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-5). If the creditor receives the application at separate times, the creditor must provide the Loan Estimate for each phase no later than the time frames applicable to the date it received the specific phase's application (i.e., if the creditor received the application for the permanent phase three days after the construction phase, it must deliver or place in the mail the permanent phase disclosure not later than the third day after receiving that application, not the construction phase application) (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-5).

- A creditor may also provide a separate Loan Estimate for the permanent phase before receiving an application for permanent financing at any time not later than the seventh business day before consummation (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-5).

- For a Construction-only transaction for which an application has been received and the creditor is separately disclosing the advances, the creditor delivers or places in the mail separate Loan Estimates for each advance no later than three business days after receiving the consumer's application (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-1).

2. Allocation of fees and charges when disclosing multiple transactions
   a. Whether fees and charges are allocated in construction-permanent loan or multiple-advance construction-only loan disclosures for purposes of calculating disclosures (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)).

      NOTES (Comment 17(c)(6)-5):

      - If the creditor has charged separate amounts for finance charges under 12 CFR 1026.4, and points and fees under 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1), such amounts are allocated to the phase for which they are charged.
      - For a CP Loan-Separate, the finance charges and points and fees that would not be imposed but for the construction financing are allocated to the construction phase, and all other finance charges and points and fees are allocated to the permanent financing.
      - For a CP Loan-Separate, if a creditor charges a greater origination fee for construction-permanent financing than for construction-only financing, the fee difference is allocated to the permanent phase.
      - For a CP Loan-Separate, fees and charges that are not used to compute the finance charge under 12 CFR 1026.4 or points and fees under 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1) may be allocated between the transactions in any manner the creditor chooses.

3. Sale Price
   a. Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(7)).
      i. For transactions that involve a seller, whether the contract sale price of the property is disclosed (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(7)(i)).
      ii. For transactions that do not involve a seller, whether the estimated value of the property is disclosed as "Prop. Value" (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(7)(ii)).

      NOTES:

      - For transactions that do not involve a seller and transactions that involve a seller where the sale price is not yet known, the creditor discloses the estimated value of the property based on the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure is provided to the consumer (Comment 37(a)(7)-1. See also 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i), Comment 17(c)(2)(i)-1, and Comment 19(e)(1)(i)-1).
      - For transactions involving construction where there is no seller, the creditor has the option to include the estimated value of the improvements to be made on the property (Comment 37(a)(7)-1).

   b. Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(vii)).
      i. If there is a seller, whether the creditor has disclosed the contract sale price of the property (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(vii)(A)).
      ii. Where there is no seller, whether the creditor has disclosed the appraised value of the property (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(vii)(B)).

      NOTES:

      - The value disclosed is determined by the appraisal or valuation used to determine approval of the credit transaction. If the creditor has not obtained an appraisal, the creditor may disclose the estimated value of the property, labeled "Estimated Prop. Value" (Comment 38(a)(3)(vii)-1).
      - For transactions involving construction where there is no seller, this disclosure must be the value of the property that is used to determine the approval of the credit transaction. That disclosure includes any improvements to be made on the property if those improvements were considered when approving the loan (Comment 38(a)(3)(vii)-1).

4. Loan Term (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(8); .38(a)(5)(i))

   a. Whether the term to maturity of the credit transaction is disclosed (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(8); .38(a)(5)(i)).

      NOTES:

      - For a CP Loan-Combined, the loan term is the total combined term of the construction and permanent periods (Comment App. D-7.i.A).
      - For a CP Loan-Separate (Permanent Phase), the loan term of the permanent financing is counted from the date that interest for the permanent financing periodic payments begins to accrue, regardless of when the permanent phase is disclosed (Comment App. D-7.i.B)).

5. Product Type (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10); .38(a)(5)(iii))

   a. Whether the loan product description includes “Adjustable rate,” “Step rate,” or “Fixed rate,” as applicable, and the features that may change the periodic payment (Negative amortization, Interest only, Step payment, Balloon payment, Seasonal payment) (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10); .38(a)(5)(iii)).

   b. “Interest Only” feature is disclosed if one or more regular periodic payments may be applied only to interest accrued and not to the loan principal (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(ii)(B); .38(a)(5)(iii)).

      NOTES:

      - If there is a final balloon payment that includes principal (typically construction-only and separate construction phase disclosures), the final balloon payment is excluded for purposes of determining the duration of the “Interest Only” payment period (Comment App. D-7.ii.A).
      - For a CP Loan-Combined, the “Interest Only” payment period is the full term of the interest-only construction phase, plus any interest-only period in the permanent phase (Comment App. D-7.ii.B).

   c. “Adjustable Rate” product is disclosed if the interest rate may increase after consummation, but the rates that will apply or the periods for which they will apply are not known at consummation (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)(A)).

      NOTES:

      - For a CP Loan-Combined and CP Loan-Separate (Permanent Phase), if the interest rate for the permanent phase is not known at consummation for a construction-permanent loan using a single, combined construction-permanent disclosure or using separate disclosures for the permanent phase, the creditor shall disclose the loan product under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10) and 12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5)(iii) as "Adjustable Rate" (Comment App. D-7.ii.C).

- For a CP Loan-Combined and CP Loan-Separate (Permanent Phase), if the interest rate may increase under the terms of the legal obligation from the disclosures provided at consummation, the product is disclosed as "Adjustable Rate," even if the interest rate will be fixed for the term of the permanent phase once it is set (Comment App. D-7.ii.C).

d. "Step Rate" product is disclosed if the interest rate will change after consummation, and the rates that will apply and the periods for which they will apply are known at consummation (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)(B)).

NOTE: For a CP Loan-Combined transaction*,* if the interest rates for both phases are fixed at consummation but are different rates, and the creditor does not reserve the right to modify the rate after consummation so that the interest rate for the permanent phase is known at consummation but different from the construction phase interest rate, the product is disclosed as "Step Rate" (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)(B)).

6. Interest Rate (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2))

a. Whether the interest rate that will be applicable to the transaction at consummation is disclosed, and if the interest rate at consummation is not known for an adjustable rate transaction, whether the fully indexed rate (i.e., the interest rate calculated using the index value and margin at the time of consummation) is disclosed (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2)).

NOTES for CP Loan-Combined and CP Loan-Separate (Permanent Phase):

- If the permanent phase has an adjustable rate at consummation and separate disclosures are provided, the rate disclosed for the permanent financing is the fully indexed rate pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2) at the time of consummation (Comment App. D-7.iii).
- If the permanent phase has a rate that is not known at consummation, the creditor discloses the best information reasonably available at the time the disclosure is provided to the consumer (Comment 19(e)(1)(i)-1; 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i); Comment 17(c)(2)(i)-1).
- If the permanent phase has a fixed rate that will not be adjusted when the construction phase converts to the permanent phase, that fixed rate is used for disclosures (Comment App. D-7.iii)._

- If the loan contract secured by a principal dwelling provides that the permanent loan interest rate may adjust at conversion, and such rate adjustment results in a corresponding payment adjustment, and if the interest rate for the permanent phase will be fixed after the conversion, the adjustable rate disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.20(c), but not (d), are provided (Comment App. D-7.iii); however, if the loan contract secured by a principal dwelling provides that the permanent loan interest rate may adjust at conversion, and such rate adjustment results in a corresponding payment adjustment, and if the interest rate for the permanent phase is adjustable, the creditor provides the adjustable rate disclosures in 12 CFR1026.20(c) and (d) (Comment App. D-7.iii).

7. Projected Payments (12 CFR 1026.37(c); .38(c))

   a. Whether a separate table itemizes each separate periodic payment (or range), together with estimated taxes, insurance and assessments, and escrow account payments (12 CFR 1026.37(c) and 12 CFR 1026.38(c)).

      NOTES:

      - For a Construction-Only and CP Loan-Separate (Construction Phase), the construction phase is disclosed according to the requirements for the Projected Payments table, including disclosure of the amounts of any interest-only payments. If the terms of the construction phase do not account for repayment of the entire principal, the creditor must disclose a balloon payment feature (unless the transaction has negative amortization, interest-only, or step payment features) in a separate column, and balloon payment disclosures are provided (Comment App. D-7.v.A).
      - For a CP Loan-Combined, the Projected Payments table reflects the interest-only payments during the construction phase in the first column, which also reflects the amortizing payments, and mortgage insurance and escrow payments, if any, for the permanent phase if the term of the construction phase is not a full year (Comment App. D-7.v.B).
      - For a CP Loan-Combined when only the terms of the permanent phase require mortgage insurance or escrow, the disclosure of such amounts depends on whether the first column of the table exclusively discloses the construction phase. If the first column of the Projected Payment table exclusively discloses the construction phase, the creditor discloses "0" mortgage insurance and or a "-" for escrow in the first column if the construction phase does not include mortgage insurance or escrow. If payments for both phases are disclosed in the first column, the amount of the mortgage insurance premium or any escrow payment for the permanent phase is disclosed in the first column (Comment App. D-7.v.C).

8. Disclosure of Construction Costs (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v); 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iii); 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(v); 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B)) (Construction-only; CP-Combined; CP-Separate (Construction Phase)

   NOTE: Construction costs are the costs of improvements to be made to the property that the consumer contracts for in connection with the financing transaction and that will be paid in whole or in part with loan proceeds (Comment App. D-7.vi.A).

   a. Loan Estimate. Whether on the Loan Estimate, a creditor factors construction costs into the "funds for borrower" calculation in the Calculating Cash to Close table under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v) or the "Payoffs and Payments" calculation in the optional alternative Calculating Cash to Close table under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iii) for transactions without a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing (12 CFR 1026.37(h)); Comment App. D-7.vi.B).

   b. Closing Disclosure. Whether on the Closing Disclosure, a creditor includes construction costs in the "Itemization of amounts due from borrower" in the "Summary of Borrower's Transaction" under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(v) and factors them into the "Down payment/funds from borrower" and "Funds for borrower" calculations of the Calculating Cash to Close table under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(4) and (6) or in the "Payoffs and Payments" section of the Closing Cost details in the optional alternative Calculating Cash to Close table for transactions without a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing 12 CFR 1026.38(e) as modified under (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B)). (See also Comment App. D-7.vi.C).

      NOTE: If a creditor places a portion of a construction loan's proceeds in a reserve or other account at consummation, the creditor may separately disclose this from the other construction costs disclosed in the "Itemization of amounts due from borrower" in the Summary of Borrower's Transaction under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(v), if space permits (Comment App. D-7.vi.D). The creditor may disclose the amount of such reserve or other account as a separate itemized cost, along with an itemized cost for the balance of the construction costs, under disclosure and calculation options described in Comments App. D-7.vi.B and C (Comment App. D-7.vi.D).

9. Inspection and Handling fees (12 CFR 1026.37(f) and .38(f)) (Construction-only; CP-Combined; CP-Separate (Construction Phase))

   a. Whether inspection and handling fees, which are Loan Costs (12 CFR 1026.37(f) and .38(f)), are included in the Loan Costs table (or an addendum) and certain disclosures, including "In 5 Years" (12 CFR 1026.37(l)(1)) and "Total of Payments" (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(1)).

NOTES:

- Inspection and handling fees for the staged disbursement of construction loan proceeds, including draw fees, are part of the finance charge (Comment 4(a)-1.ii.A and Comment App. D-7.vii).
- If inspection and handling fees are collected before or at consummation, the total of such fees is disclosed in the Loan Costs table (Comment 37(f)-3 and Comment App. D-7.vii).
- If inspection and handling fees will be collected after consummation, the total of such fees is disclosed in a separate addendum under the heading “Inspection and Handling Fees Collected After Closing” and the fees are not counted for purposes of the Calculating Cash to Close table (Comment 37(f)-3, Comment 37(f)(6)-3, Comment 38(f)-2, and Comment App. D-7.vii).
- If inspection and handling costs are collected, such costs are included in the sum of the “In 5 Years” disclosure (Loan Estimate) and the “Total of Payments” (Closing Disclosure), even when disclosed on an addendum (Comment App. D-7.vii).

3. Determine that for transactions other than transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), the creditor discloses the number, amounts, and timing of payments scheduled to repay the obligation (other than for a transaction that is subject to 12 CFR 1026.18(s)[63] (12 CFR 1026.18(g)).

4. For a closed-end transaction secured by real property or a dwelling (other than a transaction subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)), determine that the creditor discloses the following information about the interest rate and payments, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.18(s)):

   a. Interest Rates

[63] For example, some home construction loans that are secured by real property or a dwelling are subject to 12 CFR 1026.18(s) and not 12 CFR 1026.18 (g). See Comment App. D-6 of Regulation Z. See also Comment App. D-7 for transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.37 – .38.

i. For a fixed-rate mortgage, the interest rate at consummation (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i)(A)).

ii. For an adjustable-rate or step-rate mortgage (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i)(B)):

A. The interest rate at consummation and the period of time until the first interest rate adjustment may occur, labeled as the "introductory rate and monthly payment";

NOTE: As set forth in Comment 18(s)-1, if periodic payments are not due monthly, the creditor should use the appropriate term, such as "quarterly" or "annually".

B. The maximum interest rate that may apply during the first five years after the date on which the first regular periodic payment will be due and the earliest date on which that rate may apply, labeled as "maximum during first five years"; and

C. The maximum interest rate that may apply during the life of the loan and the earliest date on which that rate may apply, labeled as "maximum ever".

iii. For a loan that provides for payment increases occurring without regard to an interest rate adjustment[64] (as described in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(i)(B)), the interest rate in effect at the time the first such payment increase is scheduled to occur and the date on which the increase will occur, labeled as "first adjustment" if the loan is an adjustable-rate mortgage or, otherwise, labeled as "first increase"[65] (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i)(C)).

iv. For a negative amortization loan[66] (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(ii)):

A. The interest rate at consummation and, if it will adjust after consummation, the length of time until it will adjust, and the label "introductory" or "intro";

B. The maximum interest rate that could apply when the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments under the terms of the legal obligation;

C. If the minimum required payment will increase before the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments, the maximum interest rate that could apply at the time of the first payment increase and the date the increase is scheduled to occur; and

D. If a second increase in the minimum required payment may occur before the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments, the maximum interest rate that could apply at the time of the second payment increase and the date the increase is scheduled to occur.

[64] This category includes interest-only loans, as set forth in Comment 18(s)(2)(i)(C)-1.

[65] Because model forms and clauses published by the CFPB are safe harbors, this rate may also be labeled "maximum ever," pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i)(B)(3).

[66] The term "negative amortization loan" means a loan, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33 that provides for a minimum periodic payment that covers only a portion of the accrued interest, resulting in negative amortization (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(7)(v)).

v. Introductory rate for an amortizing adjustable-rate mortgage, if the interest rate at consummation is less than the fully indexed rate, the following (placed in a box directly beneath the table required by 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(1), in a format substantially similar to Model Clause H-4(I) in the regulation's Appendix H):

A. The interest rate that applies at consummation and the period of time for which it applies;

B. A statement that, even if market rates do not change, the interest rate will increase at the first adjustment and a designation of the place in sequence of the month or year, as applicable, of such rate adjustment (e.g., "in the third year"); and

C. The fully indexed rate.

b. Payments for Amortizing Loans

i. Principal and interest payments. If all periodic payments will be applied to accrued interest and principal, for each interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i) (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(i)):

A. The corresponding periodic principal and interest payment, labeled as "principal and interest";

B. If the periodic payment may increase without regard to an interest rate adjustment, the payment that corresponds to the first such increase and the earliest date on which the increase could occur;

ii. Interest-only payments. If the loan is an interest-only loan, for each interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i), the corresponding periodic payment and (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(ii)):

A. If the payment will be applied to only accrued interest, the amount applied to interest, labeled as "interest payment," and a statement that none of the payment is being applied to principal;

B. If the payment will be applied to accrued interest and principal, an itemization of the amount of the first such payment applied to accrued interest and to principal, labeled as "interest payment" and "principal payment", respectively;

C. A statement that the minimum payment pays only some interest, does not repay any principal, and will cause the loan amount to increase;

D. The fully amortizing periodic payment amount at the earliest time when such a payment must be made, corresponding to the interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(ii)(B); and

E. If applicable, in addition to the payments in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(4)(i) and (ii), for each interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(ii), the amount of the fully amortizing periodic payment, labeled as the "full payment option," and a statement that these payments pay all principal and all accrued interest.

iv. Balloon payments. For loans with balloon payments (defined as a payment that is more than two times a regular periodic payment) (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(5)):

A. Except as provided below, the balloon payment is disclosed separately from other periodic payments disclosed in the table (i.e., is outside the table and in a manner substantially similar to Model Clause H-4(J) in Appendix H to the regulation); and

B. If the balloon payment is scheduled to occur at the same time as another payment required to be disclosed in the table, the balloon payment must be disclosed in the table.

5. For a closed-end transaction secured by real property or a dwelling (other than a transaction that is subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)) that is a negative amortization loan, determine that the following information is disclosed (in close proximity to the table required in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(1), with headings, content, and format substantially similar to Model Clause H-4(G) in Appendix H to this part) (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(6)):

    a. The maximum interest rate, the shortest period of time in which such interest rate could be reached, the amount of estimated taxes and insurance included in each payment disclosed, and a statement that the loan offers payment options, two of which are shown; and

    b. 6. For a closed-end transaction secured by real property or a dwelling (other than a transaction that is subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)), determine that the creditor disclosed a statement that there is no guarantee the consumer can refinance the transaction to lower the interest rate or periodic payments (12 CFR 1026.18(t)(1)).

   d.    NOTE: A creditor, assignee, or servicer subject to the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) that has received the consumer's notification to cease communication pursuant to FDCPA Section 805(c) is exempt from this requirement.

a. An explanation that under the terms of the consumer's adjustable rate mortgage, the time frame that the current rate has been in effect is ending and the interest rate and payment will change, the effective date of the new rate, when additional future interest rate adjustments are scheduled to occur and any other changes to loan terms, features, and options taking effect on the same date, such as the expiration of interest-only or payment-option features; and a table explaining the current interest rate and payment, the new interest rate and payment, and the date the first new payment is due;

NOTE: For interest-only and negatively amortizing payments, the table must include how the current and new rates and payment will be allocated to interest, principal, and escrow (if applicable). See 12 CFR 1026.20(d)(2)(iii)(C) for more on payment allocation disclosure requirements.

b. An explanation of how the interest rate is determined, including the specific index or formula used and a source of information about that index or formula, and the type and amount of any adjustment, including a margin and an explanation that a margin is the addition of a certain number of percentage points to the index, and any application of previously foregone interest rate increases from past rate adjustments;

c. Any limits on the interest rate or payment increases at each interest rate adjustment and over the life of the loan (as applicable), including the extent to which such limits result in the creditor, assignee, or servicer foregoing any increase in the interest rate and the earliest date that such foregone interest rate increases may apply to future interest rate adjustments, subject to those limits;

h. If applicable, a statement that the new payment will not be allocated to pay loan principal and will not reduce the loan balance. If the new payment will result in negative amortization, a statement that the new payment will not be allocated to pay loan principal and that only part of the interest will be paid, which will add to the loan balance. If the new payment will result in negative amortization as a result of the interest rate adjustment, the statement must set forth the payment required to fully amortize the remaining balance at the new interest rate over the remainder of the loan term; and

- When examining a creditor, an assignee, or a servicer that continues to own the loan, if the entity states that another entity has the obligation to provide the disclosures, examiners should determine whether the entity takes steps to ensure that the other party (the creditor, assignee, or servicer, as applicable) is complying with the obligation to provide the disclosures.

Escrow Cancellation Notice – 12 CFR 1026.20(e)(1)

1. Escrow cancellation notice. For a closed-end loan secured by a first lien on real property or a dwelling (other than a reverse mortgage) where an escrow account (as defined under 12 CFR 1024.17(b)) is canceled, determine whether (12 CFR 1026.20(e)):

      i. A statement informing the consumer of the date on which the consumer will no longer have an escrow account;

      ii. A statement that an escrow account may also be called an impound or trust account;

      iii. A statement of the reason that the escrow account will be closed;

      iv. A statement that without an escrow account, the consumer must pay all property costs, such as taxes and homeowner's insurance, directly, possibly in one or two large payments a year;

      v. A table, titled "Cost to you," that contains an itemization of the amount of any fee the creditor or servicer imposes on the consumer in connection with the closure of the consumer's escrow account, labeled "Escrow Closing Fee," and a statement that the fee is for closing the escrow account (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(i)); and

vi. Information under the reference "In the future" that includes (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)):

A. A statement of the consequences if the consumer fails to pay property costs, including the actions that a state or local government may take if property taxes are not paid and the actions the creditor or servicer may take if the consumer does not pay some or all property costs, such as adding amounts to the loan balance, adding an escrow account to the loan, or purchasing a property insurance policy on the consumer's behalf that may be more expensive and provide fewer benefits than a policy that the consumer could obtain directly (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(A));

B. A statement with a telephone number that the consumer can use to request additional information about the cancellation of the escrow account (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(B));

C. A statement of whether the creditor or servicer offers the option of keeping the escrow account open and, as applicable, a telephone number the consumer can use to request that the account be kept open (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(C)); and

D. A statement of whether there is a cut-off date by which the consumer can request that the account be kept open (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(D)).

2. Form. The disclosure meets the formatting requirements of 12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4) and is substantially similar to Model Form H-29 in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4)).

3. Timing. The creditor or servicer ensures that the consumer receives the Escrow Closing Notice in the following time periods:

i. If the cancellation is upon the consumer's request, no later than three business days before the closure of the consumer's escrow account (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(i)); or

ii. If cancellation is other than upon the consumer's request, no later than 30 business days before the closure of the consumer's escrow account (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(ii)).

NOTE: If the disclosures are not provided in person, the consumer is considered to have received the disclosures three business days after they are delivered or placed in the mail (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(iii)).

Successors in Interest – 12 CFR 1026.20(f)

1. If, upon confirmation, a servicer provided a confirmed successor in interest who is not liable on the mortgage loan obligation with an optional notice and acknowledgement form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1), determine whether the servicer provided to a confirmed successor in interest any written disclosure required by the following

(if applicable): 12 CFR 1026.20(c) (rate adjustments with corresponding change in payment), 12 CFR 1026.20(d) (initial rate adjustment), or 12 CFR 1026.20(e) (escrow account cancellation notice), once the confirmed successor in interest either assumed the mortgage loan obligation under state law or provided the servicer an executed acknowledgement form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1)(iv), that the confirmed successor in interest has not revoked.

High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.32

1. Determine that the disclosures required for high-cost mortgage transactions (12 CFR 1026.32) clearly and conspicuously include the items below (12 CFR 1026.32(c), see Form H-16 in Appendix H).

    a. The required statement "You are not required to complete this agreement merely because you have received these disclosures or have signed a loan application. If you obtain this loan, the lender will have a mortgage on your home. You could lose your home, and any money you have put into it, if you do not meet your obligations under the loan".

    b. The APR.

    c. Amount of the regular monthly (or other periodic) payment and the amount of any balloon payment. The regular payment should include amounts for voluntary items, such as credit life insurance or debt-cancellation coverage, only if the consumer has previously agreed to the amount (See the commentary to 12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)).

    d. Statement that the interest rate may increase and that the monthly payment may increase, and the amount of the single maximum monthly payment, based on the maximum interest rate allowed under the contract, if applicable.

    e. The amount borrowed. For a closed-end mortgage, the amount borrowed is the total amount borrowed, as reflected by the face amount of the note; and where the amount borrowed includes premiums or other charges for optional credit insurance or debt-cancellation coverage (grouped together with the amount borrowed), that fact shall be stated. For an open-end credit plan, the amount borrowed is the credit limit for the plan when the account is opened.

Notice of Transfer – 12 CFR 1026.39

For any open-end loan secured by a principal dwelling or for any closed-end mortgage loan secured by a dwelling or real property that was sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to the covered person, determine that the covered person notifies the borrower clearly and conspicuously in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep of such transfer, including (12 CFR 1026.39):

    a. An identification of the loan that was sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred;

b. The name, address, and telephone number of the covered person who owns the mortgage loan;

c. The date of transfer (either the date of acquisition recognized in the books and records of the covered person or that of the transferring party) identified by the covered person;

d. The name, address, and telephone number of an agent or party having authority, on behalf of the covered person, to receive notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer's payments on the mortgage loan;

e. Where transfer of ownership of the debt to the covered person is or may be recorded in public records or, alternatively, that the transfer of ownership has not been recorded in public records at the time the disclosure is provided; and,

f. At the option of the covered person, any other relevant information regarding the transaction.

g. If there are multiple covered persons, contact information for each of them, unless one of them has been authorized to receive the consumer's notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer's payments on the loan.

If the loan is a closed-end consumer mortgage loan secured by a dwelling or real property, other than a reverse mortgage transaction subject to 12 CFR 1026.33 of this part, the following information about the covered person's partial payment policy, under the subheading "Partial Payment":

i. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are accepted, a statement that the covered person, using the term "lender," may accept partial payments and apply such payments to the consumer's loan;

ii. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are accepted but not applied to a consumer's loan until the consumer pays the remainder of the full amount due, a statement that the covered person, using the term "lender," may hold partial payments in a separate account until the consumer pays the remainder of the payment and then apply the full periodic payment to the consumer's loan;

iii. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are not accepted, a statement that the covered person, using the term "lender", does not accept any partial payments; and

iv. A statement that, if the loan is sold, the new covered person, using the term "lender", may have a different policy.

NOTES:

- The format of the disclosure illustrated by Form H-25 of Appendix H may be used (for the information required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(l)(5)). The text on that form may be modified to suit the format of the covered person's disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.39. Any modifications must be appropriate and not affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure (Comment 39(d)(5)-1).
- This notice of sale or transfer must be provided for any consumer credit transaction that is secured by the principal dwelling of a consumer, except as noted above. This notification is required of the covered person even if the loan servicer remains the same. In addition, if more than one consumer is liable on the obligation, the covered person may mail or deliver the disclosure notice to any consumer who is primarily liable. And, if an acquisition involves multiple covered persons who each acquire a partial interest in the loan pursuant to separate and unrelated agreements, each covered person has a duty to ensure that disclosures related to its acquisition are accurate and provided in a timely manner unless an exception in 12 CFR 1026.39(c) applies. The parties may, but are not required to, provide a single notice that satisfies the timing and content requirements applicable to each covered person (Comment 39(b)(5)-2).
- Each covered person must provide the notice of transfer or sale to confirmed successors in interest unless the exemption under 12 CFR 1026.39(f) applies.

    b. Refunded any part of the remaining credit balance, upon the written request of the consumer; and

    c. Made a good faith effort to refund to the consumer by cash, check, or money order, or credit to a deposit account of the consumer, any part of the credit balance remaining in the account for more than six months, unless the consumer's location was not known to the creditor and could not be traced through the consumer's last known address or telephone number.

Open-End Credit Forms Review Procedures

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.61(a) sets forth the definition of hybrid prepaid-credit card. A covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(15)(ii) if the covered separate credit feature is an open-end credit plan that is not home-secured.

1. Determine that the creditor made the disclosures clearly and conspicuously (12 CFR 1026.5(a)).

2. Determine that the creditor made the applicable disclosures in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep, except (12 CFR 1026.5(a)(1)(ii)):

   a. The following disclosures need not be written: Disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) of charges that are imposed as part of an open-end (not home-secured) plan that are not required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2) and related disclosures of charges under 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iii)(B); disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(vi); disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.9(d) when a finance charge is imposed at the time of the transaction; and disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.56(b)(1)(i).

   b. The following disclosures need not be in a retainable form: Disclosures that need not be written under 12 CFR 1026.5(a)(1)(ii)(A); the alternative summary billing-rights statement under 12 CFR 1026.9(a)(2); the credit and charge card renewal disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.9(e); the payment requirements under 12 CFR 1026.10(b), except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(13); home-equity disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.40(d); and disclosures for credit and charge card applications and solicitations under 12 CFR 1026.60.

   c. The disclosures required by this subpart may be provided to the consumer in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign Act) (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.). The disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.60, 1026.40, and 1026.16 may be provided to the consumer in electronic form without regard to the consumer consent or other provisions of the E-Sign Act in the circumstances set forth in those sections.

3. Determine that the terminology used in providing the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.5 is consistent (12 CFR 1026.5(a)(2)(i)).

4. Determine that, for home-equity plans subject to 12 CFR 1026.40, the terms finance charge and annual percentage rate (APR), when required to be disclosed with a corresponding amount or percentage rate, shall be more conspicuous than any other required disclosure. The terms need not be more conspicuous when used for periodic statement disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.7(a)(4) and for advertisements under 12 CFR 1026.16 (12 CFR 1026.5(a)(2)(ii)).

5. Determine that, if disclosures are required to be presented in a tabular format pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.5(a)(3), that the term penalty APR shall be used, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.5(a)(2)(iii)).

   NOTE: The term penalty APR need not be used in reference to the annual percentage rate that applies with the loss of a promotional rate, assuming the annual percentage rate that applies is not greater than the annual percentage rate that would have applied at the end of the promotional period; or if the annual percentage rate that applies with the loss of a promotional rate is a variable rate, the annual percentage rate is calculated using the same index and margin as would have been used to calculate the annual percentage rate that would have applied at the end of the promotional period. If credit insurance or debt cancellation or debt suspension coverage is required as part of the plan, the term required shall be used and the program shall be identified by its name. If an annual percentage rate is required to be presented in a tabular format pursuant to paragraph (a)(3)(i) or (a)(3)(iii) of this section, the term fixed, or a similar term, may not be used to describe such rate unless the creditor also specifies a time period that the rate will be fixed and the rate will not increase during that period, or if no such time period is provided, the rate will not increase while the plan is open.

6. Determine whether the credit offered in connection with a prepaid account is subject of this regulation as set forth in 12 CFR 1026.61(a)(2)(i) (12 CFR 1026.61(a)(2)(i)).

Credit and Charge Card Application and Solicitation Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.60

1. Determine that the credit card solicitation or application disclosures were made clearly and conspicuously on or with a solicitation or an application (12 CFR 1026.60).

2. For the disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1) through (5) (except for (b)(1)(iv)(B) and (b)(7) through (15)), determine that the creditor made the disclosures required for 12 CFR 1026.60(c), (d)(2), (e)(1), and (f) in the form of a table with headings, content, and format substantially similar to the applicable tables found in G-10 in Appendix G (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(i)).

   NOTE: Review any fees or charges imposed on the asset feature of a prepaid account that are charges imposed as part of the plan under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3). Those fees or charges must be included in the disclosures on or with an application or solicitation to the extent those fees or charges fall within the categories of fees or charges required to be disclosed under (12 CFR 1026.60(b)).

3. Determine that the table required by 12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(i) contains only the information required or permitted by that section. If the creditor provides other information, determine that such information appears outside the table (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(ii)).

4. Determine that the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv)(B), (b)(1)(iv)(C), and (b)(6) are placed directly beneath the table required by 12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(i) (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(iii)).

5. When a tabular format is required, determine that the following disclosures are disclosed in bold text (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(iv)):

    a. APR required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(1) of this section;

    b. Introductory rate required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(1)(ii) of this section;

    c. Rate that will apply after a premium initial rate expires required to be disclosed under paragraph (b)(1)(iii) of this section; and

    d. Fee or percentage amounts or maximum limits on fee amounts required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraphs (b)(2), (b)(4), (b)(8) through (b)(13).

    NOTE: Bold text shall not be used for the amount of any periodic fee disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(2) of this section that is not an annualized amount, and other APRs or fee amounts disclosed in the table (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(iv)).

6. Determine that the card issuer discloses, on or with a solicitation or application (12 CFR 1026.60(b)):

    a. APR. Each periodic rate that may be used to compute the finance charge on an outstanding balance for purchases, a cash advance, or a balance transfer, expressed as an APR. When more than one rate applies for a category of transactions, determine that the range of balances to which each rate is applicable is also disclosed (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)).

    NOTE: The APR for purchases disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1) shall be in at least 16-point type, except for the following: oral disclosures of the APR for purchases, or a penalty rate that may apply upon the occurrence of one or more specific events.

        i. Variable rate information. If a rate is a variable rate, determine that the card issuer discloses the fact that the rate may vary and how the rate is determined. Determine that the card issuer identifies the type of index or formula that is used in setting the rate. Determine that the value of the index and the amount of the margin that are used to calculate the variable rate are not disclosed in the table. Determine further that any applicable limitations on rate increases are not included in the table (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(i)).

        ii. Discounted initial rate. If the initial rate is an introductory rate, determine that the card issuer discloses in the table the introductory rate, the time period during which the introductory rate will remain in effect, and the term “introductory” or “intro” in immediate proximity to the introductory rate. Determine further that the card issuer discloses, as applicable, either the variable or fixed rate that would otherwise apply to the account (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(ii)).

iii. Premium initial rate. If the initial rate is temporary and is higher than the rate that will apply after the temporary rate expires, determine that the card issuer discloses the premium initial rate and the time period during which the premium initial rate will remain in effect. Determine that the premium initial rate for purchases is in at least 16-point type. Determine that the issuer discloses in the table the rate that will apply after the premium initial rate expires, in at least 16-point type (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iii)).

iv. Penalty rates. Except as for provided introductory rate or employee preferential rate requirements (discussed below), if a rate may increase as a penalty for one or more events specified in the account agreement, such as a late payment or an extension of credit that exceeds the credit limit, determine that the card issuer discloses the increased rate that may apply, a brief description of the event or events that may result in the increased rate, and a brief description of how long the increased rate will remain in effect (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv)(A)).

v. Introductory rate. If the issuer discloses an introductory rate in the table or in any written or electronic promotional materials accompanying applications or solicitations (and subject to paragraph (c) or (e) of 12 CFR 1026.60), determine that the issuer briefly discloses, directly beneath the table, the circumstances, if any, under which the introductory rate may be revoked, and the type of rate that will apply after the introductory rate is revoked. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv)(B))

vi. Employee preferential rates. If the issuer discloses in the table a preferential APR for which only employees of the card issuer, employees of a third party, or other individuals with similar affiliations with the card issuer or third party are eligible, determine that the issuer briefly discloses directly beneath the table the circumstances under which such preferential rate may be revoked and the rate that will apply after such preferential rate is revoked (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv)(C)).

vii. Rates that depend on consumer's creditworthiness. If a rate cannot be determined at the time disclosures are given because the rate depends, at least in part, on a later determination of the consumer's creditworthiness, determine that the card issuer discloses the specific rates or the range of rates that could apply and a statement that the rate for which the consumer may qualify at account opening will depend on the consumer's creditworthiness, and other factors if applicable (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(v)).

NOTE: If the rate that depends, at least in part, on a later determination of the consumer's creditworthiness is a penalty rate, as described in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv), the card issuer at its option may disclose the highest rate that could apply, instead of disclosing the specific rates or the range of rates that could apply (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(v)).

viii. APRs that vary by state. Determine that the card issuer does not list APRs for multiple states in the table. Note, however, that issuers imposing APRs that vary by state may, at the issuer's option, disclose in the table: the specific APR applicable to the consumer's account; or the range of the annual percentage rates, if the disclosure includes a statement that the APR varies by state and refers the consumer to a disclosure provided with the table where the APR applicable to the consumer's account is disclosed (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(vi)).

b. Fees for issuance or availability. Determine that the card issuer discloses any annual or other periodic fee, expressed as an annualized amount, or any other fee that may be imposed for the issuance or availability of a credit or charge card, including any fee based on account activity or inactivity (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(2)).

NOTE: A charge card issuer must disclose the applicable items in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(2), (4), (7) through (12), and (15). For a covered separate credit feature that is a charge card account accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.61, a charge card issuer also must disclose the applicable items in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(3), (13), and (14).

c. Fixed finance charge; minimum interest charge. Determine that the creditor discloses any fixed finance charge that could be imposed during a billing cycle, as well as a brief description of that charge. Determine that the creditor discloses any minimum interest charge if it exceeds $1 that could be imposed during a billing cycle, and a brief description of the charge (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(3)).

d. Transaction charge. Determine that the creditor discloses any transaction charge imposed for the use of the card for purchases (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(4)).

e. Grace period. Determine that the issuer discloses the date by which or the period within which any credit extended for purchases may be repaid without incurring a finance charge due to a periodic interest rate and any conditions on the availability of the grace period. If no grace period is provided, determine that this fact is disclosed. In disclosing in the tabular format, a grace period that applies to all types of purchases, determine that the issuer uses the phrase "How to Avoid Paying Interest on Purchases" as the heading for the row describing the grace period. If a grace period is not offered on all types of purchases, in disclosing this fact in the tabular format, determine that the issuer uses the phrase "Paying Interest" as the heading for the row describing this fact.

NOTE: If the length of the grace period varies, the card issuer may disclose the range of days, the minimum number of days, or the average number of days in the grace period, if the disclosure is identified as a range, minimum, or average (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(5)).

f. Balance computation method. Determine that the creditor disclosed the name of the balance computation method that is used to determine the balance on which the finance charge is computed, or an explanation of the method used if it is not listed. In determining which balance computation method to disclose, the creditor should have assumed that the credit extended will not be repaid within any grace period (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(6)).

NOTE: Disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(6) must be placed directly beneath the table.

g. Statement on charge card payments. Determine that the creditor discloses a statement that charges incurred by use of the charge card are due when the periodic statement is received (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(7)).

h. Cash advance fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for an extension of credit in the form of cash or its equivalent (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(8)).

i. Late payment fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for a late payment (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(9)).

j. Over-the-limit fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for exceeding the credit limit (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(10)).

k. Balance transfer fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed to transfer a balance (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(11)).

l. Returned payment fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for a returned payment (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(12)).

m. Required insurance, debt cancellation, or debt suspension coverage. Determine that the fee imposed required insurance, debt cancellation or suspension coverage is disclosed if the insurance, debt cancellation or coverage is required as part of the plan (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(13)).

n. Available credit. Determine whether total of required fees for the issuance or availability of credit and/or security deposit debited to the account at account opening equal or exceed 15 percent of minimum credit limit for the account. If so, determine that the creditor disclosed, as applicable, the available credit remaining after the fees and/or security deposit are debited to the account (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(14)).

o. Website reference. Determine that the creditor disclosed a reference to the website established by the CFPB and a statement that the consumers may obtain on the website information about shopping for and using credit cards (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(15)).

Requirements for Home-Equity Plans – 12 CFR 1026.40

a. Home equity brochure

c. Statement of the time that the specific terms are available

d. Statement that terms are subject to change before the plan opens

1. The following requirements apply only to home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40. Determine that the creditor discloses, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.6(a)):

a. Finance charge. The circumstances under which a finance charge will be imposed and an explanation of how it will be determined, including: a statement of when finance charges begin to accrue, and an explanation of whether or not any time period exists within which any credit extended may be repaid without incurring a finance charge; a disclosure of each periodic rate that may be used to compute the finance charge, the range of balances to which it is applicable, and the corresponding annual percentage rate; an explanation of the method used to determine the balance on which the finance charge may be computed; and, an explanation of how the amount of any finance charge will be determined, including a description of how any finance charge other than the periodic rate will be determined (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1)).

If a creditor offers a variable-rate plan, determine that the creditor discloses: the circumstances under which the rate(s) may increase; any limitations on the increase; and the effect(s) of an increase. When different periodic rates apply to different types of transactions, determine that the types of transactions to which the periodic rates shall apply shall also be disclosed (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1)).

b. Other charges. The amount of any charge other than a finance charge that may be imposed as part of the plan, or an explanation of how the charge will be determined (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(2)).

c. Home-equity plan information. The following disclosures, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(3)):

vii. The variable-rate disclosures described in 12 CFR 1026.40(d)(12)(viii), (d)(12)(x), (d)(12)(xi), and (d)(12)(xii), as well as the disclosure described in 12 CFR 1026.40(d)(5)(iii), unless the disclosures provided with the application were in a form that the consumer could keep and included a representative payment example for the category of payment option chosen by the consumer.

d. Security interests. The fact that the creditor has or will acquire a security interest in the property purchased under the plan, or in other property identified by item or type (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(4)).

e. Statement of billing rights. A statement that outlines the consumer's rights and the creditor's responsibilities under 12 CFR 1026.12(c) and 1026.13 and that is substantially similar to the statement found in Model Form G-3 or, at the creditor's option, G-3(A), in Appendix G to this part (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(5)).

2. For open-end (not home-secured) plans, determine that the creditor provided the account-opening disclosures specified in 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i) through (b)(2)(v) (except for 12 CFR 1026.6 (b)(2)(i)(D)(2) and 12 CFR 1026.6 (b)(2)(vii) through (b)(2)(xiv)) in the form of a table with the headings, content, and format substantially similar to any of the applicable tables in G-17 in Appendix G (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1)).

    c. Any rate that will apply after a premium initial rate expires, permitted to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(2)(i)(C) or required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(2)(i)(F); and

    d. Any fee or percentage amounts or maximum limits on fee amounts disclosed pursuant to paragraphs (b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iv), (b)(2)(vii) through (b)(2)(xii).

5. Determine that only the information required or permitted by 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i) through (b)(2)(v) (except for (b)(2)(i)(D)(2)) and (b)(2)(vii) through (b)(2)(xiv)) are provided in the table. Disclosures required by paragraphs (b)(2)(i)(D)(2), (b)(2)(i)(D)(3), (b)(2)(vi), and (b)(2)(xv) of this section shall be placed directly below the table required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1)(ii)).

    NOTE: Disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) through (b)(5) that are not otherwise required to be in the table, and other information may be presented with the account agreement or account-opening disclosure statement, provided such information appears outside the required table.

6. For creditors that impose fees referred to in 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(vii) through (b)(2)(xi) that vary by state and that provide the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b) in person at the time the open-end (not home-secured) plan is established in connection with financing the purchase of goods or services, determine that the creditor discloses in the account-opening table either:

    a. The specific fee applicable to the consumer's account, or

    b. The range of fees, a statement that the amount of the fee varies by state, and a reference to the account agreement or other disclosure provided with the account-opening table where the amount of the fee applicable to the consumer's account is disclosed (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1)(iii)).

7. The following requirements apply to open-end (not home-secured). Determine that the creditor discloses in the appropriate format, as applicable:

   Review any fees or charges imposed on a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card as defined in 12 CFR 1026.61. A creditor is required to disclose under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2) any fees or charges imposed on the asset feature that are charges imposed as part of the plan under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) to the extent those fees fall within the categories of fees or charges required to be disclosed under (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)).

   a. Annual percentage rate. Each periodic rate that may be used to compute the finance charge on an outstanding balance for purchases, a cash advance, or a balance transfer, expressed as an APR. When more than one rate applies for a category of transactions, determine that the creditor discloses the range of balances to which each rate is applicable. Ensure that the APR for purchases disclosed pursuant to this paragraph is in at least 16-point type, except for a penalty rate that may apply upon the occurrence of one or more specific events (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)).

   b. Variable rate information. If the rate is a variable rate, determine that the creditor also disclosed the fact that the rate may vary and how the rate is determined (i.e., identify the type of index or formula used in setting the rate) (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(A)).

   c. Discounted initial rate. If the initial rate is an introductory rate, determine that the creditor disclosed that the rate would otherwise apply to the account. Where the rate is not tied to an index or formula, determine that the creditor disclosed the rate that will apply after the introductory rate expires. For a variable rate account, determine that the creditor disclosed a rate based on the applicable index or formula in accordance with the accuracy requirements (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(B)).

Determine that the premium rate for purchases is in at least 16-point type (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(C)).

   e. Penalty rates. Except for introductory rates and employee preferential rates (discussed below), if the rate is a penalty rate, determine that the creditor disclosed as part of the APR disclosure the increased rate that may apply, a brief description of the event or events that may result in the increased rate, and a brief description of how long the increased rate will remain in effect (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(D)(1)).

f. Introductory rates. If the creditor discloses in the table an introductory rate, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.16(g)(2)(ii), determine that the creditor briefly disclosed directly beneath the table the circumstances under which the introductory rate may be revoked, and the rate that will apply after the introductory rate is revoked (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(D)(2)).

g. Employee preferential rates. If the creditor discloses in the table a preferential APR for which only employees of the creditor, employees of a third party, or other individuals with similar affiliations with the creditor or third party are eligible, determine that the creditor briefly disclosed directly beneath the table the circumstances under which the preferential rate may be revoked, and the rate that will apply after the preferential rate is revoked (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(D)(3)).

h. Point of sale where APRs vary by state or based on creditworthiness. If the creditor imposes an APR that varies by state or based on the consumer's creditworthiness and provides required disclosures in person at the time the open-end (not home-secured) plan is established in connection with financing the purchase of goods or services, determine that the creditor discloses either (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(E)):

   i. The specific APR applicable to the consumer's account; or

   ii. The range of the APRs, if the disclosure includes a statement that the APR varies by state or will be determined based on the consumer's creditworthiness and refers the consumer to the account agreement or other disclosure provided with the account-opening table where the AP applicable to the consumer's account is disclosed. Determine that the creditor does not list APRs for multiple states in the account opening table.

i. Credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan. Determine that the issuer discloses in the table (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(F)):

   ii. Any rate that would apply upon expiration of a premium initial rate.

j. Fees for issuance or availability. Determine that the creditor disclosed any annual or periodic fee that may be imposed for the issuance or availability of an open-end plan (including any fee based on account activity or inactivity); how frequently the fee will be imposed; and the annualized amount of the fee (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii)).

k. Fixed finance charge and minimum interest charge. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fixed finance charge and any minimum interest charge if it exceeds $1 that could be imposed during a billing cycle, and a brief description of the charge (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(iii)).

n. Grace period. The date by which or the period within which any credit extended may be repaid without incurring a finance charge due to a periodic interest rate and any conditions on the availability of the grace period. If no grace period is provided, that fact must be disclosed. If the length of the grace period varies, the creditor may disclose the range of days, the minimum number of days, or the average number of days in the grace period, if the disclosure is identified as a range, minimum, or average. In disclosing in the tabular format a grace period that applies to all features on the account, the phrase "How to Avoid Paying Interest" shall be used as the heading for the row describing the grace period. If a grace period is not offered on all features of the account, in disclosing this fact in the tabular format, the phrase "Paying Interest" shall be used as the heading for the row describing this fact (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(v)).

o. Balance computation method. Determine that the creditor disclosed in the account opening disclosures the name of the balance computation method that is used to determine the balance on which the finance charge is computed for each feature, or an explanation of the method used if it is not listed, along with a statement that an explanation of the methods required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(4)(i)(D) is provided with the account opening disclosures. In determining which balance computation method to disclose, the creditor should have assumed that the credit extended will not be repaid within any grace period (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(vi)).

For finance charges, a statement of when finance charges begin to accrue, including an explanation of whether or not any time period exists within which any credit extended may be repaid without incurring a finance charge. If such a time period is provided, a creditor may, at its option and without disclosure, impose no finance charge when payment is received after the time period's expiration (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3)(i)).

z. Disclosure of rates for open-end (not home-secured) plans. Determine that the creditor disclosed, as applicable, for each periodic rate that may be used to calculate interest (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(4)(i)):

   iii. The type of transaction to which the periodic rate applies, and

   iv. An explanation of the method used to determine the balance to which the rate is applied.

Alternatively, a creditor subject to the rules affecting home-equity plans may, at its option, comply with any of the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.7(b); however, any creditor that chooses not to provide a disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.7(a)(7) must comply with (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(6)).

a. Previous balance. The account balance outstanding at the beginning of the billing cycle (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(1)).

If different periodic rates apply to different types of transactions, the types of transactions to which the periodic rates apply shall also be disclosed and for variable-rate plans, the fact that the periodic rate(s) may vary (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(4)).

NOTES:

- If no finance charge is imposed when the outstanding balance is less than a certain amount, the creditor is not required to disclose that fact, or the balance below which no finance charge will be imposed.
- Further, an APR that differs from the rate that would otherwise apply and is offered only for a promotional period need not be disclosed except in periods in which the offered rate is actually applied.

e. Balance on which finance charge computed. The amount of the balance to which a periodic rate was applied and an explanation of how that balance was determined. When a balance is determined without first deducting all credits and payments made during the billing cycle, the fact and the amount of the credits and payments shall be disclosed (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(5)).

f. Amount of finance charge and other charges (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(6)).

The types of transactions to which the periodic rates apply shall also be disclosed. For variable-rate plans, the fact that the APR may vary; and a promotional rate, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.16(g)(2)(i), is required to be disclosed only in periods in which the offered rate is actually applied.

e. Balance on which finance charge computed. The amount of the balance to which a periodic rate was applied and an explanation of how that balance was determined, using the term Balance Subject to Interest Rate (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(5)).

   i. The due date for a payment (the due date must be the same day of the month for each billing cycle) (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(11)(i)(A)).

   ii. The amount of any late payment fee and any increased periodic rate(s) (expressed as APR(s)) that may be imposed on the account as a result of a late payment. If a range of late payment fees may be assessed, verify that the card issuer either states a range of fees or the highest fee and an indication that the fee imposed could be lower (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(11)(i)(B)).

NOTES:

- If the rate may be increased for more than one feature or balance, the card issuer may state the range of rates or the highest rate that could apply and at the issuer's option an indication that the rate imposed could be lower.
- Further, with the exception of the negative or no amortization disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii), the repayment disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12) (as listed in step 12 below) are not required for:

   iii. Charge card accounts that require payment of outstanding balances in full at the end of each billing cycle;

   iv. A billing cycle immediately following two consecutive billing cycles in which the consumer paid the entire balance in full, had a zero outstanding balance or had a credit balance; and

   v. A billing cycle where paying the minimum payment due for that billing cycle will pay the entire outstanding balance on the account for that billing cycle.

l. Given those exceptions above, determine that the card issuer disclosed on the periodic statement (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)):

i. The following statement with a bold heading: "Minimum Payment Warning: If you make only the minimum payment each period, you will pay more in interest and it will take you longer to pay off your balance" (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(A)); and

ii. The minimum payment repayment estimate, as described in Appendix M1 to this part.

NOTE: If the minimum payment repayment estimate is less than two years, determine that the card issuer disclosed the estimate in months. Otherwise, the estimate must be disclosed in years and rounded to the nearest whole year (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(B)).

iii. The minimum payment total cost estimate, as described in Appendix M1 to this part, rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the card issuer's option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(C));

iv. A statement that the minimum payment repayment estimate, and the minimum payment total cost estimate are based on the current outstanding balance shown on the periodic statement. A statement that the minimum payment repayment estimate, and the minimum payment total cost estimate are based on the assumption that only minimum payments are made and no other amounts are added to the balance (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(D));

v. A toll-free telephone number where the consumer may obtain from the card issuer information about credit counseling services (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(E)); and

vi. The disclosures required for (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)):

A. The estimated monthly payment for repayment in 36 months, as described in Appendix M1 to this part. The estimated monthly payment for repayment in 36 months must be rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the card issuer's option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)(i));

B. A statement that the card issuer estimates that the consumer will repay the outstanding balance shown on the periodic statement in three years if the consumer pays the estimated monthly payment for three years (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)(ii));

C. The total cost estimate for repayment in 36 months, as described in Appendix M1 to this part. The total cost estimate for repayment in 36 months must be rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the card issuer's option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)(iii)); and

D. The savings estimate for repayment in 36 months, as described in Appendix M1 to this part. The savings estimate for repayment in 36 months must be rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the card issuer's option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)(iv)).

NOTE: The disclosures (A through D above) required for 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1) do not apply to a periodic statement in any of the following circumstances:

1) The minimum payment repayment estimate that is disclosed on the periodic statement pursuant to paragraph (b)(12)(i)(B) of this section after rounding is three years or less;

2) The estimated monthly payment for repayment in 36 months, as described in Appendix M1 to this part, rounded to the nearest whole dollar or nearest cent that is calculated for a particular billing cycle is less than the minimum payment required for the plan for that billing cycle; and

3) A billing cycle where an account has both a balance in a revolving feature where the required minimum payments for this feature will not amortize that balance in a fixed amount of time specified in the account agreement, and a balance in a fixed repayment feature where the required minimum payment for this fixed repayment feature will amortize that balance in a fixed amount of time specified in the account agreement, which is less than 36 months.

vii. If negative or no amortization occurs when calculating the minimum payment estimate as described in Appendix M1, determine that the card issuer provides the following disclosures on each periodic statement instead of the disclosures set forth in 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i) (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)):

A. "Minimum Payment Warning: Even if you make no more charges using this card, if you make only the minimum payment each month we estimate you will never pay off the balance shown on this statement because your payment will be less than the interest charged each month" (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(A));

B. "If you make more than the minimum payment each period, you will pay less in interest and pay off your balance sooner" (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(B));

C. The estimated monthly payment for repayment in 36 months rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the creditor's option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(C));

D. A statement that the card issuer estimates that the consumer will repay the outstanding balance shown on the periodic statement in three years if the consumer pays the estimated monthly payment each month for three years (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(D)); and

E. A toll-free telephone number where the consumer may obtain from the card issuer information about credit counseling services consistent with 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(iv) (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(E)).

viii. Verify that the items required to be disclosed, as addressed in the procedures in step 12 above (required by 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)) are disclosed in accordance with the format requirements of 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(13) and are substantially similar to the samples provided in Appendix G of Regulation Z.

ix. Determine that a card issuer provides (to the extent available from the U.S. trustee or a bankruptcy administrator), through the disclosed toll-free telephone number, the name, street address, telephone number, and website address for at least three organizations that have been approved by the U.S. trustee or a bankruptcy administrator to provide credit counseling services in either the state in which the billing address for the account is located or the state specified by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(iv)(A)).

x. Determine that the card issuer at least annually updates the credit counseling information it discloses for consistency with the information available from the U.S. trustee or a bankruptcy administrator (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(iv)(B)).

m. Determine that the card issuer provided periodic statement disclosures according to the following format requirements (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(13)):

i. The due date is disclosed on the front of the first page of the periodic statement and that the amount of the late payment fee and the APR(s) are stated in close proximity thereto.

ii. The ending balance and the repayment disclosures (required by paragraph (b)(12) of 12 CFR 1026.7) are disclosed closely proximate to the minimum payment due.

iii. The due date, late payment fee and APR, ending balance, minimum payment due, and repayment disclosures are grouped together.

NOTE: Sample G-18(D) in Appendix G of Regulation Z sets forth an example of how these terms may be grouped.

n. For accounts with an outstanding balance subject to a deferred interest or similar program, determine that the creditor disclosed the date by which that outstanding balance must be paid in full, in order to avoid the obligation to pay finance charges on such balance, on the front of any page of each periodic statement issued during the deferred interest period, beginning with the first periodic statement issued during the deferred interest period that reflects the deferred interest or similar transaction. The disclosure provided pursuant to this paragraph must be substantially similar to Sample G-18(H) in Appendix G to this part (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(14)).

Subsequent Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.9

1. Determine whether the creditor mailed or delivered the billing rights statement at least once per calendar year, at intervals of not less than six months or more than 18 months, to customers and whether the institution used the short form notice with each periodic statement (12 CFR 1026.9(a)(1)).

   NOTE: As an alternative to the annual billing rights statement 12 CFR 1026.9(a)(1), the creditor may mail or deliver, on or with each periodic statement, a statement substantially similar to Model Form G-4 or Model Form G-4(A) in Appendix G to this part, as applicable. Creditors offering home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40 may use either Model Form, at their option (12 CFR 1026.9(a)(2)).

2. If, 30 days after mailing or delivering the account-opening disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1) or (b)(3)(ii)(A), the creditor adds a credit feature or furnishes a credit access device (other than as a renewal, resupply, or the original issuance of a credit card, or except with regard to checks that access a credit card account) on the same finance charge terms, determine that the creditor discloses, before the consumer uses the feature or device for the first time, that it is for use in obtaining credit under the terms previously disclosed (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(1)).

3. Determine that, except with regard to checks that access a credit card account, whenever a credit feature is added or a credit access device is mailed or delivered to the consumer, and the finance charge terms for the feature or device differ from disclosures previously given, the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1) or (b)(3)(ii)(A) that are applicable to the added feature or device are given before the consumer uses the feature or device for the first time (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(2)).

4. Checks that access a credit card account. For open-end plans not subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, if checks that can be used to access a credit card account are provided more than 30 days after account-opening disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.6(b) are mailed or delivered, or are provided within 30 days of the account-opening disclosures, and the finance charge terms for the checks differ from the finance charge terms previously disclosed, determine that the creditor discloses on the front of the page containing the checks the following terms in the form of a table with the headings, content, and form substantially similar to Sample G–19 in Appendix G to this part (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)):

   a. If a promotional rate applies to the checks, determine that the creditor discloses:

      i. The promotional rate and the time period during which the promotional rate will remain in effect (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(A)(1));

      ii. The type of rate that will apply (such as whether the purchase or cash advance rate applies) after the promotional rate expires, and the annual percentage rate that will apply after the promotional rate expires. For a variable-rate account, a creditor must disclose an annual percentage rate based on the applicable index or formula in accordance with the accuracy requirements set forth in paragraph (b)(3)(ii) of this section (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(A)(2)); and

iii. The date, if any, by which the consumer must use the checks in order to qualify for the promotional rate. If the creditor will honor checks used after such date but will apply an annual percentage rate other than the promotional rate, the creditor must disclose this fact and the type of annual percentage rate that will apply if the consumer uses the checks after such date (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(A)(3)).

b. If any APR required to be disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i) is a variable rate, determine that the creditor also disclosed the fact that the rate may vary and how the rate is determined. Determine that the creditor identified the type of index or formula used in setting the rate. Determine that the creditor does not disclose the value of the index and the amount of the margin that are used to calculate the variable rate in the table, and that any applicable limitations on rate increases are not included in the table (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(iii)).

c. If no promotional rate applies to the checks, determine that the creditor discloses:

i. The type of rate that will apply to the checks and the applicable annual percentage rate. For a variable-rate account, a creditor must disclose an annual percentage rate based on the applicable index or formula in accordance with the accuracy requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(ii) (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(B)(1)).

d. Determine that the creditor discloses:

i. Any transaction fees applicable to the checks disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(iv) (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(C)).

ii. Whether or not a grace period is given within which any credit extended by use of the checks may be repaid without incurring a finance charge due to a periodic interest rate. When disclosing whether there is a grace period, the phrase "How to Avoid Paying Interest on Check Transactions" shall be used as the row heading when a grace period applies to credit extended by the use of the checks. When disclosing the fact that no grace period exists for credit extended by use of the checks, the phrase "Paying Interest" shall be used as the row heading (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(D)).

NOTE: The disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i) must be accurate as of the time the disclosures are mailed or delivered. A variable APR is accurate if it was in effect within 60 days of when the disclosures are mailed or delivered (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(ii)).

5. Determine, for home-equity plans subject to the requirements of (12 CFR 1026.40):

a. Whenever any term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(a) is changed or the required minimum periodic payment is increased, the creditor mailed or delivered written notice of the change at least 15 days prior to the effective date of the change. If the consumer agreed to the change, determine that notice was provided before the change went into effect (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(i)).

b. If the creditor prohibits additional extensions of credit or reduces the credit limit that the creditor mailed or delivered notice of the action not later than three business days after such action is taken. The notice must contain the specific reasons for the action (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(iii)).

NOTE: Notice is not required when the change involves a reduction of any component of a finance charge or other charge or when the change results from an agreement involving a court proceeding (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(ii)).

6. For plans other than home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B), (c)(2)(iii) and (c)(2)(v), when a significant change in account terms as described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(ii) is made, determine that the creditor provides a written notice of the change at least 45 days prior to the effective date of the change to each consumer who may be affected (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(A)).

7. The 45-day timing requirement, however, does not apply if the consumer has agreed to a particular change as described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B). For these instances, however, determine that the creditor provided a notice in accordance with the timing requirements of 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B) (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(A)).

8. For open-end (not home-secured) plans, determine that increases in the rate applicable to a consumer's account due to delinquency, default or as a penalty described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g) that are not due to a change in the contractual terms of the consumer's account are disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(g) instead of 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2) (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(A)).

9. When a notice of change in terms is required, determine that it is mailed or delivered no later than the effective date of the change, if the consumer agrees to the particular change. 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B) applies only when a consumer substitutes collateral or when the creditor can advance additional credit only if a change relatively unique to that consumer is made, such as the consumer's providing additional security or paying an increased minimum payment amount (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B)).

NOTE: The 45-day timing requirements discussed in step f above does not apply in certain narrow circumstances, as described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B). The following are not considered agreements between the consumer and the creditor for purposes of (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B)):

a. The consumer's general acceptance of the creditor's contract reservation of the right to change terms;

b. The consumer's use of the account (which might imply acceptance of its terms under state law);

c. The consumer's acceptance of a unilateral term change that is not particular to that consumer, but rather is of general applicability to consumers with that type of account; and

d. The consumer's request to reopen a closed account or to upgrade an existing account to another account offered by the creditor with different credit or other features (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B)).

10. The 45-day advance notice requirement applies to changes to the following terms (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(ii)):

    a. APR increases (including each periodic rate that may be used to compute the finance charge on outstanding balances for purchases, a cash advance, or a balance transfer) and other APR changes (including variable rate information, discounted or premium initial rates, or penalty rates that may be applied to the account);

    b. Fees for issuance or availability, including any fee based upon account activity or inactivity;

    c. Fixed finance charge or minimum interest charge, if it exceeds $1;

    d. Transaction charge for purchases;

    e. Grace period;

    f. Balance computation method;

    g. Cash advance fee;

    h. Late payment fee;

    i. Over-the-limit fee;

    j. Balance transfer fee;

    k. Returned payment fee;

    l. Required insurance, debt cancellation, or debt suspension coverage; and

    m. Increase in required minimum periodic payment, or the acquisition of a security interest.

11. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(vi), if a creditor increases any component of a charge, or introduces a new charge, required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) that is not a significant change in account terms as described in paragraph (c)(2)(ii) of this section, determine that the creditor either (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iii)):

a. Complies with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i), or

b. Provides notice of the amount of the charge before the consumer agrees to or becomes obligated to pay the charge, at a time and in a manner that a consumer would be likely to notice the disclosure of the charge, either in writing or orally.

12. Ensure that the written change-in-terms notice contains the following disclosures (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)):

a. A summary of the changes made to terms required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2) or 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(4), a description of any increase in the required minimum payment, and a description of any security interests being acquired by the creditor;

b. A statement that changes are being made to the account;

c. For accounts other than credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan subject to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B), a statement indicating that the consumer has the right to opt out of the changes, if applicable, and a reference to the opt-out right provided in the notice, if applicable;

d. The date the changes will become effective;

e. If applicable, a statement that the consumer may find additional information about the summarized changes, and other changes, in the notice;

f. In the case of a rate change, other than a penalty rate, a statement that if a penalty rate currently applies to the consumer’s account, the new rate described in the notice will not apply to the consumer’s account until the consumer’s account balances are no longer subject to the penalty rate;

g. If the change in terms being disclosed is an increase in the APR, the balances to which the increased rate will apply. If applicable, creditors should disclose a statement identifying the balances to which the current rate will apply as of the effective date of the change; and

h. If the change in terms being disclosed is an increase in an annual percentage rate for a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, a statement of no more than four principal reasons for the rate increase, listed in their order of importance.

NOTE: The disclosed reasons must accurately describe the principal factors actually considered by the card issuer in increasing the rate (Comment 9(c)(2)(iv)-11).

13. In addition to the disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A), if a card issuer makes a significant change in account terms on a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, determine that the creditor provides the following information on the notice provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B)):

    NOTE: This information is not required to be provided in the case of an increase in the required minimum periodic payment, an increase in a fee as a result of a reevaluation of a determination made under 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(i) or an adjustment to the safe harbors in 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(ii) to reflect changes in the Consumer Price Index, a change in an annual percentage rate applicable to a consumer's account, an increase in a fee previously reduced consistent with 50 U.S.C. 3937 (Servicemembers Civil Relief Act) or similar federal or state statute or regulation if the amount of the increased fee does not exceed the amount of that fee prior to the reduction, or when the change results from the creditor not receiving the consumer's required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date for that payment.

    a. A statement that the consumer has the right to reject the change or changes prior to the effective date of the changes, unless the consumer fails to make a required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date for that payment;

    b. Instructions for rejecting the change or changes, and a toll-free telephone number that the consumer may use to notify the creditor of the rejection; and

    c. If applicable, a statement that if the consumer rejects the change or changes, the consumer's ability to use the account for further advances will be terminated or suspended.

14. Changes resulting from failure to make minimum periodic payment within 60 days from due date for credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan. For a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(C)):

    a. If the significant change required to be disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) of this section is an increase in an annual percentage rate or a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) based on the consumer's failure to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment, determine that the notice provided pursuant to paragraph (c)(2)(i) of this section states that the increase will cease to apply to transactions that occurred prior to or within 14 days of provision of the notice, if the creditor receives six consecutive required minimum periodic payments on or before the payment due date, beginning with the first payment due following the effective date of the increase.

    b. If the significant change required to be disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) is an increase in a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) based on the consumer's failure to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment, determine that the notice provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) also states the reason for the increase.

15. Determine that the summary of changes described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) is in a tabular format (except for a summary of any increase in the required minimum periodic payment, a summary of a term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(4) that is not required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2), or a description of any security interest being acquired by the creditor), with headings and format substantially similar to any of the account-opening tables found in G-17 in Appendix G. Determine that the table discloses the changed term and information relevant to the change, if that relevant information is required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2). Determine that the new terms are described in the same level of detail as required when disclosing the terms under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2) (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(D)(1)).

16. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) (change in terms) is included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.6(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) is disclosed on the front of any page of the statement. Determine that the summary of changes described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) immediately follows the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(2) through 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(7) and, if applicable, 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(8), 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B), and 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(C), and is substantially similar to the format shown in Sample G-20 or G-21 in Appendix G to this part (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(D)(2)).

17. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) is not included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) is disclosed on the front of the first page of the notice or segregated on a separate page from other information given with the notice (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(D)(3)).

    NOTE: The summary of changes required to be in a table pursuant to paragraph (c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) of this section may be on more than one page, and may use both the front and reverse sides, so long as the table begins on the front of the first page of the notice and there is a reference on the first page indicating that the table continues on the following page.

18. Determine that the summary of changes described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) immediately follows the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(2) through 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(7) and, if applicable, 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(8), (c)(2)(iv)(B), and (c)(2)(iv)(C), of this section, and is substantially similar to the format shown in Sample G-20 or G-21 in Appendix G to this part (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(D)(3)).

19. For open-end plans (other than home equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40), note that a creditor is not required to provide notice under this section if (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)):

    a. The change involves:

i. Charges for documentary evidence;

ii. A reduction of any component of a finance or other charge;

iii. A suspension of future credit privileges (except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(vi) of this section) or termination of an account or plan;

iv. When the change results from an agreement involving a court proceeding;

v. When the change is an extension of the grace period; or

vi. The change is applicable only to checks that access a credit card account and the changed terms are disclosed on or with the checks in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3) (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(A)).

b. The change is an increase in an APR upon the expiration of a specified period of time, provided that (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(B)):

i. Prior to commencement of that period, the creditor disclosed in writing to the consumer, in a clear and conspicuous manner, the length of the period and the APR or fee that would apply after expiration of the period;

ii. The disclosure of the length of the period and the APR or fee that would apply after expiration of the period are set forth in close proximity and in equal prominence to the first listing of the disclosure of the rate or fee that applies during the specified period of time; and

iii. The APR or fee that applies after that period does not exceed the rate disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(B)(1) or, if the rate disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(B)(1) was a variable rate, the rate following any such increase is a variable rate determined by the same formula (index and margin) that was used to calculate the variable rate disclosed pursuant to (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(B)(1));

c. The change is an increase in a variable APR in accordance with a credit card or other account agreement that provides for changes in the rate according to operation of an index that is not under the control of the creditor and is available to the general public (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(C)); or

d. The change is an increase in an APR, a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), (b)(2)(viii), (b)(2)(ix), or (b)(2)(xii), or the required minimum periodic payment due to the completion of a workout or temporary hardship arrangement by the consumer or the consumer's failure to comply with the terms of such an arrangement, provided that (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(D)):

i. The APR or fee or charge applicable to a category of transactions or the required minimum periodic payment following any such increase does not exceed the rate or fee or charge or required minimum periodic payment that applied to that category of transactions prior to commencement of the arrangement or, if the rate that applied to a category of transactions prior to the commencement of the workout or temporary hardship arrangement was a variable rate, the rate following any such increase is a variable rate determined by the same formula (index and margin) that applied to the category of transactions prior to commencement of the workout or temporary hardship arrangement; and

ii. The creditor has provided the consumer, prior to the commencement of such arrangement, with a clear and conspicuous disclosure of the terms of the arrangement (including any increases due to such completion or failure). This disclosure must generally be provided in writing. However, a creditor may provide the disclosure of the terms of the arrangement orally by telephone, provided that the creditor mails or delivers a written disclosure of the terms of the arrangement to the consumer as soon as reasonably practicable after the oral disclosure is provided.

20. For open-end plans that are not subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, if a creditor decreases the credit limit on the account, determine that advance notice of the decrease is provided before an over-the-limit fee or a penalty rate can be imposed solely as a result of the consumer exceeding the newly decreased credit limit. Determine that notice is provided in writing or orally at least 45 days prior to imposing the over-the-limit fee or penalty rate and that it states that the credit limit on the account has been or will be decreased (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(vi)).

21. Determine that the disclosures contained in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1) through (b)(7) are provided if the account is renewed and (1) the card issuer imposes an annual or other periodic fee for the renewal or (2) the card issuer has changed or amended any term of the account required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2) that has not previously been disclosed to the consumer. Additionally, the disclosure provided upon renewal must disclose how and when the cardholder may terminate the credit to avoid paying the renewal fee, if any (12 CFR 1026.9(e)).

22. For plans other than home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40 (except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)), determine that the creditor provides a written notice to each consumer who may be affected when (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1)):

    a. A rate is increased due to the consumer's delinquency or default; or

    b. A rate is increased as a penalty for one or more events specified in the account agreement, such as making a late payment or obtaining an extension of credit that exceeds the credit limit.

23. Whenever any notice is required to be given pursuant to paragraph (g)(1) of this section, determine that the creditor provided written notice of the increase in rates at least 45 days prior to the effective date of the increase. The notice must be provided after the occurrence of the events described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1)(i) and (g)(1)(ii) that trigger the imposition of the rate increase (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(2)).

24. If a creditor is increasing the rate due to delinquency or default or as a penalty, determine that the creditor provided the following information on the notice sent pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1) (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(i)(A)):

    a. A statement that the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate, as applicable, has been triggered;

    b. The date on which the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate will apply;

    c. The circumstances under which the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate, as applicable, will cease to apply to the consumer's account, or that the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate will remain in effect for a potentially indefinite time period;

    d. A statement indicating to which balances the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate will be applied;

    e. If applicable, a description of any balances to which the current rate will continue to apply as of the effective date of the rate increase, unless a consumer fails to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment; and

    f. For a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, a statement of no more than four principal reasons for the rate increase, listed in their order of importance.

    NOTE: The disclosed reasons must accurately describe the principal factors actually considered by the card issuer in increasing the rate (Comment 9(g)-7)).

25. For a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, if the rate increase required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (g)(1) of this section is an increase pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(4) based on the consumer's failure to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment, determine that the notice provided pursuant to paragraph (g)(1) of this section also states that the increase will cease to apply to transactions that occurred prior to or within 14 days of provision of the notice, if the creditor receives six consecutive required minimum periodic payments on or before the payment due date, beginning with the first payment due following the effective date of the increase (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(i)(B)).

26. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1) (Increase in rates due to delinquency or default or as a penalty) is included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the disclosure described in paragraph (g)(3)(i) is in the form of a table and provided on the front of any page of the periodic statement, above the notice described in paragraph (c)(2)(iv) of this section if that notice is provided on the same statement (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(ii)(A)).

27. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1) (increase in rates) is not included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(i) is disclosed on the front of the first page of the notice. Ensure that only information related to the increase in the rate to a penalty rate is included with the notice.

    NOTE: This notice may be combined with a notice described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv) or (g)(4) (A statement indicating to which balances the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate will be applied) of this section (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(ii)(B)).

28. Exception for Decreases in the Credit Limit. If a creditor does not provide the 45-day notice under 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1) prior to increasing the rate for obtaining an extension of credit that exceeds the credit limit, determine that the creditor provides at least 45 days in advance of imposing the penalty rate a notice, in writing, that includes (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)):

    a. A statement that the credit limit on the account has or will be decreased;

    b. The date on which the penalty rate will apply, if the outstanding balance exceeds the credit limit as of that date;

    c. A statement that the penalty rate will not be imposed on that date, if the outstanding balance does not exceed the credit limit as of that date;

    d. The circumstances under which the penalty rate, if applied, will cease to apply to the account, or that the penalty rate, if applied, will remain in effect for a potentially indefinite period of time;

    e. A statement indicating to which balances the penalty rate may be applied; and

    f. If applicable, a description of any balances to which the current rate will continue to apply as of the effective date of the rate increase, unless the consumer fails to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment.

    In addition to this notice, determine that the creditor does not increase the applicable rate to the penalty rate if the outstanding balance does not exceed the credit limit on the date set forth in the notice (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(ii)).

29. If a notice provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(i) is included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(i) is in the form of a table and provided on the front of any page of the periodic statement (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(iii)(A)); or,

30. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(i) is not included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(i) is disclosed on the front of the first page of the notice. Determine that only information related to the reduction in credit limit is included with the notice, except that this notice may be combined with a notice described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv) or (g)(1) (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(iii)(B)).

31. When the consumer is given the right to reject a significant change to an account term prior to the effective date of the change, determine whether the consumer was given the option to reject the change by notifying the creditor of the rejection before the effective date of the change (12 CFR 1026.9(h)(1)).

32. If the creditor was notified of the rejection of a significant change to an account term, determine that the creditor did not:

    a. Apply the charge to the account;

    b. Impose a fee or charge or treat the account as in default solely as a result of the rejection; or

    c. Require repayment of the balance on the account using a method that is LESS beneficial to the consumer than one of the following methods:

        i. The method of repayment for the account on the date on which the creditor was notified of the rejection;

        ii. An amortization period of not less than five years, beginning no earlier than the date on which the creditor was notified of the rejection; or

        iii. A required minimum periodic payment that includes a percentage of the balance that is equal to no more than twice the percentage required on the date on which the creditor was notified of the rejection (12 CFR 1026.9(h)(2)).

    NOTE: These requirements do not apply if the creditor has not received the consumer's required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date for that payment and the creditor has provided timely change in terms disclosures (12 CFR 1026.9(h)(3)).

33. Determine that a statement of the maximum interest rate that may be imposed during the term of the obligation is made for any dwelling-secured loan in which the APR may increase during the plan (12 CFR 1026.30(b)).

34. For any open-end mortgage loan (credit transaction that is secured by the principal dwelling of a consumer) that was sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to the covered person, determine that the covered person notifies the borrower in writing of such transfer, including (12 CFR 1026.39):

    a. An identification of the loan that was sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred;

    b. The name, address, and telephone number of the covered person who owns the mortgage loan;

    c. The date of transfer (either the date of acquisition recognized in the books and records of the covered person or that of the transferring party) identified by the covered person;

d. The name, address, and telephone number of an agent or party having authority, on behalf of the covered person, to receive notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer's payments on the mortgage loan;

e. Where transfer of ownership of the debt to the covered person is or may be recorded in public records or, alternatively, that the transfer of ownership has not been recorded in public records at the time the disclosure is provided; and

f. At the option of the covered person, any other relevant information regarding the transaction.

g. If there are multiple covered persons, contact information for each of them, unless one of them has been authorized to receive the consumer's notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer's payments on the loan (12 CFR 1026.39(d)-(e)).

NOTE: This notice of sale or transfer must be provided for any consumer credit transaction that is secured by the principal dwelling of a consumer. This notification is required by the covered person even if the loan servicer remains the same. In addition, if more than one consumer is liable on the obligation, the covered person may mail or deliver the disclosure notice to any consumer who is primarily liable. And, if an acquisition involves multiple covered persons who each acquire a partial interest in the loan pursuant to separate and unrelated agreements, each covered person has a duty to ensure that disclosures related to its acquisition are accurate and provided in a timely manner unless an exception in 12 CFR 1026.39(c) applies. The parties may, but are not required to, provide a single notice that satisfies the timing and content requirements applicable to each covered person (Comment 39(b)(5)-2)).

Disclosure Requirements for Over-the-Limit Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.56

1. Determine that the oral, written, or electronic "opt-in" notice includes all of the following applicable items (and not any information not specified in or otherwise permitted) (12 CFR 1026.56(e)(1)):

    a. Fees. The dollar amount of any fees or charges assessed by the card issuer on a consumer's account for an over-the-limit transaction;

    b. APR(s). Any increased periodic rate(s) (expressed as an APR(s)) that may be imposed on the account as a result of an over-the-limit transaction; and

    c. Disclosure of opt-in right. An explanation of the consumer's right to affirmatively consent to the card issuer's payment of over-the-limit transactions, including the method(s) by which the consumer may consent.

2. Determine that the written notice informing the consumer of the right to revoke consent following the assessment of an over-the-limit fee or charge describes that right, including the method(s) by which the consumer may revoke consent (12 CFR 1026.56(e)(2)).

Reverse Mortgage Forms Review Procedures (Both Open- and Closed-End)

1. Determine that the disclosures required for reverse mortgage transactions are substantially similar to the model form in Appendix K and include the items below (12 CFR 1026.33):

   a. A statement that the consumer is not obligated to complete the reverse mortgage transaction merely because he or she has received the disclosures or signed an application.

   b. A good faith projection of the total cost of the credit expressed as a table of "total annual loan cost rates" including payments to the consumer, additional creditor compensation, limitations on consumer liability, assumed annual appreciation, and the assumed loan period.

   c. An itemization of loan terms, charges, the age of the youngest borrower, and the appraised property value.

   d. An explanation of the table of total annual loan costs rates.

   NOTE: Forms that include or involve current transactions, such as change in terms notices, periodic billing statements, rescission notices, and billing error communications, are verified for accuracy when the file review worksheets are completed.

Timing Requirements

1. Timing Requirements – Open-End Credit. Review financial institution policies, procedures, and systems to determine, either separately or when completing the actual file review, whether the applicable disclosures listed below are furnished when required by Regulation Z. Take into account products that have different features, such as closed-end loans or credit card accounts that are fixed or variable rate.

   a. Credit card application and solicitation disclosures on or with the application (12 CFR 1026.60(b)).

   b. Adding a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card to a prepaid account. Ensure that a card issuer does not do any of the following until 30 days after the prepaid account has been registered: (1) open a covered separate credit feature that could be accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card; (2) make a solicitation or provide an application to open a covered separate credit feature that could be accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card; or (3) allow an existing credit feature that was opened prior to the consumer obtaining the prepaid account to become a covered separate credit feature accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card (12 CFR 1026.61(c)).

c. HELOC disclosures. At the time the application is provided or within three business days under certain circumstances (12 CFR 1026.40(b)).

d. Open-end credit initial disclosures. Before the first transaction is made under the plan (12 CFR 1026.5(b)(1)).

e. Card holder agreement. Verify that the card issuer sends to the cardholder or otherwise make available to the cardholder a copy of the cardholder's agreement in electronic or paper form no later than 30 days after the issuer receives the cardholder's request (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii)). Determine that the issuer has adequate procedures for ensuring that this requirement is met.

f. Periodic statement disclosures for open-end credit under 12 CFR 1026.7. Required if at the end of a billing cycle, the account has a debit or credit balance of one dollar or more or if a finance charge has been imposed (12 CFR 1026.5(b)(2)(i)). Also, the creditor must adopt reasonable procedures designed to ensure that periodic statements for credit card accounts are mailed or delivered at least 21 days prior to the payment due date and the date on which any grace period expires (for non-credit card open-end credit, there is a 21 day rule if there is a grace period and a 14-day rule if there is no grace period) (12 CFR 1026.5(b)(2)(ii)(B)(2)).

g. Statement of billing rights. At least once per year (12 CFR 1026.9(a)).

h. Supplemental credit devices. Before the first transaction under the plan (12 CFR 1026.9(b)).

i. Open-end credit change in significant terms as a result of a change in contractual terms. 45 days prior to the effective change date. (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2))

j. Open-end change in terms or rates due to delinquency or default or as a penalty. 45 days prior to the effective change date (12 CFR 1026.9(g)).

k. Finance charge imposed at time of transaction. Prior to imposing any fee (12 CFR 1026.9(d)).

l. Disclosures upon renewal of credit or charge card. 30 days or one billing cycle, whichever is less before the delivery of the periodic statement on which the renewal fee is charged, or at least 30 days prior to the scheduled renewal date if the creditor has changed or amended any term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2) that has not previously been disclosed to the consumer 12 CFR 1026.9(e)).

m. Change in credit account insurance provider – Certain information 30 days before the change in provider occurs and certain information 30 days after the change in provider occurs. The institution may provide a combined disclosure 30 days before the change in provider occurs (12 CFR 1026.9(f)).

2. Timing Requirements – Closed-End Credit Secured by a Dwelling

   a. Closed-end credit disclosures for transactions not subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) must be made before consummation (12 CFR 1026.17(b)).

   b. Disclosures for reverse mortgages. Several disclosure timing requirements apply to reverse mortgages subject to 12 CFR 1026.33 and RESPA:

      i. Determine whether the creditor provides early TIL disclosures within three business days after receiving the consumer's written application. The creditor is required to deliver or mail the early disclosures no later than three business days after receiving the consumer's application and at least seven business days before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(a)(1)(i) and (iii) and 1026.19(a)(2)(i)). No fees may be charged before the consumer receives the early disclosures except for credit report fees (12 CFR 1026.19(a)). If the APR stated in the early disclosures is not considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.22 when compared to the APR at consummation, determine whether the creditor provided corrected disclosures of all changed terms, including the APR, that the consumer received no later than the third business day before consummation and that the creditor delivered or placed in the mail the corrected disclosures not later than the seventh business day before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(a)(2)(i)and (ii)).

      ii. Determine whether the creditor provides the disclosures required pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.33 (and found in paragraph d of the model form in Appendix K) either three days prior to consummation (for a closed-end transaction) or prior to the first transaction (for an open-end credit plan) (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(2)).

   NOTE: For closed-end credit transactions secured by a dwelling not subject to the TILA-RESPA rule, the prohibition on charging fees (other than credit report fees) before the consumer receives the early TIL disclosure is more limited than the prohibition for closed-end credit transactions secured by a dwelling that are subject to TILA-RESPA (12 CFR 1026.19(a)). For TILA-RESPA closed-end transactions, creditors are prohibited from charging fees (other than credit report fees) prior to receipt of disclosures and an intent to proceed with the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)).

   c. Disclosures for high-cost mortgages – Three business days prior to consummation or account opening. If such disclosures became inaccurate due to a change by the creditor, ensure that the creditor provided new, accurate disclosures no later than three business days prior to consummation or account opening (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(1)).

NOTE: For a high-cost mortgage, the three-business day waiting period requirement does not apply to a second offer of credit with a lower annual percentage rate consummated by the consumer (15 U.S.C. 1639(b)(3)).

d. Disclosures for initial rate change to an adjustable-rate mortgage securing a principal dwelling with terms of more than one year:

   i. For adjustable-rate mortgages, creditors, assignees, or servicers are generally required to provide information regarding the first interest rate change to consumers between 210 and 240 days prior to the date the first payment at the new rate is due 12 CFR 1026.20(d)).

   NOTE: If the first payment change occurs within the first 210 days, creditors, assignees, or servicers are required to provide the disclosure at consummation (12 CFR 1026.20(d)).

   NOTE: When examining a creditor that continues to own the loan, an assignee, or a servicer, if the entity states that another entity has the obligation to provide the disclosures, examiners should determine whether the entity takes steps to ensure that the other party (the creditor, assignee, or servicer, as applicable) is complying with the obligation to provide the disclosures.

e. Additional disclosures for adjustable-rate mortgages securing a principal dwelling (other than a transaction with a term of more than one year, where a rate change affects the amount of payment:

   i. For adjustable-rate mortgages where the payment changes with a rate change, disclosures must be provided to consumers between 60 and 120 days before the first payment at the new rate is due;

   ii. For adjustable-rate mortgages where the payment change is caused by a rate change that is uniformly scheduled every 60 days (or more frequently), disclosures must be provided to consumers between 25 and 120 days before the first payment at the new rate;

   iii. For adjustable-rate mortgages originated prior to January 10, 2015, where the interest rate and payment are calculated based on an index that is available less than 45 days prior to the change, disclosures must be provided between 25 and 120 days before the first payment at the new rate is due; and

   iv. For adjustable-rate mortgages where the payment adjustment occurs within 60 days of consummation and the new interest rate after adjustment provided at consummation was an estimate, disclosures are required as soon as practicable, but no later than 25 days prior to the first payment at the new rate is due. (12 CFR 1026.20(c))

NOTE: The requirements of 12 CFR 1026.20(c) do not apply to: ARMS with terms of one year or less; first interest rate adjustments to an ARM if the first adjusted payment is due within 210 days after consummation and the new interest rate disclosed at consummation was not an estimate; or the creditor, assignee or servicer when the servicer is subject to FDCPA and the consumer has notified the servicer to cease communication under Section 805(c) of FDCPA (12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii)).

f. Notice of new creditor – On or before the 30th calendar day following the acquisition (12 CFR 1026.39).

g. For private education loans subject to Subpart F (12 CFR 1026.46), determine that:

   i. Application or solicitation disclosures were provided on or with any application or solicitation (12 CFR 1026.46(d)(1)(i));

   ii. Approval disclosures were provided before consummation on or with any notice of approval provided to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.46(d)(2)); and

   iii. Final disclosures were provided after the consumer accepts the loan and at least three business days prior to disbursing the private education loan funds (12 CFR 1026.46(d)(3)).

h. Determine that the issuer provides a written over-the-limit notice prior to the assessment of any over-the-limit fee or charge on a consumer's account (12 CFR 1026.56(d)(1)(i)).

i. Determine that, if a consumer consents to the card issuer's payment of any over-the-limit transaction by oral or electronic means, the card issuer provides the required written notice immediately prior to obtaining that consent (12 CFR 1026.56(d)(1)(ii)).

j. Determine that the notice confirming the consumer's consent is provided no later than the first periodic statement sent after the consumer has consented to the card issuer's payment of over-the-limit transactions. The creditor must not assess an over-the-limit fee on the consumer's account without first providing written confirmation (12 CFR 1026.56(d)(2))

k. Determine that the notice providing the consumer notice in writing of the right to revoke consent following the assessment of an over-the-limit fee or charge is provided on the front of any page of each periodic statement that reflects the assessment of an over-the-limit fee or charge on a consumer's account. (12 CFR 1026.56(d)(3))

l. For home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, whenever any term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(a) is changed or the required minimum periodic payment is increased, determine that the creditor mails or delivers written notice of the change to each consumer who may be affected. Determine that the notice is mailed or delivered at least 15 days prior to the effective date of the change. If the change has been agreed to by the consumer, determine that the notice is given before the effective date of the change (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(i)).

m. Notice to restrict credit. For home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, if the creditor prohibits additional extensions of credit or reduces the credit limit pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.40(f)(3)(i) or (f)(3)(vi), determine that the creditor mails or delivers written notice of the action to each consumer who will be affected not later than three business days after the action is taken and contains specific reasons for the action. If the creditor requires the consumer to request reinstatement of credit privileges, determine that the notice states that fact (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(iii)).

Mortgage Loans Secured by Real Property or a Cooperative Unit— Early Disclosures (Loan Estimates) – 12 CFR 1026.19(e)

Provision of Disclosures

1. For closed-end consumer loans secured by real property or a cooperative unit, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33, determine whether the creditor provides the consumer with good faith estimates on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37) or if the creditor satisfies its obligation by ensuring that a mortgage broker providing the Loan Estimate complied with all requirements of (12 CFR 1026.19(e)).

   NOTE: Partial exemption. The special disclosure requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(e) do not apply if the following criteria are met:

   (i) the transaction is secured by a subordinate lien;

   (ii) the transaction is for buyer assistance such as down payments or closing costs, rehabilitation loans, energy efficiency assistance, or foreclosure prevention;

   (iii) the credit contract does not require the payment of interest;

   (iv) the credit contract provides for repayment that is forgiven, deferred for 20 years, or deferred until the property is sold or is no longer the consumer's principal dwelling;

   (v) the costs payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction at consummation are limited to recording fees, transfer taxes, a reasonable application fee, and a reasonable fee for housing counseling services; and the total of costs payable by the consumer for the application and housing counseling services is less than 1percent of the amount of credit extended; and

   (vi) the creditor complies with the disclosure requirements in 12 CFR 1026.18. However, the creditor is permitted to provide the integrated disclosures (Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure) as an alternative to providing the disclosure of the cost of credit under 12 CFR 1026.18, and does not need to provide the special information booklet, Good Faith Estimate, or HUD-1 settlement statement (12 CFR 1026.3(h); Comment 3(h)-1).

Timing

2. Determine whether the creditor delivers or places in the mail the Loan Estimate not later than the third business day after receiving the consumer's application. As defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(3), an application consists of the submission for purposes of obtaining an extension of credit of the consumer's name, income, social security number to obtain a credit report, the property address, an estimate of the value of the property, and the mortgage loan amount sought (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(A)).

   NOTE: When a consumer uses an online application system that allows the information to be saved, the timing requirements for the Loan Estimate are not triggered until the application is submitted.

3. Determine whether the creditor delivers or places in the mail the Loan Estimate not later than the seventh business day before consummation (other than for transactions secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan) (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B)).

   NOTE: Business day is defined differently for purposes of 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(A) and (B). For 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(A), business day is defined based on whether the creditor's offices are open to the public for carrying on substantially all of its business functions on that day. For 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B), a business day is all days except Sundays and federal holidays (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6)).

4. Determine whether the consumer waived the waiting period before consummation under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B) by providing a dated written statement describing a bona fide personal financial emergency, specifically modifying or waiving the waiting period, and signed by all the consumers who are primarily liable on the obligation (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v)).

   NOTE: Preprinted forms for this purpose are prohibited (12 CFR 1026.19(a)(3)).

Shopping for Settlement Service Providers

5. Determine whether a creditor permits a consumer to shop for a settlement service and, if so, identifies the settlement services the consumer is permitted to shop for (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi)).

6. If so, determine whether the creditor provides a written list identifying at least one available provider for each settlement service for which the consumer may shop and stating that the consumer may choose a different provider for that service. Determine that the creditor provides the written list separately from the initial Loan Estimate but in accordance with the same timing requirements. The settlement service providers identified on the written list must correspond to required settlement services for which the consumer may shop, disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(f)(3) (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi); Comment 19(e)(1)(vi)-3).

Pre-Disclosure Activity

7. Fee restriction. Determine that the creditor does not charge any fees before the consumer receives the Loan Estimate and before the consumer indicated to the creditor an intent to proceed with the transaction, except for bona fide and reasonable credit report fees 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(A)).

8. Disclaimer on early estimates. Determine whether a creditor that provides a consumer with a written estimate of terms or costs specific to that consumer before the consumer receives the Loan Estimate clearly and conspicuously states on the first page in no smaller than 12-point font "Your actual rate, payment, and costs could be higher. Get an official Loan Estimate before choosing a loan," and that the estimate does not use a format or content substantially similar to the Loan Estimate (Form H-24 or H-25 of Appendix H) (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(ii)).

9. Verification of information. Determine whether the creditor requires a consumer to submit documents verifying information related to the consumer's application before providing the creditor provides the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(iii)).

Permissible Variations

10. Determine whether the creditor disclosed estimated closing costs in good faith and consistent with the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosures are provided. The estimated closing costs are in good faith if the amount charged to the consumer at closing does not exceed the estimated closing costs disclosed on the Loan Estimate, unless the following exceptions apply. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3))

10 Percent Cumulative Increase Permitted

11. Determine whether the creditor has appropriately increased estimated third party costs or recording fees in good faith. Estimates for third party services or a recording fee are in good faith if:

    a. The aggregate charges do not exceed the aggregate estimate for those charges by more than 10 percent (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(A); Comment 19(e)(3)(ii)-2);

    b. The third party service charge is not paid to the creditor or affiliate of the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(B)); and

    c. The creditor permits the consumer to shop for the third party service (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(C)).

        i. A creditor may permit a consumer to shop even if a creditor fails to issue the written list of providers required by (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi)(C)).

        ii. Determine whether the creditor permits the consumer to shop consistent with 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi)(A) based on all the relevant facts and circumstances.

Variations Permitted for Certain Charges

12. For the following, determine whether the estimate has been made in good faith. An estimate is in good faith if it is consistent with the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time it is disclosed, regardless of whether the amount paid by the consumer exceeds the amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate, even if such charges are paid to the creditor or affiliates of the creditor, as long as the charges are bona fide; (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)):

    a. Prepaid interest (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(A));

    b. Property insurance premiums (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(B));

    c. Amounts placed into an escrow, impound, reserve, or similar account (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(C));

    d. Charges paid to third-party service providers the consumer selected that are not on the list provided by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(D)); and

    e. Property taxes and other charges paid for third-party services not required by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(E)).

Revised Loan Estimates

13. Determine whether the creditor may use a revised estimate of charges, instead of the estimate of charges originally disclosed to the consumer, to compare charges actually paid by or imposed on the consumer for purposes of determining good faith (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)). Creditors are permitted to use a revised estimate for this purpose (i.e., to reset tolerances) for any of the following reasons (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)):

    a. Changed circumstances affecting settlement charge. Changed circumstances that cause the estimated settlement charges to increase or, in the case of estimated charges identified in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii), cause the aggregate amount of such charges to increase by more than 10 percent. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)) For purposes of this and the following procedure (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A) and (B)), "changed circumstance" means:

        i. An extraordinary event beyond the control of any interested party or other unexpected event specific to the consumer or transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(1));

        ii. Information specific to the consumer or transaction that the creditor relied upon when providing the Loan Estimate and that was inaccurate or changed after the disclosures were provided (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(2)); or

iii. New information specific to the consumer or transaction that the creditor did not rely on when providing the original Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(3)).

b. Changed circumstance affecting eligibility. The consumer is ineligible for an estimated charge previously disclosed because a changed circumstance affected the consumer's creditworthiness or the value of the security for the loan (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(B)).

c. Revisions requested by the consumer. The consumer requests revisions to the credit terms or the settlement that cause an estimated charge to increase (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(C)).

d. Interest rate dependent charges. The points or lender credits change because the interest rate was not locked when the Loan Estimate was provided (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(D)).

e. Intent to Proceed. The consumer indicates an intent to proceed with the transaction more than 10 business days after the Loan Estimate is provided or within an extended period of time if the creditor has voluntarily extended the expiration date either orally or in writing (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(E)).

f. Construction loan. The loan involves new construction where settlement is not expected to occur until more than 60 days after the Loan Estimate has been provided to the consumer and the creditor states clearly and conspicuously that a revised disclosure may be used at any time prior to 60 days before consummation, unless otherwise provided by 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv) (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(F)).

NOTE: A loan involves “new construction” if it is a loan for the purchase of a home that has yet to be constructed, or a loan to purchase a home under construction (i.e., construction is currently underway) (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(F)-1).

NOTE: A creditor may issue a revised disclosure for informational purposes, even if the revised disclosure may not be used for purposes of determining good faith under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) and (ii) (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)-4).

14. Determine whether the revised disclosures, even those provided only for informational purposes (i.e., not to reset tolerances), were based on the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure was provided to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i)).

Provision and Receipt of Revised Disclosures

15. Determine whether the creditor has already provided a Closing Disclosure in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i).

NOTE: If the creditor has provided a Closing Disclosure, the creditor may not provide a revised version of the Loan Estimate on or after the date on which it provided the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(ii)). Instead, the creditor may use the initial or a corrected Closing Disclosure to reset tolerances for purposes of determining good faith if one of the reasons for a revised estimate is present (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(i)).

16. Determine whether the creditor provides revised disclosures within three business days of receiving information sufficient to establish a reason for a revised disclosure, such as a changed circumstance or other reason pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv) (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(i)).

    NOTE: If not provided to the consumer in person, the revised disclosure is considered to have been received three business days after the creditor delivers or places the revised disclosure in the mail (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)).

Special Information Booklet at Time of Application

17. For purchase loans using the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure, determine whether the creditor mailed or delivered a copy of the special information booklet titled "Your Home Loan Toolkit – A Step-by-Step Guide," which was designed by the CFPB to replace the "Shopping for Your Home Loan: Settlement Cost Booklet." The booklet is required by Regulation Z 12 CFR 1026.19(g) as well as Section 5 of RESPA and Section 12 CFR 1024.6 of Regulation X. The booklet must be delivered or placed in the mail within three business days after receiving the consumer's application for a purchase transaction, unless the creditor denies the application before the end of the three-business-day period.

    NOTE: If the consumer uses a mortgage broker, the mortgage broker must provide the special information booklet and the creditor need not do so (12 CFR 1026.19(g)).

Mortgage Loans Secured by Real Property or a Cooperative Unit—Final Disclosures (Closing Disclosures) – 12 CFR 1026.19(f)

Provision of Closing Disclosures

1. Determine whether, for closed-end consumer loans secured by real property or a cooperative unit, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33 or loans otherwise excepted under 1026.3(h), the creditor provides the consumer with the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38), reflecting the actual terms of the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i)).

    NOTE: There is a partial exemption in 12 CFR 1026.3(h) from the requirement to provide the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure if is (i) the transaction is secured by a subordinate lien, (ii) the loan is for buyer assistance such as down payments or closing costs, rehabilitation loans, energy efficiency assistance, or foreclosure prevention, (iii) the loan does not require the payment of interest, (iv) the loan provides for repayment that is forgiven, deferred for 20 years, or deferred until the property is sold or is no longer the consumer's principal dwelling, and (v) the costs payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction at consummation are limited to recording fees, transfer taxes, a reasonable application fee, and a reasonable fee for housing counseling services, and fees for the application and housing counseling are less than 1percent of the amount of credit extended. For those transactions, creditors must comply with all Regulation Z requirements pertaining to disclosures. They may do so by complying with the disclosure requirements of 12 CFR 1026.18, or in the alternative, where criteria for the partial exemption are satisfied, they may provide a compliant Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure, and do not need to provide a Good Faith Estimate or HUD-1 settlement statement (12 CFR 1026.3(h)).

2. Determine whether the creditor ensures that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure no later than three business days before consummation (except for transactions secured by a timeshare, which the creditor must ensure the consumer receives no later than consummation) (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)).

   NOTE: If the creditor mails the disclosure six business days prior to consummation, it can assume that it was received three business days after sending, and therefore three business days prior to consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iii); see Comment 19(f)(1)(iii)) "Business day" for purposes of the Closing Disclosure is the rescission-based business day definition, and means all calendar days except Sundays and legal public holidays 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6), (12 CFR1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A)) .

3. Determine whether the consumer waived the waiting period before consummation by providing a dated written statement describing a bona fide personal financial emergency, specifically modifying or waiving the waiting period and signed by all the consumers who are primarily liable on the obligation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iv)).

   NOTE: Preprinted forms for this purpose are prohibited (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iv)).

4. If a settlement agent provides the consumer with the Closing Disclosure, determine whether the creditor ensures that the disclosures were provided in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.19(f) (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(v)).

5. Determine whether the creditor is relying on the Closing Disclosure to reset tolerances for purposes of determining good faith under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3). If so, confirm:

   a. A changed circumstance or other reason set forth in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv) is present;

   b. The revised disclosures were based on the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure was provided to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i)); and

   c. The creditor provided the revised disclosures within three business days of receiving information sufficient to establish a reason for a revised estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)).

Subsequent Changes

1. Determine whether the creditor provides a corrected Closing Disclosure where a disclosure has become inaccurate before consummation, so that the consumer receives a corrected Closing Disclosure at or before consummation. Determine whether the creditor permits the consumer to inspect the corrected disclosure during the business day prior to consummation.

   NOTE: The corrected Closing Disclosure must be completed to set forth items known to the creditor at the time of this inspection but may omit from inspection items related only to the seller's transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(i)).

2. Determine whether the creditor provides a corrected Closing Disclosure and a new three-business-day waiting period before consummation if:

   a. The APR disclosed in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.38(o)(4) becomes inaccurate, as defined in 12 CFR1026.22 (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(A));

   NOTE: Generally, if the APR and finance charges are overstated because the interest rate has decreased, the APR is considered accurate and no new waiting period is required. (12 CFR 1026.22)).

   b. The loan product is changed, causing the information disclosed in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR1026.38(a)(5)(iii) to become inaccurate (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(B)); or

   c. A prepayment penalty is added, causing the statement regarding a prepayment penalty required under 12 CFR 1026.38(b) to become inaccurate. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(C)).

3. Determine whether the creditor is relying on the corrected Closing Disclosure to reset tolerances for purposes of determining good faith under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3). If so, confirm:

   a. A changed circumstance or other reason set forth in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv) is present;

   b. The revised disclosures were based on the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure was provided to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i)); and

   c. The creditor provided the revised disclosures within three business days of receiving information sufficient to establish a reason for a revised estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)).

   NOTE: Corrected Closing Disclosures require a new three-day waiting period only if one of the following is present: an inaccurate APR, a change in loan product, or the addition of a prepayment penalty (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)).

4. Determine whether, when an event in connection with the settlement causes the Closing Disclosure to become inaccurate during the 30-day period following consummation, and that inaccuracy results in a change to an amount actually paid by the consumer from the amount disclosed, the creditor delivers or places in the mail corrected disclosures not later than 30 days from receiving the information to establish that the event occurred (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii)).

   NOTE: A creditor does not violate 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i) if the disclosures contain non-numeric clerical errors, provided the creditor delivers or places in the mail corrected disclosures no later than 60 days after consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iv)).

5. Determine whether the creditor charged the consumer for any amounts that exceeded the estimated charges beyond the applicable permissible variations set forth in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) (no variation permitted for the charge) and (ii) (charge subject to a 10 percent aggregate limit). For any such charges, determine if the creditor refunds the excess amounts no later than 60 days after consummation and delivers or places in the mail corrected disclosures reflecting the refund no later than 60 days after consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(v)).

Charges Disclosed

1. Determine whether the creditor or settlement service provider imposes a charge on the consumer for more than the settlement service provider actually received. If the creditor charges the average charge for settlement services, determine whether the creditor meets the following:

   a. The average charge is no more than the average amount paid for that service by or on behalf of all consumers and sellers for a class of transactions (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(ii)(A));

   b. The class of transactions is defined by appropriate period of time, geographic area, and type of loan (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(ii)(B));

   c. The same average charge is used for every transaction within the class (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(ii)(C)); and

   d. The average charge is not used for any type of insurance or any charge based on the loan amount or property value, and is not otherwise prohibited by law 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(ii)(D)).

Transactions Involving a Seller

1. Determine whether the settlement agent provides the seller with the Closing Disclosure no later than the day of consummation. If during the 30-day period following consummation, an event in connection with the settlement of the transaction occurs that causes disclosures to become inaccurate and the inaccuracy results in a change to the amount actually paid by the seller from that previously disclosed, determine whether the settlement agent has delivered or placed in the mail corrected disclosures not later than 30 days after receiving information sufficient to establish that such an event has occurred (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(4)).

No Fee

1. Determine whether a creditor or servicer imposes a fee on any person as part of settlement costs or otherwise for preparing or delivering Closing Disclosures (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(5))

Electronic Disclosures

1. Assess compliance for an institution's electronic disclosure requirements.

E-Sign Act

1. Disclosures may be provided to the consumer in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign Act) (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.). The E-Sign Act does not mandate that institutions or consumers use or accept electronic records or signatures. It permits institutions to satisfy any statutory or regulatory requirements by providing the information electronically after obtaining the consumer's affirmative consent. Before consent can be given, consumers must be provided with the following information:

   a. Any right or option to have the information provided in paper or non-electronic form;

   b. The right to withdraw the consent to receive information electronically and the consequences, including fees, of doing so;

   c. The scope of the consent (for example, whether the consent applies only to a particular transaction or to identified categories of records that may be provided during the course of the parties' relationship);

   d. The procedures to withdraw consent and to update information needed to contact the consumer electronically; and

   e. The methods by which a consumer may obtain, upon request, a paper copy of an electronic record after consent has been given to receive the information electronically and whether any fee will be charged (15 U.S.C. 7001(c)(1)(B)).

      i. The consumer must consent electronically or confirm consent electronically in a manner that "reasonably demonstrates that the consumer can access information in the electronic form that will be used to provide the information that is the subject of the consent". After the consent, if an institution changes the hardware or software requirements such that a consumer may be prevented from accessing and retaining information electronically, the institution must notify the consumer of the new requirements and must allow the consumer to withdraw consent without charge. (15 U.S.C. 7001(c)(1)(C) and (D)).

ii. If the financial institution makes its disclosures available to consumers in electronic form, determine that the forms comply with the appropriate 12 CFR – 1026.5(a)(1); 1026.15(b); 1026.16(c); 1026.17(a)(1); 1026.17(g); 1026.19(c); 1026.23(b)(1); 1026.24(d); 1026.31(b); 1026.40(a)(3); and 1026.60(a)(2)(v).

iii. Card issuers may provide credit card agreements in electronic form under 12 CFR 1026.58(d) and (e) without regard to the consumer notice and consent requirements of section 101(c) of the E-Sign Act (12 CFR 1026.58(f)).

Annual Report to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau – 12 CFR 1026.57(d)

1. If the card issuer was a party to one or more college credit card agreements in effect at any time during a calendar year, verify that the card issuer submits to the CFPB an annual report regarding those agreements in the form and manner prescribed by the Bureau (12 CFR 1026.57(d)(1)).

   NOTE: A college credit card agreement is any business, marketing, or promotional agreement between a card issuer and an institution of higher education (or an affiliated alumni organization or foundation) in connection with which credit cards are issued to college students at that institution of higher education (12 CFR 1026.57(a)(5)). (See Comment 57(a)(5)-1) for specifics on where a covered separate credit feature may be added.

2. The annual report to the CFPB must include the following (12 CFR 1026.57(d)(2)):

   a. Identifying information about the card issuer and the agreements submitted, including the issuer's name, address, and identifying number (such as an RSSD ID number or tax identification number);

   b. A copy of any college credit card agreement to which the card issuer was a party that was in effect at any time during the period covered by the report;

   c. A copy of any memorandum of understanding in effect at any time during the period covered by the report between the card issuer and an institution of higher education or affiliated organization that directly or indirectly relates to the college credit card agreement or that controls or directs any obligations or distribution of benefits between any such entities;

d. The total dollar amount of any payments pursuant to a college credit card agreement from the card issuer to an institution of higher education or affiliated organization during the period covered by the report, and the method or formula used to determine such amounts;

e. The total number of credit card accounts opened pursuant to any college credit card agreement during the period covered by the report; and

f. The total number of credit card accounts opened pursuant to any such agreement that were open at the end of the period covered by the report.

3. If the card issuer is subject to reporting, determine if the card issuer submits its annual report for each calendar year to the CFPB by the first business day on or after March 31 of the following calendar year (12 CFR 1026.57(d)(3)).

The Submission of Agreements to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau – 12 CFR 1026.58(c)

1. For card issuers that issue credit cards under a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, determine that the card issuer makes quarterly submissions to the CFPB in the form and manner specified by the Bureau that contain:

   a. Identifying information about the card issuer and the agreements submitted, including the issuer's name, address, and identifying number (such as an RSSD ID number or tax identification number) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)(i));

   b. The credit card agreements that the card issuer offered to the public as of the last business day of the preceding calendar quarter that the card issuer has not previously submitted to the CFPB (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)(ii));

   c. Any credit card agreement previously submitted to the CFPB that was amended during the preceding calendar quarter and that the card issuer offered to the public as of the last business day of the preceding calendar quarter as described in 12 CFR 1026.58(c)(3) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)(iii)); and

   d. Notification regarding any credit card agreement previously submitted to the CFPB that the issuer is withdrawing, as described in 12 CFR 1026.58(c)(4), (c)(5), (c)(6), and (c)(7) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)(iv)).

2. Verify that quarterly submissions were sent to the CFPB no later than the first business day on or after January 31, April 30, July 31, and October 31, of each year 12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)).

3. If a credit card agreement that previously has been submitted to the CFPB is amended, verify that the card issuer submits the entire amended agreement to the CFPB, in the form and manner specified by the Bureau, by the first quarterly submission deadline after the last day of the calendar quarter in which the change became effective (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(3)).

NOTE: If a credit card agreement has been submitted to the CFPB, the agreement has not been amended and the card issuer continues to offer the agreement to the public, no additional submission regarding that agreement is required.

4. If a card issuer no longer offers to the public a credit card agreement that previously has been submitted to the CFPB, ensure that the card issuer notifies the Bureau by the first quarterly submission deadline after the last day of the calendar quarter in which the issuer ceased to offer the agreement (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(4)).

   NOTE: A card issuer is not required to submit any credit card agreements to the CFPB if the card issuer had fewer than 10,000 open credit card accounts as of the last business day of the calendar quarter (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(5)(i)).

5. If an issuer that previously qualified for the de minimis exception ceases to qualify, determine that the card issuer begins making quarterly submissions to the CFPB no later than the first quarterly submission deadline after the date as of which the issuer ceased to qualify (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(5)(ii)).

6. If a card issuer that did not previously qualify for the de minimis exception qualifies for the de minimis exception, determine that the card issuer continues to make quarterly submissions to the CFPB until the issuer notifies the Bureau that the card issuer is withdrawing all agreements it previously submitted to the CFPB (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(5)(iii)).

7. A card issuer is not required to submit to the CFPB a credit card agreement if, as of the last business day of the calendar quarter, the agreement is offered for accounts under one or more private label credit card plans each of which has fewer than 10,000 open accounts and is not offered to the public other than for accounts under such a plan (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(6)(i))

   NOTE: A private label credit card is one that is usable only at a single merchant or affiliated group of merchants. A private label credit card plan is all private label credit card accounts issued by a particular issuer with credit cards usable at the same single merchant or affiliated group of merchants (12 CFR 1026.58(b)(8)).

8. If an agreement that previously qualified for the private label credit card exception ceases to qualify, determine that the card issuer submits the agreement to the CFPB no later than the first quarterly submission deadline after the date as of which the agreement ceased to qualify (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(6)(ii)).

9. If an agreement that did not previously qualify for the private label credit card exception qualifies for the exception, determine that the card issuer continues to make quarterly submissions to the Bureau with respect to that agreement until the issuer notifies the CFPB that the agreement is being withdrawn (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(6)(iii)).

NOTE: A card issuer is not required to submit to the CFPB a credit card agreement if, as of the last business day of the calendar quarter, the agreement is offered as part of a product test offered to only a limited group of consumers for a limited period of time, is used for fewer than 10,000 open accounts, and is not offered to the public other than in connection with such a product test (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(7)(i)).

10. If an agreement that previously qualified for the product testing exception ceases to qualify, determine that the card issuer submits the agreement to the CFPB no later than the first quarterly submission deadline after the date as of which the agreement ceased to qualify (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(7)(ii)).

11. If an agreement that did not previously qualify for the product testing exception qualifies for the exception, determine that the card issuer continues to make quarterly submissions to the CFPB with respect to that agreement until the issuer notifies the Bureau that the agreement is being withdrawn. (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(7)(iii)).

12. Verify that each agreement contains the provisions of the agreement and the pricing information in effect as of the last business day of the preceding calendar quarter (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(i)(A)).

13. Verify that agreements do not include any personally identifiable information relating to any cardholder, such as name, address, telephone number, or account number (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(i)(B)).

14. Verify that agreements are presented in a clear and legible font (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(i)(D)).

15. Verify that pricing information is set forth in a single addendum to the agreement that contains only the pricing information (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(ii)(A)).

    NOTE: With respect to information other than the pricing information that may vary between cardholders depending on creditworthiness, state of residence, or other factors, issuers may, but are not required to, include that information in a single addendum (the optional variable terms addendum) to the agreement separate from the pricing addendum (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(iii)).

16. If pricing information varies from one cardholder to another depending on the cardholder's creditworthiness or state of residence or other factors, verify that the pricing information is disclosed either by setting forth all the possible variations (such as purchase APRs of 13 percent, 15 percent, 17 percent, and 19 percent) or by providing a range of possible variations (such as purchase APRs ranging from 13 percent to 19 percent) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(ii)(B)).

17. If a rate included in the pricing information is a variable rate, verify that the issuer identifies the index or formula used in setting the rate and the margin (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(ii)(C)).

18. If rates vary from one cardholder to another, verify that the issuer discloses such rates by providing the index and the possible margins (such as the prime rate plus five percent, eight percent, 10 percent, or 12 percent) or range of margins (such as the prime rate plus from five to 12 percent) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(ii)(C)).

    NOTE: The value of the rate and the value of the index are not required to be disclosed.

19. Determine that issuers do not provide provisions of the agreement or pricing information in the form of change-in-terms notices or riders (other than the pricing information addendum and the optional variable terms addendum) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(iv)).

20. Determine that changes in provisions or pricing information are integrated into the text of the agreement, the pricing information addendum, or the optional variable terms addendum, as appropriate (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(iv)).

The Posting of Agreements Offered to the Public – 12 CFR 1026.58(d)

1. Determine that the card issuer posts and maintains on its publicly available website the credit card agreements that the issuer is required to submit to the CFPB under 12 CFR 1026.58(c) (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(1)).

2. With respect to an agreement offered solely for accounts under one or more private label credit card plans (and the issuer does not post and maintain the agreements on its publicly available website), determine that the issuer posts and maintains the agreement on the publicly available website of at least one of the merchants where cards issued under each private label credit card plan with 10,000 or more open accounts may be used (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(1)).

3. Verify that agreements posted pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.58(d) conform to the form and content requirements for agreements submitted to the CFPB specified in 12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8) (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(2)).

4. Determine that agreements are posted in an electronic format that is readily usable by the general public (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(3)).

5. Verify that agreements are placed in a location on its website that is prominent and readily accessible by the public and accessible without submission of personally identifiable information (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(3)).

6. Determine that the card issuer updates the agreements posted on its website at least as frequently as the quarterly schedule required for submission of agreements to the CFPB under 12 CFR 1026.58(c) (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(4)).

    NOTE: If the issuer chooses to update the agreements on its website more frequently, the agreements posted on the issuer's website may contain the provisions of the agreement and the pricing information in effect as of a date other than the last business day of the preceding calendar quarter.

The Posting of Agreements for "Open" Accounts – 12 CFR 1026.58(e)

1. With respect to any open (i.e., the cardholder can obtain extensions or there is an outstanding balance on the account that has not been charged off) credit card account, determine that the card issuer either:

    a. Posts and maintains the cardholder's agreement on its website; or

    b. Promptly provides a copy of the cardholder's agreement to the cardholder upon the cardholder's request (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(i) and (ii)).

2. If the card issuer makes an agreement available upon request, ensure that the issuer provides the cardholder with the ability to request a copy of the agreement both by:

    a. Using the issuer's website, such as by clicking on a clearly identified box to make the request (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii)), and

    b. Calling a readily available telephone line the number for which is displayed on the issuer's website and clearly identified as to purpose (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii) and (e)(2)).

3. If an issuer does not maintain a website from which cardholders can access specific information about their individual accounts determine that the issuer makes agreements available upon request by providing the cardholder with the ability to request a copy of the agreement by calling a readily available telephone line the number for which is (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(2)):

    a. Displayed on the issuer's website and clearly identified as to purpose; or

    b. Included on each periodic statement sent to the cardholder and clearly identified as to purpose.

4. Verify that the card issuer sends to the cardholder or otherwise make available to the cardholder a copy of the cardholder's agreement in electronic or paper form no later than 30 days after the issuer receives the cardholder's request (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii)).

5. Determine that agreements posted on the card issuer's website or made available upon the cardholder's request conform to the form and content requirements for agreements submitted to the CFPB specified in 12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8) (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(i)).

6. If the card issuer posts an agreement on its website or otherwise provides an agreement to a cardholder electronically, verify that the agreement is posted or provided in an electronic format that is readily usable by the general public and is placed in a location that is prominent and readily accessible to the cardholder (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(ii)).

7. If agreements posted or otherwise provided contain personally identifiable information relating to the cardholder, such as name, address, telephone number, or account number, ensure that the issuer takes appropriate measures to make the agreement accessible only to the cardholder or other authorized persons (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(iii)).
8. Determine that agreements posted or otherwise provided set forth the specific provisions and pricing information applicable to the particular cardholder (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(iv)).
9. Determine that provisions and pricing information are complete and accurate as of a date no more than 60 days prior to (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(iv)):
    a. The date on which the agreement is posted on the card issuer's website under 12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(i);
    b. The date the cardholder's request is received under 12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii) or (e)(2).

NOTE: Card issuers may provide credit card agreements in electronic form under 12 CFR 1026.58(d) and (e) without regard to the consumer notice and consent requirements of section 101(c) of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E Sign Act) (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.) (12 CFR 1026.58(f)).

Advertising (Open- and Closed-End)

1. For open- and closed-end loans, sample advertising copy, including any electronic advertising, since the previous examination and verify that the terms of credit are accurate, clear, balanced, and conspicuous. If triggering terms are used, determine that the required disclosures are made (12 CFR 1026.16 and 1026.24).
    a. For advertisements for closed-end credit:
        i. If a rate of finance charge was stated, determine that it was stated as an APR.
        ii. If an APR will increase after consummation, verify that a statement to that fact is made.
        iii. Determine whether there are deceptive or misleading statements or practices.
    b. Determine that the creditor does not offer college students any tangible item to induce such students to apply for or open an open-end consumer credit plan offered by such creditor, if such offer is made:
        i. On the campus of an institution of higher education;
        ii. Near the campus of an institution of higher education; or

iii. At an event sponsored by or related to an institution of higher education (12 CFR 1026.57(c)).

c. If an open-end credit advertisement refers to an APR as "fixed" (or similar term), determine 1) that the advertisement also specifies a time period that the rate will be fixed and 2) that the rate will not increase during that period. (12 CFR 1026.16(f))

d. If an open-end credit advertisement used the word "fixed" or a similar word and no time period is specified in which the rate will be fixed, determine that the rate will not increase while the plan is open (12 CFR 1026.16(f)).

e. For any advertisement of an open-end (not home-secured) plan, if an APR or fee that may be applied to the account is an introductory rate or introductory fee, determine that the term introductory or intro is in immediate proximity to each listing of the introductory rate or introductory fee in a written or electronic advertisement. [[(12 CFR 1026.16(g)(3))

f. For any advertisement of an open-end (not home-secured) plan, if any APR or fee that may be applied to the account is a promotional rate under 12 CFR 1026.16(g)(2)(i) or any fee that may be applied to the account is a promotional fee under 12 CFR 1026.16(g)(2)(iv), determine that the following information is stated in a clear and conspicuous manner in the advertisement (12 CFR 1026.16(g)(4)):

i. When the promotional rate or promotional fee will end; and

ii. The annual percentage rate that will apply after the end of the promotional period.

NOTE: If such rate is variable, determine that the annual percentage rate complies with the accuracy standards in 12 CFR 1026.60(c)(2), 1026.60(d)(3), 1026.60(e)(4), or 1026.16(b)(1)(ii), as applicable. If such rate cannot be determined at the time disclosures are given because the rate depends at least in part on a later determination of the consumer's creditworthiness, determine that the advertisement discloses the specific rates or the range of rates that might apply (12 CFR 1026.16(g)(4)(ii)). Further, if the promotional rate or fee is stated in a written or electronic advertisement, determine that the information in 12 CFR 1026.16 (g)(4)(i), and, as applicable, (g)(4)(ii), or (g)(4)(iii) are also stated in a prominent location closely proximate to the first listing of the promotional rate or promotional fee.

g. If a deferred interest offer is advertised for an open-end account not subject to 12 CFR 1026.40, determine that the deferred interest period is stated in a clear and conspicuous manner in the advertisement. If the phrase "no interest" or similar term regarding the possible avoidance of interest obligations under the deferred interest program is stated, determine that the term "if paid in full" is also stated in a clear and conspicuous manner preceding the disclosure of the deferred interest period in the advertisement. If the deferred interest offer is included in a written or electronic advertisement, determine that the deferred interest period and, if applicable, the term "if paid in full" are stated in immediate proximity to each statement of "no interest," "no payments," "deferred interest," "same as cash," or similar term regarding interest or payments during the deferred interest period (12 CFR 1026.16(h)(3)).

h. If any deferred interest offer is advertised for an open-end account not subject to 12 CFR 1026.40, determine that the (h)(4)(i) and (h)(4)(ii) language of 12 CFR 1026.16(h)(4) is stated in the advertisement and is similar to Sample G-24 in Appendix G. If the deferred interest offer is included in a written or electronic advertisement, determine that this information is stated in a prominent location closely proximate to the first statement of "no interest," "no payments," "deferred interest," "same as cash," or similar term regarding interest or payments during the deferred interest period (12 CFR 1026.16(h)(4)).

NOTE: The requirements in 12 CFR 1026.16(h)(4) apply to any advertisement of an open-end credit plan not subject to 12 CFR 1026.40 (requirements for home equity plans) (12 CFR 1026.16(h)(1)). However, the requirements do not apply to an envelope or other enclosure in which an application or solicitation is mailed, or to a banner advertisement or pop-up advertisement linked to an application or solicitation provided electronically (12 CFR 1026.16(h)(5)).

Transactional Testing

NOTE: When verifying APR accuracies, use the the FFIEC Federal Computational Tool or other calculation tool acceptable to your regulatory agency.

1. Review the financial institution's closed-end and open-end transactions to ensure accuracy and completeness.

Closed-End Credit Transactional Testing Procedures

1. For each type of closed-end loan being tested, determine the accuracy of the disclosures by comparing the disclosures to the contract and other financial institution documents (12 CFR 1026.17).
2. Determine whether the required disclosures were made before consummation of the transaction and ensure the presence and accuracy of the items below, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.18).

   a. Creditor and loan originator name with Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry (NMLSR) IDs on required documents as required under (12 CFR 1026.36).

   b. Amount financed.

   c. Itemization of the amount financed (RESPA GFE may substitute).

   d. Finance charge.

e. APR.

f. Variable rate information as follows for loans not secured by a principal dwelling or secured by a principal dwelling with terms of one year or less:

   i. Circumstances which permit rate increase,

   ii. Limitations on the increase (periodic or lifetime),

   iii. Effect of the increase, and

   iv. Hypothetical example of new payment terms that would result from an increase.

g. Payment schedule including the number, amount, and timing of payments.

h. Total of payments.

i. Demand feature.

j. Total sale price (credit sale).

o. Certain security interest charges.

p. Contract reference.

q. Assumption policy.

r. Required deposit.

s. Interest rate and payment summary for mortgage transactions.

t. No-guarantee-to-refinance statement.

3. For adjustable-rate mortgages, verify that the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides disclosures in connection with the initial interest rate adjustment pursuant to the contract and for rate changes that result in corresponding changes in payment.

4. For adjustable-rate mortgages, verify that the creditor, assignee, or servicer includes the appropriate content (as identified in the Closed-End Credit Disclosure Forms Review Procedures section above).

5. For adjustable-rate mortgages, verify that the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides the disclosures consistent with timing requirements (see Timing Requirements section of the procedures above).

   NOTE: The accuracy of the adjusted interest rates and indexes should be verified by comparing them with the contract and early disclosures. Refer to the Additional Variable Rate Testing section of these examination procedures.

6. Determine, for each type of closed-end rescindable loan being tested, the appropriate number of copies of the rescission notice are provided to each person whose ownership interest is or will be subject to the security interest. The creditor must deliver two copies of the notice of right to rescind to each consumer entitled to rescind. The rescission notice must disclose the items below (12 CFR 1026.23(b)(1)).

   a. Security interest taken in the consumer's principal dwelling

   b. Consumer's right to rescind the transaction

   c. How to exercise the right to rescind, with a form for that purpose, designating the address of the creditor's place of business

   d. Effects of rescission

   e. Date the rescission period expires.

7. Ensure funding was delayed until the rescission period expired (12 CFR 1026.23(c)).

8. Determine if the consumer has waived the three-day right to rescind since the previous examination. If applicable, test rescission waivers (12 CFR 1026.23(e)).

9. Determine whether the maximum interest rate in the contract is disclosed for any consumer credit contract secured by a dwelling if the APR may increase after consummation (12 CFR 1026.30(a)).

10. For private student loans with a right to cancel, review cancellation requests to determine if they were properly handled (12 CFR 1026.47(c)).

Minimum Standards for Transactions Secured by a Dwelling – 12 CFR 1026.43

1. Determine whether the financial institution is a creditor that originates covered transactions. Covered transactions are transactions secured by a dwelling, including any real property attached to a dwelling. They do not include: home equity lines of credit; timeshare loans, or for purposes of 12 CFR 1026.43(c)-(f): reverse mortgages; temporary or bridge or construction loans of 12 months or less; renewable or non-renewable construction loans of 12 months or less that are a part of a construction-to-permanent transaction; or an extension of credit under a program administered by a Housing Finance Agency (defined in 24 CFR 266.5), by community development or non-profit lenders specified in 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)(v), or in connection with certain federal emergency economic stabilization programs (12 CFR 1026.43(a)).

2. Determine if a loan is a streamline refinance under 12 CFR 1026.20(a) and Commentary 1026.20(a) and whether it qualifies under 12 CFR 1026.43(d), below.

Refinancing Non-Standard Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(d)

1. Determine whether a creditor that has refinanced a non-standard mortgage defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(d)(i) (an ARM with an introductory rate fixed for a year or more, an interest-only loan, or a negative amortization loan) into a standard mortgage as defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(d)(ii) has considered whether the standard mortgage likely will prevent a default by the consumer once the loan is recast. In addition, determine that the following conditions are met (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(3)):

    a. At the time of the refinance, the creditor for the standard mortgage is the current holder of the existing non-standard mortgage or the servicer acting on behalf of the current holder (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(i));

    b. The monthly payment for the standard mortgage is materially lower (a payment reduction of 10 percent or more is sufficient) than the monthly payment for the non-standard mortgage using the payment calculation rules in 12 CFR 1026.43(d)(5) (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(ii));

    c. The creditor received the consumer's written application for the standard mortgage no later than two months after the non-standard mortgage had recast (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(iii));

    d. The consumer had made no more than one payment more than 30 days late on the non-standard mortgage during the 12 months immediately before the creditor receives the consumer's written application for the standard mortgage (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(iv));

    e. The consumer had made no payments more than 30 days late during the six months immediately before the creditor received the consumer's written application for the standard mortgage (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(v)); and

    f. If the non-standard mortgage was consummated on or after January 10, 2014, the non-standard mortgage was made in accordance with the ability to repay or the qualified mortgage requirements 12 CFR 1026.43(c) or (e) (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(vi)).

Ability to Repay – 12 CFR 1026.43(c)

NOTE: For all covered transactions, except streamline refinances, creditors must make a good faith determination that the consumer will have a reasonable ability to repay the loan, and must verify the information upon which it relied. A creditor can meet this obligation by complying with the ability-to-repay requirement in 12 CFR 1026.43(c), by making qualified mortgages under 12 CFR 1026.43(e) and (f), or qualified mortgages under the safe harbor standard in 15 U.S.C. 1639c(b)(2)(F). Qualified mortgages, which limit certain loan features and practices, are presumed to satisfy the ability-to-repay requirements (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(1) and (2)).

Except as otherwise provided where a loan is a non-standard mortgage refinanced into a standard mortgage under 12 CFR 1026.43(d), or is a qualified mortgage under 12 CFR 1026.43(e), (f), or pursuant to 15 U.S.C. 1639c(b)(2)(F) (all of which are covered by procedures below), determine whether the creditor makes a reasonable and good faith determination at or before consummation that the consumer will have a reasonable ability to repay the loan according to its terms, based, at a minimum, on the criteria that follow (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(1)).

1. Determine whether the creditor considered the following, at a minimum, in determining the consumer's ability to repay (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)):

    a. The consumer's current or reasonably expected income or assets (other than the value of the dwelling, including any real property attached to the dwelling, that secures the loan) (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(i));

    b. If the creditor relies on employment income, the consumer's current employment status (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(ii));

    c. The consumer's monthly payment on the covered transaction, calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5) (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(iii));

    d. The consumer's monthly payment on any simultaneous loan that the creditor knows or has reason to know will be made, calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(6) (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(iv));

    e. The consumer's monthly payment for mortgage-related obligations (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(v));

    f. The consumer's current debt obligations, alimony, and child support (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(vi));

    g. The consumer's monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7) and 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(vii) and (viii)); and

    h. The consumer's credit history (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(viii)).

2. Determine whether the creditor verified the information it relied upon when considering the eight factors listed above using reasonably reliable third-party records, except that special rules apply for verification of income or assets, employment, and current debt obligations that are not shown on the consumer's credit report. (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(3))

Income and Assets, Employment and Debt Obligations

1. Determine that the creditor verified the information that it relied on using reliable third-party records except that:

    a. A creditor may verify a consumer's employment status orally if the creditor prepares a written record of the information obtained orally (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(3)(ii)); and

    b. A creditor that relies on a credit report to verify a consumer's current obligations need not independently verify obligations that the consumer lists on the application that are not in the consumer's credit report (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(3)(iii)).

2. Determine whether the creditor verified the income or assets it relied upon, by using third-party records that provide reasonably reliable evidence, (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)) such as:

    a. A tax-return transcript issued by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4));

    b. Copies of tax returns the consumer filed with the IRS or a state taxing authority (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(i));

    c. IRS Form W-2s or similar IRS forms used for reporting wages or tax withholding (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(ii));

    d. Payroll statements, including military Leave and Earnings Statements (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(iii));

    e. Financial institution records (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(iv));

    f. Records from the consumer's employer or a third party that obtained information from the employer (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(v));

    g. Records from a federal, state, or local government agency stating the consumer's income from benefits or entitlements (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(vi));

    h. Receipts from the consumer's use of check cashing services (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(vii)); and

    i. Receipts from the consumer's use of a funds transfer service 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(viii)).

3. For employment status, if the creditor orally verified employment status, determine whether the creditor prepared a written record of the information obtained orally (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(3)(ii)).

Monthly Payment Calculation

1. Determine whether the creditor calculated the monthly payment (except for balloon payment, interest-only and negative amortization loans) by using:

   a. The fully indexed rate or any introductory interest rate, whichever is greater; and monthly, fully amortizing payments that are substantially equal (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)).

   b. For a loan with a balloon payment:

      i. The maximum payment scheduled during the first five years after the date on which the first regular periodic payment will be due for a loan that is not a higher-priced covered transaction as defined under 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(4) (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)(ii)(A)(1)); or

      ii. The maximum payment in the payment schedule, including any balloon payment, for a higher-priced covered transaction (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)(ii)(A)(2)).

   c. For an interest-only loan:

      i. The fully indexed rate or any introductory interest rate, whichever is greater; and

      ii. Substantially equal, monthly payments of principal and interest that will repay the loan amount over the term of the loan remaining as of the date the loan is recast (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)(ii)(B)).

   d. For a negative amortization loan:

      i. The fully indexed rate or any introductory interest rate, whichever is greater; and

      ii. Substantially equal, monthly payments of principal and interest that will repay the maximum loan amount as defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(7) over the term of the loan remaining as of the date the loan is recast (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)(ii)(C)).

Monthly Payment Calculation for Simultaneous Loans

1. Determine whether the creditor calculated the monthly payment on any simultaneous loan that was used to determine the consumer's repayment ability, including any mortgage-related obligations, as follows:

   a. For a simultaneous loan that is a covered transaction, using the payment calculation rules for covered transactions, described above (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(6)(i)); or

b. For a home equity line of credit, by using the periodic payment required under the terms of the plan and the amount of credit drawn at or before consummation of the covered transaction (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(6)(ii)).

Monthly Debt-to-Income Ratio or Residual Income

1. When a creditor considers the consumer's monthly debt-to-income ratio, determine whether the creditor considered the ratio of the consumer's total monthly debt obligations to the consumer's total monthly income (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(ii)(A)).

   a. Total monthly debt obligations means the total of: the monthly payment on the covered transaction (as required by 12 CFR1026.43(c)(2)(iii) and (c)(5)), simultaneous loans (as required by 12 CFR1026.43(c)(2)(iv) and (c)(6)), mortgage-related obligations (as required by 12 CFR1026.43(c)(2)(v)), and current debt obligations, alimony, and child support (as required by (12 CFR1026.43(c)(2)(vi)).

   b. Total monthly income means the total of the consumer's current or reasonably expected income, including any income from assets (as required by 12 CFR1026.43(c)(2)(i) and (4)).

2. If a creditor considers the consumer's monthly residual income, determine whether the creditor considered the consumer's remaining income after subtracting the consumer's total monthly debt obligations from the consumer's total monthly income (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(ii)(B)). Total monthly debt obligations and total monthly income are defined in (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(i)(A) and (B)).

   NOTE: In cases where the loan does not meet the requirements to be a qualified mortgage, the loan should be analyzed under ability to repay requirements as outlined in (12 CFR 1026.43(c)).

Qualified Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)

1. Determine whether the creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a loan that is a qualified mortgage, including a higher-priced qualified mortgage, under the general qualified mortgage definition in 12 CFR 1026.43(e).

2. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(4), (5), (6), or (f) (all discussed below), a qualified mortgage is a covered transaction:

   a. That provides for regular, substantially equal, periodic payments, except for the effect any interest rate change after consummation has on adjustable-rate mortgages or step-rate mortgages (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)) that do not:

      i. Result in an increase of the principal balance (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)(A)), or

ii. Allow balloon payments or deferment of principal payments (except for balloon-payment qualified mortgages described in 12 CFR 1026.43(f) and (e)(6) (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)(B) and (C)).

b. For which the loan term does not exceed 30 years (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(ii));

c. For which the total points and fees (as defined in 12 CFR1026.32(b)(1)(i)):

i. Do not exceed the applicable thresholds of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iii) and (3):

A. $100,000 or over: 3 percent of the total loan amount (See 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(4)(i));

B. $60,000 or over but less than $100,000: $3,000;

C. $20,000 or over but less than $60,000: 5 percent of the total loan amount;

D. $12,500 or over but less than $20,000: $1,000; or

E. Less than $12,500: 8 percent of the total loan amount.

NOTE: These numbers are annually adjusted for inflation on January 1.[67]

ii. For transactions consummated on or before January 10, 2021, if the creditor or assignee determined after consummation that the points and fees exceeded the applicable threshold, the loan is not precluded from being a qualified mortgage if:

A. The loan otherwise meets the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2), (e)(4), (e)(5), (e)(6), or (f), as applicable;

B. The creditor or assignee paid to the consumer certain amounts, described below, within 210 days after consummation and prior to any of the following events:

1) The consumer institutes an action in connection with the loan;

2) The consumer provides a written notice to the creditor, assignee, or servicer that the transaction's total points and fees exceed the applicable threshold; or

3) The consumer becomes 60 days past due on the legal obligation; and

C. The amount paid to the consumer is not less than the sum of the following:

1) The dollar amount by which the transaction's total points and fees exceeds the applicable limit; and

[67] The most recent updates can be found at: https://www.consumerfinance.gov/policy-compliance/rulemaking/final-rules/truth-lending-regulation-z-annual-threshold-adjustments-card-act-hoepa/.

2) Interest on the amount of excess points and fees, calculated using the contract interest rate applicable during the period from consummation until the payment is made to the consumer; and

D. The creditor or assignee, as applicable, maintains and follows policies and procedures for post-consummation review of points and fees for making the above-described payments to consumers (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(3)(iii) and (iv)).

NOTE: The points and fees cure provision applies to the points and fees limits for all of the qualified mortgage types defined in Regulation Z.

d. For which the creditor underwrites the loan, taking into account the monthly payment for mortgage-related obligations, using (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iv)):

i. The maximum interest rate that may apply during the first 5 years after the date on which the first regular periodic payment will be due; and

ii. Periodic payments of principal and interest that will repay either:

A. The outstanding principal balance over the remaining term of the loan. This should be calculated as of the date the interest rate adjusts to the maximum interest rate that may apply during the first five years after the date on which the first regular periodic payment will be due, assuming the consumer will have made all required payments as due prior to that date; or

B. The loan amount over the loan term;

e. For which the creditor (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(v)):

i. Considers the consumer’s monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income; current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan; and debt obligations, alimony, and child support; and

ii. Verifies the consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan and the consumer’s current debt obligations, alimony, and child support.

f. For which the annual percentage rate does not exceed the average prime offer rate for a comparable transaction as of the date the interest rate is set by the amounts specified below (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)):[68]

   i. For a first-lien covered transaction with a loan amount greater than or equal to $110,260, 2.25 or more percentage points (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(A));

   ii. For a first-lien covered transaction with a loan amount greater than or equal to $66,156 but less than $110,260, 3.5 or more percentage points (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(B));

   iii. For a first-lien covered transaction with a loan amount less than $66,156, 6.5 or more percentage points (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(C));

   iv. For a first-lien covered transaction secured by a manufactured home with a loan amount less than $110,260, 6.5 or more percentage points (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(D));

   v. For a subordinate-lien covered transaction with a loan amount greater than or equal to $66,156, 3.5 or more percentage points (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(E));

   vi. For a subordinate-lien covered transaction with a loan amount less than $66,156, 6.5 or more percentage points (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(F)).

   NOTE: These numbers are annually adjusted for inflation on January 1.[69]

Temporary Category of Qualified Mortgages – Other Agencies – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(4)

1. Determine whether the creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making loans that:

   a. Meet the requirements of a qualified mortgage as defined by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (24 CFR 201.7 and 24 CFR 203.19), the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs (38 CFR 36.4300 and 38 CFR 36.4500), or the U.S. Department of Agriculture (7 CFR 3555.109); or

   b. Meet the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i) through (iii) (i.e., do not have negative amortization, interest-only payments, or balloon payments; loan terms that [68] This subsection applies if the creditor chooses to rely on the pricing threshold method, which becomes compulsory for purposes of the General QM on October 1, 2022. Prior to that date, at the creditor's discretion, it may choose to rely on the previous debt-to-income based definition of the general qualified mortgage, under which the ratio of the consumer's total monthly debt to total monthly income, at the time of consummation, does not exceed 43 percent in accordance with former Appendix Q.

[69] The most recent updates can be found at: https://www.consumerfinance.gov/policy-compliance/rulemaking/final-rules/truth-lending-regulation-z-annual-threshold-adjustments-card-act-hoepa/.

exceed 30 years; or points and fees that exceed the specified limits—generally, 3 percent of the total loan amount); and are eligible for purchase or guarantee Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac (or any limited-life regulatory entity succeeding the charter of either) operating under the conservatorship or receivership of the Federal Housing Finance Agency pursuant to section 1367 of the Federal Housing Enterprises Financial Safety and Soundness Act of 1992 (12 U.S.C. 4617(a)), and for which the creditor received the consumer's application prior to October 1, 2022.

Small Creditor Portfolio Loan Qualified Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)

1. Determine whether a creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a qualified mortgage as follows:

   a. The creditor satisfies the creditor requirements of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(B), and (C), which require that (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(i)(D)):

      i. During the preceding calendar year (or, if the application was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), the creditor and its affiliates together extended no more than 2,000 first-lien covered transactions that were sold, assigned or otherwise transferred to another person or subject at the time of consummation to a commitment to be acquired by another person; and

      ii. As of the end of the preceding calendar year (or if the application was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, as of either of the two preceding December 31sts), the creditor and its affiliates that regularly extended first-lien covered transactions, together had total assets of less than $2 billion (this threshold will adjust annually).

   NOTE: This category of qualified mortgages does not require a small creditor to operate in a rural or underserved area.

   b. The creditor makes a loan that meets the requirements for a qualified mortgage in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2), other than 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(v) and (vi), and NOTE: This means, among other things, that the loan does not have negative amortization, interest-only, or balloon payment features (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)); has a loan term of 30 years or less (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(ii)); points and fees are under certain thresholds (generally 3 percent) (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iii)); and the creditor underwrites the loan, taking into account the monthly payment for mortgage related obligations (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iv)).

   Further, the creditor considers and verifies at or before consummation: the consumer's current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan, in accordance with the general repayment ability standards; and the consumer's current debt obligations, alimony, and child support in accordance with the general repayment ability standards (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(B)):

c. Considers at or before consummation, the consumer's monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income and verifies the debt obligations and income used to determine that ratio in accordance with the repayment ability requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7), except that the calculation of the payment for determining the consumer's total monthly debt obligations in 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(i)(A) is determined in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iv) (based on the maximum interest rate in the first five years after the date the first periodic payment is due) instead of 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5) (fully indexed rate) (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(i)(B));

d. The loan was not subject to a forward commitment at consummation, except to a person that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(B) and (C) (i.e., small creditors) (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(i)(C)).

2. Determine whether the small creditor portfolio mortgage does not have a qualified mortgage status because it was subject to a forward commitment at consummation, or the creditor has transferred it in any circumstances other than where the transfer was:

   a. Three years or more after consummation;

   b. To a creditor that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(i)(D) of this section (i.e., small creditors under 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(B) and (C));

   c. Made pursuant to a capital restoration plan or other action under 12 U.S.C. 1831o, or to actions or instructions of a conservator, receiver, or bankruptcy trustee, or to orders by or agreements with a state or federal governmental agency with jurisdiction to examine the creditor; or

   d. Made pursuant to a merger of the creditor and another person or the acquisition of the creditor by another person, or the creditor's acquisition of another person (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(ii)).

NOTE: If a small creditor portfolio qualified mortgage has lost its qualified mortgage status, the creditor must have complied with the general ability-to-repay requirements under (12 CFR 1026.43(c)).

Seasoned Loan Qualified Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)

1. Determine whether a creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a qualified mortgage that, except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(iv) (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(i)):

   a. Is a first-lien covered transaction;

b. Is a fixed-rate mortgage as defined in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(7)(iii) with fully amortizing payments as defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(2);

NOTE: Under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(7)(iii), the term “fixed-rate mortgage” means a transaction secured by real property or a dwelling that is not an adjustable-rate mortgage or a step-rate mortgage. Thus, a covered transaction that is an adjustable-rate mortgage or step-rate mortgage is not eligible to become a seasoned qualified mortgage under 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7) (Comment 43(e)(7)(i)(A)-1).

Only loans for which the scheduled periodic payments do not require a balloon payment, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.18(s), to fully amortize the loan within the loan term can become seasoned qualified mortgages for purposes of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7). However, 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(i)(A) does not prohibit a qualifying change as defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(iv)(B) that is entered into during or after a temporary payment accommodation in connection with a disaster or pandemic-related national emergency, even if such a qualifying change involves a balloon payment or lengthened loan term (Comment 43(e)(7)(i)(A)-2).

c. Satisfies the requirements in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i) through (v) because:

   i. The loan does not have negative amortization, interest-only payments, or balloon payments, or a loan term that exceeds 30 years;

   ii. The loan’s points and fees do not exceed the specified limits—generally, 3 percent of the total loan amount;

   iii. The loan is underwritten in compliance with 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iv); and

   iv. The creditor:

      A. Considered the consumer’s monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income; current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan; and debt obligations, alimony, and child support; and

      B. Verified the consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan and the consumer's current debt obligations, alimony, and child support.

d. Is a covered transaction with no more than two delinquencies of 30 or more days and no delinquencies of 60 or more days at the end of the seasoning period (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(ii)). The “seasoning period” generally means a period of 36 months beginning on the date on which the first periodic payment is due after consummation of the covered transaction, with certain exceptions (see 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(iv)(C)(1) and (2)). For the definition of delinquency, see 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(iv)(A).

e. Satisfies the portfolio requirements in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(iii) because:

   i. It is not subject, at consummation, to a commitment to be acquired by another person, except for a sale, assignment, or transfer permitted by 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(iii)(B)(3); and

   ii. Legal title to the covered transaction is not sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to another person before the end of the seasoning period, except as identified in 1026.43(e)(7)(iii)(B)(1) through (3).

f. Is not a high-cost mortgage as defined in 12 CFR 1026.32(a).

Balloon-Payment Qualified Mortgages Made by Certain Small Creditors – 12 CFR 1026.43(f)

1. Determine whether a creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a qualified mortgage that provides for a balloon payment as follows:

   a. The creditor satisfies the creditor requirements of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A), (B), and (C), which require that (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(vi)):

      i. During the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), the creditor extended a first-lien covered transaction on a property that is located in a "rural" or "underserved" area;

      ii. During the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), the creditor, together with its affiliates, extended no more than 2,000 first-lien covered transactions (that were sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to another person or subject at the time of consummation to a commitment to be acquired by another person); and

      iii. As of the preceding December 31 (or if an application was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, as of either of the two preceding December 31sts), the creditor and its affiliates that regularly extended first-lien covered transactions, together had total assets of less than $2 billion (this threshold will adjust annually).

   b. The creditor makes a loan that meets the requirements for a qualified mortgage in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)(A) (substantially equal payments or ARMs or step-rate mortgages that do not increase the principal balance), (e)(2)(ii) (loan term 30 years or less), and (e)(2)(iii) (points and fees under certain thresholds);

c. The creditor determines that the consumer can make all of the scheduled payments under the loan and the monthly payments for all mortgage-related obligations (excluding the balloon payment) from the consumer's current or reasonably expected income or assets (other than the dwelling that secures the loan) (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(ii));

d. The creditor considers at or before consummation, the consumer's monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income and verifies the debt obligations and income used to determine that ratio in accordance with the repayment ability requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7), except that the calculation of the payment for determining the consumer's total monthly debt obligations in 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(i)(A) is based on the scheduled payments for the balloon-payment qualified mortgage in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(iv)(A), together with the consumer's monthly payments for all mortgage-related obligations other than the balloon payment (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(iii));

e. The legal obligation provides for:

   i. Scheduled payments that are substantially equal, calculated using an amortization period that does not exceed 30 years, with

   ii. An interest rate that does not increase over the term of the loan, and

   iii. A loan term of five years or longer (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(iv)(A)-(C));

f. The loan was not subject to a forward commitment at consummation, except to a person that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A), (B), and (C) (i.e., small creditors operating in rural or underserved counties).

2. Determine whether the balloon-payment qualified mortgage does not have qualified mortgage status because it was subject to a forward commitment at consummation, or the creditor has transferred it in any circumstances other than where the transfer was:

   a. Three years or more after consummation;

   b. To a creditor that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(vi) of this section (i.e., meets the definition of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A)-(C), establishing criteria for small creditors operating in rural or underserved counties);

   c. Made pursuant to a capital restoration plan or other action under 12 U.S.C. 1831o, or to actions or instructions of a conservator, receiver, or bankruptcy trustee, or to orders by or agreements with a state or federal governmental agency with jurisdiction to examine the creditor; or

   d. Due to a merger of the creditor with another person or the acquisition of the creditor by another person or another person by the creditor. (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(2)(i) and (iv)).

NOTE: If a balloon-payment qualified mortgage has lost its qualified mortgage status, the creditor must have complied with the general ability-to-repay requirements under (12 CFR 1026.43(c)).

Temporary Balloon-Payment Qualified Mortgages Made by Small Creditors – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(6)

1. Determine whether a creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a qualified mortgage that meets the requirements of the small creditor balloon-payment qualified mortgage definition in 12 CFR 1026.43(f) (above), except that the creditor requirement in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A) (operate in a rural or underserved area) does not apply.

   NOTE: This temporary qualified mortgage category applies only to loans for which the application was received before April 1, 2016.

Qualified Mortgage— Covered Institution Portfolio Loans–15 U.S.C. 1639c(b)(2)(F)[70]

1. Determine whether a creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 15 U.S.C. 1639c(a) by making a qualified mortgage as follows:

   a. The creditor is a covered institution under 15 U.S.C. 1639c(b)(2)(F), which requires that the creditor is an insured depository institution or insured credit union that, together with its affiliates, has less than $10 billion in total consolidated assets;

   b. The covered institution originates and retains the loan in portfolio;

   c. The loan has total points and fees that comply with applicable limits

   d. The loan does not contain terms under the legal obligation for:

      i. Prepayment penalties for paying all or part of the principal following consummation, pursuant to the limitations as set forth in 15 U.S.C. 1639c(c)(1) and (c)(3);

      ii. Negative amortization (periodic payments that will result in an increase in the principal balance);

      iii. Interest-only payments (one or more of the periodic payments may be applied solely to accrued interest and not to loan principal);

[70] This statutory provision is effective without any requirement to adopt regulations, and Regulation Z has not been amended to incorporate this provision as of the date of these procedures.

e. The creditor considers and documents the debt, income, and financial resources of the consumer.

NOTE: Consideration and documentation need not comply with former Appendix Q to Part 1026 (12 CFR Part 1026); multiple methods of documentation are permitted.

2. Determine whether a qualified mortgage originated pursuant to 15 U.S.C. 1639c(b)(2)(F) no longer retains its qualified mortgage status because the creditor has sold, assigned, or transferred the legal title in any circumstances other than where the transfer was:

    a. Due to bankruptcy or failure of the covered institution;

    b. To another covered institution, so long as that transferee institution retains the loan in portfolio;

    c. Made pursuant to a merger or acquisition to or by another person, so long as the loan is retained in portfolio by the transferee; or

    d. To a wholly owned subsidiary of the covered institution, so long as the loan is considered to be an asset of the covered institution for regulatory accounting purposes.

Prepayment Penalties – 12 CFR 1026.43(g)

1. Determine whether a mortgage is a covered transaction (which excludes HELOCs and timeshares but, for purposes of the prepayment penalty provisions, includes reverse mortgages, temporary loans, and loans made by certain community development, non-profit, and other lenders otherwise excluded from ability-to-repay provisions under 12 CFR 1026.43(a)). If yes, then the loan may not have a prepayment penalty unless:

    a. It is a qualified mortgage under (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2), (e)(4), (e)(5), (e)(6), or (f));

    b. The prepayment penalty is otherwise allowed by law;

    c. The mortgage has an APR that cannot increase after consummation; and

    d. The loan is not a higher-priced mortgage loan, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.35(a) (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(1)).

    NOTE: Covered transactions are generally prohibited from having prepayment penalties unless certain conditions are met.

    NOTE: A member of a federal credit union may repay a loan prior to maturity in whole or in part on any business day without penalty (12 U.S.C. 1757(5)(A)(viii) 12 CFR 701.21(c)(6));

2. Determine if the prepayment penalty improperly exceeds the following percentages of the outstanding balance prepaid:

a. 2 percent during the first two years following consummation;

b. 1 percent during the third year following consummation; and

c. 0 percent thereafter (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(2)).

3. Determine whether a creditor offering a consumer a mortgage with a prepayment penalty has also offered the consumer an alternative without a prepayment penalty and the alternative (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(3)):

   a. Has an APR that cannot increase after consummation and has the same type of interest rate (fixed or step rate) as the loan with a prepayment penalty;

   b. Has the same loan term as the loan with a prepayment penalty;

   c. Satisfies the periodic payment conditions under (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i));

   d. Satisfies the points and fees conditions under 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iii), based on the information known to the creditor at the time of the offer; and

   e. Is a loan for which the creditor has a good faith belief that the consumer likely qualifies, based on the information known to the creditor at the time the creditor offers the loan without a prepayment penalty (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(3)).

4. Determine whether a creditor offering a loan with a prepayment penalty through a mortgage broker:

   a. Presents the mortgage broker an alternative covered transaction without a prepayment penalty that satisfies the requirements of (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(3)); and

   b. Establishes by agreement that the mortgage broker must present to the consumer an alternative covered transaction without a prepayment penalty offered by the creditor that satisfies the requirements of (12 CFR 1026.43(g)); or another creditor, if the other creditor offers a lower interest rate or a lower total dollar amount of discount points and origination points or fees (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(4)).

5. Determine whether a creditor that is a loan originator, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(1), who presents a covered transaction with a prepayment penalty offered by another person to whom the loan would be assigned after consummation also presents the consumer an alternative covered transaction without a prepayment penalty that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(g), offered by the assignee; or another person offering a lower interest rate or a lower total dollar amount of origination discount points and points or fees (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(5)).

Evasion of Minimum Standards for Loans Secured by a Dwelling – 12 CFR 1026.43(h)

1. Determine whether the creditor has structured credit secured by a dwelling that does not meet the definition of open-end credit in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(20) as an open-end plan to evade the requirements for minimum standards for loans secured by a dwelling.

High-Cost Mortgages, Reverse Mortgages, and Higher-Priced Mortgages Loans – 12 CFR 1026.32, 1026.33, and 1026.35

1. Determine whether the financial institution originates consumer credit transactions subject to Subpart E of Regulation Z; specifically, high-cost mortgages 12 CFR 1026.32, reverse mortgages 12 CFR 1026.33, and “higher-priced mortgage loans” (12 CFR 1026.35).

2. In addition to reviewing high-cost mortgages, reverse mortgages, and higher-priced mortgage loans for compliance with requirements in other subparts of Regulation Z (for example, disclosure timing requirements under 12 CFR 1026.19(a)), review such mortgages to ensure the following:

    a. Required disclosures are provided to consumers in addition to, not in lieu of, the disclosures contained in other subparts of Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.31(a)).

    b. Disclosures are clear and conspicuous, in writing, and in a form that the consumer may keep (12 CFR 1026.31(b)).

    c. Disclosures are furnished at least three business days prior to consummation or account opening of a high-cost mortgage or a closed-end reverse mortgage transaction (or at least three business days prior to the first transaction under an open-end reverse mortgage) (12 CFR 1026.31(c)).

    NOTE: For a high-cost mortgage, the three business day waiting period requirement does not apply where a second offer of credit with a lower annual percentage rate is consummated by the consumer (15 U.S.C. 1639(b)(3)).

    d. Disclosures reflect the terms of the legal obligation between the parties (12 CFR 1026.31(d)).

    e. If the transaction involves more than one creditor, that only one creditor provided the disclosures. Where the obligation involves multiple consumers, ensure that the disclosures were provided to any consumer who is primarily liable on the obligation. Further, for rescindable transactions, verify that the disclosures were provided to each consumer who has the right to rescind (12 CFR 1026.31(e)).

f. The APR is accurately calculated and disclosed in accordance with the requirements and within the tolerances allowed in 12 CFR 1026.22 for closed-end credit transactions and 12 CFR 1026.6(a) for open-end credit plans (12 CFR 1026.31(g)).

3. For high-cost mortgages 12 CFR 1026.32, ensure that, in addition to other required disclosures, the creditor discloses the following at least three business days prior to consummation or account opening (See model disclosure at H-16 in Appendix H):

   a. Notice containing the prescribed language (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(1));

   b. The APR (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(2));

   NOTE: For a high-cost mortgage, the three business day waiting period requirement does not apply where a second offer of credit with a lower annual percentage rate is consummated by the consumer (15 U.S.C. 1639(b)(3)).

   c. Regular payment and balloon payment (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3));

   d. For a closed-end credit transaction, the amount of regular loan payment and the amount of any balloon payment. The disclosed regular payment should be treated as accurate if it is based on an amount borrowed that is deemed accurate under 12 CFR 1026.32(c)(5) (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3));

   e. For an open-end credit plan:

      i. An example showing the first minimum periodic payment for the draw period, the first minimum periodic payment for any repayment period, and the balance outstanding at the beginning of any repayment period (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(A));

   NOTE: The example must be based on the assumption that the consumer borrows the full credit line at account opening and does not obtain any additional extensions of credit, that the consumer makes only the minimum periodic payments during the draw period and any repayment period, and that the APR used to calculate the example payments remains the same during the draw period and any repayment period. Creditors must provide the minimum period payment example based on the APR, except that if an introductory APR applies, the creditor must use the rate that will apply to the plan after the introductory rate expires (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(A)-(C)).

      ii. If the credit contract provides for a balloon payment, a disclosure of that fact and an example showing the amount of the balloon payment based on the assumptions described in the note above (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(B));

      iii. A statement that the example payments show the first minimum periodic payments at the current annual percentage rate if the consumer borrows the maximum credit available when the account is opened and does not obtain any additional extensions of credit, or substantially similar statement (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(C));

iv. A statement that the example payments are not the consumer's actual payments and that the actual minimum periodic payments will depend on the amount the consumer borrows, the interest rate applicable to that period, and whether the consumer pays more than the required minimum periodic payment, or a substantially similar statement (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(D));

f. For variable-rate transactions, a statement that the interest rate and monthly payment may increase, and the amount of the single maximum monthly payment allowed under the contract based on the maximum rate required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.30 (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(4));

g. For a closed-end credit transaction, the total amount the consumer will borrow (the face amount of the note) and if this amount includes financed charges that are not prohibited under 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(10), that fact. This disclosure should be treated as accurate if within $100 of the actual amount borrowed. For an open-end credit plan, the credit limit for the plan when the account is opened (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(5));

4. For high-cost mortgages 12 CFR 1026.32, ensure that the creditor follows these additional rules concerning the disclosures required by (12 CFR 1026.32(c)):

   a. Determine if a new disclosure is required if, subsequent to providing the additional disclosure but prior to consummation or account opening, the creditor changes any terms that make the disclosures inaccurate. For example, if a consumer finances the payment of premiums or other charges as permitted under 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(10) and, as a result, the monthly payment differs from the payment previously disclosed, re-disclosure is required and a new three-day waiting period applies (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(1)(i)).

   b. Determine if a creditor provides new disclosures by telephone when the consumer initiates a change in terms, then prior to or at consummation or account opening the creditor must provide new written disclosures and both parties must sign a statement that these new disclosures were provided by telephone at least three days prior to consummation or account opening (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(1)(ii)).

   c. If a consumer waives the right to a three-day waiting period to meet a bona fide personal financial emergency, the consumer's waiver must be a dated written statement (not a pre-printed form) describing the emergency and bearing the signature of all the consumers entitled to the waiting period (a consumer can waive only after receiving the required disclosures and prior to consummation or account opening) (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(1)(iii)).

5. For high-cost mortgages 12 CFR 1026.32 determine that the creditor has not included any of the following loan terms:

a. A payment schedule that provides for a balloon payment (with exceptions) (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(i)-(iii)).

b. Negative amortization (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(2)).

c. Advance payments from the proceeds of more than two periodic payments (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(3)).

d. Increased interest rate after default (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(4)).

e. A rebate of interest, arising from a loan acceleration due to default, calculated by a method less favorable than the actuarial method (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(5)).

f. Prepayment penalty as defined in (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(6)).

g. A due-on-demand clause that permits the creditor to terminate the loan in advance of maturity and accelerate the balance, except in cases of fraud or material misrepresentation by the consumer, failure by the consumer to meet the repayment terms of the agreement for any outstanding balance, or action or inaction by the consumer that adversely affects the creditor's security interest in the loan (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(8)).

6. For high-cost mortgages under 12 CFR 1026.32, determine that the creditor is not engaged in the following acts and practices:

   a. Home improvement contracts – Paying a contractor under a home improvement contract from the proceeds of a mortgage unless certain conditions are met (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(1)).

   b. Notice to assignee – Selling or otherwise assigning a high-cost mortgage without furnishing the required statement to the purchaser or assignee (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(2)).

   c. Refinancing within one year of extending credit – Within one year of making a high-cost mortgage, a creditor may not refinance any high-cost mortgage to the same consumer into another high-cost mortgage that is not in the consumer's interest. This also applies to assignees that hold or service the high-cost mortgage. Commentary to 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(3) has examples applying the refinancing prohibition and addressing "consumer's interest" (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(3)).

   d. Extending high-cost mortgage credit without regard to the consumer's repayment ability (temporary or bridge loans with a term of 12 months or less are exempt from this requirement) (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)):

      i. For closed-end credit transactions that are high-cost mortgages, ensure the creditor is complying with the repayment ability requirements set forth in (12 CFR 1026.43).

ii. For open-end credit plans that are high-cost mortgages, ensure the creditor is not extending credit without regard to the consumer’s repayment ability as of account opening, including the consumer’s current and reasonably expected income, current obligations, assets other than collateral, and employment. A creditor must determine repayment ability for open-end high-cost mortgages by:

A. Verifying amounts of income or assets that it relies on to determine repayment ability, including expected income or assets, by the consumer’s Internal Revenue Service Form W-2, tax returns, payroll receipts, financial institution records, or other third-party documents that provide reasonably reliable evidence of the consumer’s income or assets.

B. Verifying the consumer’s current obligations, including any mortgage-related obligations that are required by another credit obligation undertaken prior to or at account opening and secured by the same dwelling that secures the high-cost mortgage.

iii. Alternatively, determine whether the creditor complies with the repayment ability requirement by:

A. Verifying repayment ability as described above;

B. Determining the consumer’s repayment ability by using the largest required minimum periodic payment based on the assumptions that:

1) The consumer borrows the full credit line at account opening with no additional extensions of credit;

2) The consumer makes only required minimum periodic payments during the draw period and any repayment period;

3) If the annual percentage rate can increase during the plan, the maximum percentage rate that is included in the contract; and

C. Assessing the consumer’s repayment ability, taking into account at least one of the following: the ratio of total debt obligations to income (including any mortgage-related obligations that are required by another credit obligation undertaken prior to or at account opening, and are secured by the same dwelling that secures the high-cost mortgage transaction, or the income the consumer will have after paying debt obligations (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)).

e. Pre-loan counseling – Determine whether the creditor extending a high-cost mortgage received written certification confirming that the consumer received approved home ownership counseling after receiving the initial Loan Estimate or, for open-end credit plans, the initial TILA disclosure required by 12 CFR 1026.40, or if neither of those disclosures are provided, after receiving the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.32(c) (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(5)). Requirements include:

i. Verify that home ownership counseling was not provided by an employee or affiliate of the creditor.

ii. If the creditor paid fees associated with homeownership counseling, confirm that the payment was not contingent upon the consumer obtaining the high-cost mortgage or receipt of a counseling certification.

iii. Verify that the counseling certificate contains the name of the consumer, date of counseling, name and address of the counselor, and statements required by (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(5)(iv)).

7. Late fees – For high-cost mortgages, confirm that late payment charges are disclosed in the terms of the loan contract or open-end credit agreement and that such fees do not exceed 4 percent of the amount past due. No such charge may be imposed more than once for a single late payment (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)).

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans: Appraisals[71]

1. For higher-priced mortgage loans secured by principal dwelling that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2), determine whether, before consummation, the creditor obtained a written appraisal from a state-licensed or certified appraiser that included a physical visit to the interior of the dwelling (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)).

   NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2) exempts several types of loans from the appraisal requirements, including qualified mortgages under (12 CFR 1026.43).

2. Determine whether the creditor is deemed to comply with the requirement by:

   a. Ordering that the appraiser performs the appraisal in conformity with the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice and Title XI of FIRREA and any implementing regulations (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(ii)(A)).

   b. Verifying through the National Registry that the appraiser who signed the appraiser's certification was a certified or licensed appraiser in the state in which the appraised property is located as of the date the appraiser signed the appraiser's certification (12 CFR 1026.35(c) (3)(ii)(B)).

   c. Confirming that the appraisal includes elements set forth in Appendix N (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(ii)(3)(C)).

   d. Having no actual knowledge contrary to the facts or certifications contained in the written appraisal.

[71] The higher-priced mortgage loans appraisal requirement was adopted pursuant to an interagency rulemaking conducted by the Board, the CFPB, the FDIC, FHFA, NCUA and OCC. The Board codified the rule at 12 CFR 226.43, and the OCC codified the rule at 12 CFR Part 34. There is no substantive difference among these three sets of rules.

3. Assess whether the creditor exercised reasonable diligence in determining if a second interior appraisal was necessary. A creditor can exercise reasonable diligence by basing its determination on written source documents such as:

    a. A copy of the recorded deed from the seller,

    b. A copy of a property tax bill,

    c. A copy of any owner's title insurance policy obtained by the seller,

    d. A copy of the RESPA settlement statement from the seller's acquisition,

    e. A property sales history report or title report from a third-party reporting service,

    f. Sales price data recorded in multiple listing services,

    g. Tax assessment records or transfer tax records obtained from local governments,

    h. A written appraisal performed in compliance with 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(i) for the same transaction, i. A copy of a title commitment report detailing the seller's ownership of the property, and

    j. A property abstract 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(i) and (vi); See Appendix O).

4. For higher-priced mortgage loans that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2) or 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(vii), determine whether an additional written interior appraisal from a state certified or licensed appraiser was both required and performed because the seller acquired the property 180 days or less before the consumer's purchase agreement, and the sales price increased:

    a. Greater than 10 percent over the previous purchase price, if acquired 90 or fewer days prior to the consumer's purchase agreement; or (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(i)(A)) or

    b. Greater than 20 percent over the previous purchase price, if acquired 91 to 180 days prior to the consumer's purchase agreement (12 CFR 1026.35(C)(4)(i)(B)).

    NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(vii) provides for eight exemptions from the second appraisal requirement, such as for extensions of credit to finance the acquisition of property from a local, state, or federal government agency.

5. For higher-priced mortgage loans (that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2) or 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(vii) where the creditor is required to obtain a second interior appraisal:

    a. Confirm that the creditor obtained an appraisal from a different state certified or licensed appraiser than the one who conducted the first appraisal (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(ii)).

b. Confirm that the creditor charged the consumer for only one of the appraisals (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(v)).

NOTE: Reviewing the Closing Disclosure or HUD-1 may assist in identifying whether a second appraisal fee was charged to the consumer.

c. For higher-priced mortgage loans that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2), determine that the creditor provided a written disclosure in a timely manner informing consumers that an appraisal may be necessary and that there is a cost associated with the appraisal, as specified in (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(5)).

   i. Disclosures must be provided to consumers within three business days after receipt of an application for a higher-priced mortgage loan. A creditor can meet this requirement by placing the disclosure in the mail within three business days after receipt of the application for a higher-priced mortgage loan (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(5)(ii)).

   ii. If the loan becomes a higher-priced mortgage loan during the application process, but after initial receipt of the application, a creditor has three business days from the time the loan became a higher priced mortgage loan to provide the necessary disclosure (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(5)(ii)).

d. Confirm that the creditor provided consumers with a free copy of any written appraisal performed in connection with a higher-priced mortgage loan that is not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2) (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(6)).

   i. Determine whether the creditor is providing consumers with a copy of their appraisal(s) no later than three business days prior to consummation of the loan (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(6)(ii)(A)); or

   ii. If the loan is not consummated, determine whether the creditor is providing consumers with a copy of the appraisal(s) within 30 days after determining that the loan will not be consummated (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(6)(ii)(B)).

   NOTE: The creditor can satisfy this disclosure requirement by providing the disclosure required in Regulation B, 12 CFR 1002.14(a)(2), related to a free copy of the appraisal (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(5)). However, unlike the waiver provision in Regulation B, a consumer may not waive the timing requirement to receive a copy of the appraisal under (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(6)(i)). In addition, the creditor must use the earliest applicable timing requirement to comply with each regulation's appraisal/valuation disclosure requirements.

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans: Escrow Accounts

1. For most higher-priced mortgage loans secured by a first lien on a principal dwelling escrow accounts must be established before consummation for property taxes and premiums for mortgage-related insurance required by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(1)).

2. For higher-priced mortgage loans where the creditor did not establish an escrow account, determine whether the transaction or the creditor would fall into an exemption (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)).

   a. Is the transaction secured by shares in a cooperative (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(i)(A));

   b. Is the transaction to finance the initial construction of the dwelling (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(i)(B));

   c. Is the transaction a temporary or "bridge" loan with a term less than 12 months (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(i)(C));

   d. Is the transaction a reverse mortgage transaction under 12 CFR 1026.33 (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(i)(D));

   NOTE: There is a limited exemption for transactions secured by a dwelling in a condominium, planned unit development, or other "common interest community" where a dwelling ownership requires participation in a governing association that is obligated to maintain a master insurance policy insuring all dwellings. In these common interest communities, creditors must maintain an escrow account for the payment of taxes only (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(ii)).

   e. Does the creditor, or loan originator, qualify for an exemption under (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A)-(D)):

      i. During the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), it extended a covered transaction (defined in section 1026.43(b)(1)) secured by a first lien on a property located in an area that meets the definition of "rural" or "underserved" as laid out in (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv));

      ii. Together with any affiliates, it did not extend more than 2,000 covered transactions (secured by first liens, that were sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to another person or subject at the time of consummation to a commitment to be acquired by another person) in the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years);

      iii. It and its affiliates that regularly extended covered transactions together had less than the annually adjusted $2 billion threshold in total assets as of the preceding

December 31, or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, of either of the two proceeding December 31sts ; and

iv. Neither the creditor nor its affiliate maintains an escrow account of the type described in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(1) for any extension of consumer credit secured by real property or a dwelling that the creditor or its affiliate currently services, other than:

A. Escrow accounts established for first-lien higher-priced mortgage loans on or after April 1, 2010, and before May 1, 2016; or

B. Escrow accounts established after consummation as an accommodation to distressed consumers to assist such consumers in avoiding default or foreclosure.

NOTE: The asset threshold will adjust automatically each year, based on the year-to-year change in the average of the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers, not seasonally adjusted, for each 12-month period ending in November, with rounding to the nearest million dollars (See Comment 35(b)(2)(iii)-1.iii for the current threshold).

3. Evasion of requirements: Ensure that the creditor does not structure a higher-priced mortgage loan as an open-end plan ("spurious open-end credit") to evade the requirements of Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.35(d)).

Prohibited Payments to Loan Originators – 12 CFR 1026.36(d) and (e)

1. Determine that, in connection with a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling,[72] no loan originator receives, and no person pays to a loan originator, directly or indirectly, compensation[73] that is based on:

   NOTE: The term "loan originator" means, a person who, in expectation of direct or indirect compensation or other monetary gain or for direct or indirect compensation or other monetary gain: takes an application, offers, arranges, assists a consumer in obtaining or applying to obtain, negotiates, or otherwise obtains or makes an extension of consumer credit for another person; or through advertising or other means of communication represents to the public that such person can or will perform any of these activities. The term "loan originator" includes an employee, agent, or contractor of the creditor or loan originator organization if the employee, agent, or contractor meets this definition. The term "loan originator" also includes a creditor that engages in loan origination activities if the creditor does not finance the transaction at consummation out of the creditor's own resources, including by drawing on a bona fide warehouse line of credit or out of deposits held by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.36(a)(1)).

   NOTES:

   - A person is not a loan originator who does not take a consumer credit application or offer or negotiate credit terms available from a creditor to that consumer based on the consumer's financial characteristics, but who performs purely administrative or clerical tasks on behalf of a person who does engage in such activities. For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36, "credit terms" include rates, fees or other costs, and a consumer's financial characteristics include any factors that may influence a credit decision, such as debts, income, assets, or credit history (12 CFR 1026.36(a)(6)).

   - A retailer of manufactured or modular homes, or an employee of such a retailer, who does not receive compensation or gain for engaging in loan originator activities in excess of any compensation or gain received in a comparable cash transaction, and who does not directly negotiate with the consumer or lender on credit terms, is not a mortgage originator if such retailer or employee (as applicable) discloses to the consumer in writing, any corporate affiliation with any creditor. Where the retailer has a corporate affiliation with any creditor, at least one unaffiliated creditor must also be disclosed (15 U.S.C. 1602(dd)(2)(C)(ii)).

[72] 12 CFR 1026.36(d) and (e) do not apply to a home-equity line of credit subject to 12 CFR 1026.40 or to a loan that is secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan described in 11 U.S.C. 101(53D) (12 CFR 1026.36(b)).

[73] Compensation includes salaries, commissions, and any financial or similar incentive, such as an annual or periodic bonus or awards of merchandise, services, trips, or similar prizes. See 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(3) and Comment 36(a)-5.

a. A term of a transaction, the terms of multiple transactions by an individual loan originator, or the terms of multiple transactions by multiple individual loan originators; (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(i)) or

- For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1) only, a "term of a transaction" is any right or obligation of the parties to a credit transaction. The amount of credit extended is not a term of a transaction or a proxy for a term of a transaction, provided that compensation received by or paid to a loan originator, directly or indirectly, is based on a fixed percentage of the amount of credit extended; however, such compensation may be subject to a minimum or maximum dollar amount (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(ii)).

b. A proxy[74] for a term of a transaction (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(i)).

2. Determine that a loan originator that receives a contribution to a defined contribution, tax-advantaged plan that meets the applicable requirements of the Internal Revenue Code does not receive a contribution that is directly or indirectly based on the terms of the individual loan originator's transactions (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(iii)).

3. Determine whether an individual loan originator receives compensation pursuant to a non-deferred, profits-based compensation plan only if:

   a. The compensation paid to an individual loan originator is not directly or indirectly based on the terms of that individual loan originator's transactions that are subject to (12 CFR 1026.36(d)); and

   b. At least one of the following conditions is satisfied:

      i. The compensation paid to an individual loan originator does not, in the aggregate, exceed 10 percent of the individual loan originator's total compensation corresponding to the time period for which the compensation under the non-deferred profits-based compensation plan is paid; or

      ii. The individual loan originator was a loan originator for ten or fewer transactions consummated during the 12-month period preceding the date of the compensation determination (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(iv)).

Prohibition on Dual Compensation

1. If any loan originator receives compensation directly from a consumer in a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling, determine that (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)):

   a. No loan originator receives compensation, directly or indirectly, from any person other than the consumer in connection with the transaction 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)(i)(A)(1) except that a loan originator organization may receive [74] A factor that is not itself a term of a transaction is a proxy for a term of the transaction if the factor consistently varies with that term over a significant number of transactions, and the loan originator has the ability, directly or indirectly, to add, drop, or change the factor in originating the transaction (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(i)).

compensation from a consumer and pay compensation to its individual loan originator; and

b. No person who knows or has reason to know of the consumer-paid compensation to the loan originator (other than the consumer) pays any compensation to a loan originator, directly or indirectly, in connection with the transaction (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)(i)(A)(2)).

NOTE: Loan originator organizations are permitted to compensate their employees if the organization receives compensation directly from a consumer, subject to the prohibition on payments to loan originators in (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)).

Prohibition on Steering

1. Determine that, in connection with a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling, a loan originator does not direct or "steer" a consumer to consummate a transaction based on the fact that the originator will receive greater compensation from the creditor in that transaction than in other transactions the originator offered or could have offered to the consumer, unless the consummated transaction is in the consumer's interest (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(1)).

   NOTE: The rule provides a safe harbor to facilitate compliance with the prohibition on steering in (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(1)). The loan originator is deemed to comply with the anti-steering prohibition if the consumer is presented with loan options that meet all of the following conditions for each type of transaction in which the consumer expressed an interest:[75]

   a. The loan originator obtains loan options from a significant number of the creditors with which the originator regularly does business and, for each type of transaction in which the consumer expressed an interest, presents the consumer with loan options that include (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(i)):

      i. The loan with the lowest interest rate (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(i)(A));

      ii. The loan with the lowest interest rate without negative amortization, a prepayment penalty, interest-only payments, a balloon payment in the first seven years of the life of the loan, a demand feature, shared equity, or shared appreciation; or, in the case of a reverse mortgage, a loan without a prepayment penalty, or shared equity or shared appreciation (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(i)(B)); and

      iii. The loan with the lowest total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees (or, if two or more loans have the same total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees, the loan with

[75] The term ''type of transaction'' refers to whether: (i) A loan has an APR that cannot increase after consummation; (ii) A loan has an APR that may increase after consummation; or (iii) A loan is a reverse mortgage. (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(2)) the lowest interest rate that has the lowest total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees) (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(i)(C)).

b. The loan originator has a good faith belief that the options (presented to the consumer that are set forth, above) are loans for which the consumer likely qualifies (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(ii)).

c. For each type of transaction, if the originator presents to the consumer more than three loans, the originator highlights the loans that satisfy options 1.i, 1.ii, and 1.iii above (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(iii)).

NOTE: If the requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1026.36(e) are met, the loan originator can, without steering, present fewer than three loans (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(4)).

Loan Originator Qualifications[76] and Documentation – 12 CFR 1026.36(f) and (g)

1. Determine whether the loan originator organization complies with all applicable state law requirements for legal existence and foreign qualification (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(1)).

2. Determine whether the loan originator organization ensures that individual loan originators who work for it (e.g., employees, under a brokerage agreement) are licensed or registered (or excluded from those requirements because the individual is authorized to act with temporary authority pursuant to 12 U.S.C. 5117,as required by the Secure and Fair Enforcement for Mortgage Licensing Act of 2008 (SAFE Act), its implementing regulations (12 CFR 1007 and 1008), and any state SAFE Act law (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(2)).

NOTE: The SAFE Act provides certain loan originators with temporary authority to act as loan originators, while applying for a state-loan originator license (12 U.S.C. 5117). If an individual loan originator may act as a loan originator with temporary authority under 12 U.S.C. 5117, the loan originator organization is not required to comply with the screening and training requirements described in 12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3).[77]

3. For individual loan originators who are its employees and who are not required to be licensed and are not licensed as a loan originator under 12 CFR 1008.103 or state SAFE Act implementing law, determine whether the loan originator organization, prior to allowing the individual to act as a loan originator:

[76] For the purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(f) and (g), all creditors are loan originators.

[77] Truth in Lending (Regulation Z); Screening and Training Requirements for Mortgage Loan Originators with Temporary Authority, 84 Fed. Reg. 63791 (Nov. 19, 2019).

a. Obtained a copy of the individual's background check through the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry (NMLSR) or a criminal background check from a law enforcement agency or commercial service (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(A));

b. Obtained a credit report from a consumer reporting agency in compliance with FCRA Section 604(b) (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(B));

c. Obtained information from the NMLSR, or from the individual as applicable, about administrative, civil, or criminal findings against the individual (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(C));

d. Determined on the basis of obtained information or any other information reasonably available that the individual has not been convicted of, plead guilty or nolo contendere to a felony in a domestic or military court during the preceding seven year period (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(ii)(A)(1));

e. Determined on the basis of obtained information or any other information reasonably available that the individual has not been convicted of, plead guilty or nolo contendere to a felony involving an act of fraud, dishonesty, breach of trust, or money laundering, at any time (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(ii)(A)(1));

f. Confirmed that if the individual has a felony conviction and is employed as an individual loan originator, that the FDIC (or FRB, as applicable), NCUA, or Farm Credit Administration has provided consent to employ the individual under their own statutory authorities (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(ii)(A)(2)(iii));

g. Confirmed that the individual demonstrated financial responsibility, character, and general fitness such as to warrant a determination that the individual loan originator will operate honestly, fairly, and efficiently (12 CFR 1026(f)(3)(ii)(B));

h. Provides periodic training covering federal and state law requirements that apply to the individual loan originator's loan origination activities (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(iii)).

NOTE: Paragraph (c) only applies to an individual loan originator hired on after January 1, 2014 (or an individual loan originator the loan originator organization hired before this date but for whom there were no applicable statutory or regulatory background standards in effect at the time of hire or used to screen the individual) or an individual loan originator regardless of when hired who, based on reliable information known to the loan originator organization, likely does not meet the qualification standards.

4. Verify that the loan originator organization and individual loan originator include their names and NMLSR IDs on all required loan documentation, including (12 CFR 1026.36(g)):

   a. The credit application,

   b. The disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f),

c. The note or loan contract, and

d. The security instrument.

Policies and Procedures for Depository Institutions to Ensure and Monitor Compliance – 12 CFR 1026.36(j)

1. Verify that loan originator organizations that are depositories (including credit unions) have established and maintain written policies and procedures reasonably designed (i.e., appropriate to the nature, size, complexity and scope of the mortgage lending activities of the depository and its subsidiaries) to ensure that the depository, its subsidiaries and their collective employees comply with the loan originator requirements of 12 CFR 1026.36(d)-(g) (12 CFR 1026.36(j)).

Prohibition on Mandatory Arbitration Clauses and Waiver of Certain Consumer Rights – 12 CFR 1026.36(h)

1. Verify that the contract or other agreement for a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by the consumer's principal dwelling) does not include terms that require arbitration or any other non-judicial procedure to resolve any controversy or settle any claims arising out of the transaction (12 CFR 1026.36(h)(1)).

2. Verify that the contract or other agreement relating to a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by the consumer's principal dwelling) has not been applied or interpreted to bar a consumer from bringing a claim in court pursuant to any provision of law for damages or other relief in connection with any alleged violation of any federal law (12 CFR 1026.36(h)(2)).

Prohibition on Financing Credit Insurance – 12 CFR 1026.36(i)

1. Determine that the creditor does not finance, directly or indirectly, premiums or fees for credit insurance (including credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment, or credit property insurance, or any other accident, loss-of-income, life, or health insurance or direct or indirect payment for debt cancellation/suspension) on the transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by a principal dwelling) (12 CFR 1026.36(i)).

   NOTE: Credit unemployment insurance is not subject to this prohibition where the premiums are reasonable, the creditor receives no direct or indirect compensation in connection with the premiums, and the premiums are paid under a separate insurance contract and are not paid to an affiliate of the creditor. Additionally, this prohibition does not apply to credit insurance that is paid in full monthly.

Negative Amortization Counseling – 12 CFR 1026.36(k)

1. Verify that the creditor received documentation that first-time borrowers received pre-loan counseling from a HUD certified or approved counselor on each negative amortizing mortgage loan to prior to originating the loan (12 CFR 1026.36(k)).

   NOTE: This restriction does not apply to reverse mortgages covered under 12 CFR 1026.33 or transactions secured by a timeshare plan. For more information, please see the commentary to (12 CFR 1026.36(k)).

Servicing Requirements for Certain Home Mortgages Subject to Subpart E

1. Determine if the servicer is a small servicer under (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)). The following steps two through five regarding periodic statements for closed-end loans secured by a dwelling are not applicable if the servicer is a small servicer.

   NOTE: A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for all of which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in (12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5)).

2. Determine whether the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides consumers with reasonably prompt periodic statements for closed-end loans secured by a dwelling (12 CFR 1026.41).

   NOTES:

   - "Consumer" includes a confirmed successor in interest as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(27) (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11)). If there is a confirmed successor in interest, determine whether the exemption from the requirement to provide a periodic statement to the confirmed successor in interest applies as specified in (12 CFR 1026.41(g)).

- This requirement does not apply to reverse mortgages under 12 CFR 1026.33; timeshare plans; fixed-rate loans where the servicer currently provides consumers with coupon books that contain account payment, fees, and contact information specified under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(3); small servicers under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4); or, as specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5), for mortgages while the consumer is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the US Code. Servicers, however, must provide modified periodic statements and coupon books to certain consumers in bankruptcy as specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(f) (see questions below). Servicers are exempt from providing periodic statements for charged-off mortgage loans if the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6) are met (see questions below).
- When examining a creditor or assignee that continues to own the loan, or a servicer, if the entity states that another entity has the obligation to provide the disclosures, examiners should determine whether the examined entity takes steps to ensure that the other party (a creditor, assignee, or servicer) is complying with the obligation to provide the disclosures.

3. Verify that the periodic statements contain:

   a. The payment due date; the amount of any late payment fee, and the date on which that fee will be imposed; and the amount due (the latter shown more prominently than other disclosures on the page and, if the transaction has multiple payment options, the amount due under each of the payment options), grouped together in close proximity to each other and located at the top of the first page (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(1));

      i. If the balance of a mortgage loan was accelerated but the servicer was willing to accept a lesser amount to reinstate the loan, verify that the amount due on the periodic statement identified only the lesser amount that the servicer would have accepted to reinstate the loan (Comment 41(d)(1)-1);

      ii. If the consumer had agreed to a temporary loss mitigation program, verify that the amount due identified either the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program or the amount due according to the loan contract (Comment 41(d)(1)-2).

      iii. If the loan contract had been permanently modified, verify that the amount due identified only the amount due under the modified loan contract (Comment 41(d)(1)-3).

   NOTE: Servicers may modify the sample forms for periodic statements provided in Appendix H, Sample forms H-30(A) through H-30(F), to remove language that could suggest liability under the mortgage loan agreement if such language is not applicable. For example, in the case of a confirmed successor in interest who has not assumed the mortgage loan obligation under State law and is not otherwise liable on the mortgage loan obligation, a servicer may modify the forms to:

- Use "this mortgage" or "the mortgage" instead of "your mortgage".
- Use "The payments on this mortgage are late" instead of "You are late on your mortgage payments".
- Use "This is the amount needed to bring the loan current" instead of "You must pay this amount to bring your loan current".

(Comment 41(c)-5)

b. The monthly payment amount, including a breakdown of how it will be applied to principal, interest, and escrow, and if a mortgage loan has multiple payment options along with information regarding how each payment will affect the principal, a breakdown of each of the payment options; the total sum of any fees or charges imposed since the last statement; and any payment amount past due, grouped together in close proximity to each other and located at the top of the first page (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(2)).

i. If the balance of a mortgage loan was accelerated but the servicer was willing to accept a lesser amount to reinstate the loan, verify that the explanation of amount due on the periodic statement listed both the reinstatement amount and the accelerated amount. Verify that the periodic statement also included an explanation that the reinstatement amount would be accepted through the "as of [date]", as applicable along with any special instructions for submitting the payment. The explanation should be on the front page of the statement or, alternatively, may be included on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement (Comment 41(d)(2)-1).

- NOTE: The servicer is not required to list the monthly payment amount that would otherwise be required under 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(2)(i) (Comment 41(d)(2)-1).

ii. If the consumer had agreed to a temporary loss mitigation program and the amount due identified the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program, verify that the explanation of amount due included both the amount due according to the loan contract and the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program. Also verify that the statement included an explanation that the amount due was being disclosed as a different amount because of the temporary loss mitigation program. The explanation should be on the front page of the statement or, alternatively, may be included on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement or in a separate letter (Comment 41(d)(2)-2).

c. The total of all payments received since the last statement, including a breakdown showing how the payment was applied to principal, interests, escrow, fees, and charges, and any amount sent to a suspense or unapplied funds account grouped together in close proximity to each other and located at the top of the first page (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(3)(i));

d. The total of all payments received for the calendar year, including a breakdown of how those payments were applied to principal, interest, escrow, fees. and charges and any amount currently held in a suspense or unapplied funds account, grouped together in close proximity to each other and located at the top of the first page (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(3)(ii));

e. A list of transaction activity that occurred since the last statement, including the date, amount, and brief description of the transaction. Transaction activity includes any activity that caused a credit or debit to the amount currently due (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(4));

f. For statements where a partial payment was received and the creditor or servicer held the partial payment in a suspense or unapplied funds account, information explaining what must be done for the funds to be applied to the balance, located on the front page or a separate page of the statement or in a separate letter (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(5));

g. A toll-free number, and if applicable, an email address, that consumers may use to obtain account information located on the front page (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(6));

h. The amount of the outstanding principal balance (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(i));

i. The current interest rate for the mortgage (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(ii));

j. The date that the interest may change (if applicable) (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(iii));

k. Information regarding whether the loan contains a prepayment penalty (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(iv));

l. The web address to the CFPB's or HUD's list of homeownership counselors or counseling organizations and HUD's toll-free telephone number to obtain contact information for counselors or counseling organizations (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(v));

m. For consumers more than 45 days delinquent, determine that the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides on the first page, on a separate page of the statement, or in a separate letter:

   i. The length of the consumer's delinquency (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(i));

   ii. A notification of the possible risks, such as foreclosure, and expenses that may occur if the consumer does not become current (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(ii));

iii. An account history showing the shorter of the previous six months or from the time the account was last current, the amount of payment that is past due from each billing cycle (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(iii));

NOTE: If any payment was accepted as a full payment, the creditor or servicer must show that the payment was credited to the consumer's account and the date that the payment was credited.

iv. A notice indicating any loss mitigation program that the consumer has agreed to (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(iv));

v. A notice of whether the servicer has initiated foreclosure proceedings (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(v));

vi. The total payment amount needed to bring the account current (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(vi)); and

vii. A reference to homeownership counseling information required under 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(v) (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(vii)).

4. Unless the servicer is otherwise exempt as noted below, while any consumer on a mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the United States Code, or if such consumer had discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan pursuant Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13, determine whether the servicer provided a modified periodic statement or coupon book in compliance with (12 CFR 1026.41(f)). Specifically, the periodic statement:

   a. May omit the information set forth in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(1)(ii) and (d)(8)(i), (ii), and (v). The requirement in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(1)(iii) of this section that the amount due must be shown more prominently than other disclosures on the page shall not apply (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(1));

   b. Must include the following bankruptcy notices:

      i. A statement identifying the consumer's status as a debtor in bankruptcy or the discharged status of the mortgage loan; and

      ii. A statement that the periodic statement is for informational purposes only (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(2));

   c. For Chapter 12 and Chapter 13 consumers:

      i. May omit (in addition to information listed in 12 CFR 1026.41(f)(1)) the information in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(iii), (iv), (vi), and (vii) (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(i));

ii. May limit the amount due information set forth in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(1) to the date and amount of the post-petition payments due and any post-petition fees and charges imposed by the servicer (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(ii));

iii. May limit the explanation of amount due information set forth in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(2) to:

A. The monthly post-petition payment amount, including a breakdown showing how much, if any, would be applied to principal, interest, and escrow;

B. The total sum of any post-petition fees or charges imposed since the last statement; and

C. Any post-petition payment amount past due (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(iii)).

iv. Must include all payments that the servicer received since the last statement, including all post-petition and pre-petition payments, payments of post-petition fees and charges, and all post-petition fees and charges that the servicer imposed since the last statement. The brief description of the activity need not identify the source of any payments (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(iv));

v. Must disclose the following pre-petition arrearage information, if applicable, grouped in close proximity to each other and located on the first page of the statement or on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement or in a separate letter:

A. The total of all pre-petition payments received since the last statement;

B. The total of all pre-petition payments received since the beginning of the consumer's pre-petition arrearage; and

C. The current balance of the consumer's pre-petition arrearage (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(v)).

vi. Must include, as applicable:

A. A statement that the amount due includes only post-petition payments and does not include other payments that may be due under the terms of the consumer's bankruptcy plan;

B. If the consumer's bankruptcy plan requires the consumer to make the post-petition mortgage payments directly to a bankruptcy trustee, a statement that the consumer should send the payment to the trustee and not to the servicer;

C. A statement that the information disclosed on the periodic statement may not include payments the consumer has made to the trustee and may not be consistent with the trustee's records;

D. A statement that encourages the consumer to contact the consumer's attorney or the trustee with questions regarding the application of payments; and

E. If the consumer is more than 45 days delinquent on post-petition payments, a statement that the servicer has not received all the payments that became due since the consumer filed for bankruptcy (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(vi)).

NOTES:

- Multiple obligors. The servicer may provide the modified statement to any or all of the primary obligors, even if a primary obligor to whom the servicer provides the modified statement is not a debtor in bankruptcy (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(4)).
- Coupon books. A servicer that provides a coupon book instead of a periodic statement must include in the coupon book (or on a separate page enclosed with the coupon book) the disclosures set forth in 12 CFR 1026.41(f)(2) and (f)(3)(vi), as applicable (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(5)).
- Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5)(i), a servicer is exempt from providing a periodic statement to certain consumers in bankruptcy if:
  - Any consumer on the mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the United States Code or has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan pursuant to Chapter 7 (11 U.S.C. 727), Chapter 11 (11 U.S.C. 1141), Chapter 12 (11 U.S.C. 1228), or Chapter 12 (11 U.S.C. 1328); and
  - With regard to any consumer on the mortgage loan:
    - The consumer requests in writing that the servicer cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book;
    - The consumer's bankruptcy plan provides that the consumer will surrender the dwelling securing the mortgage loan, provides for the avoidance of the lien securing the mortgage loan, or otherwise does not provide for, as applicable, the payment of pre-bankruptcy arrearage or the maintenance of payments due under the mortgage loan;
    - A court enters an order in the bankruptcy case providing for the avoidance of the lien securing the mortgage loan, lifting the automatic stay pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 362 with regard to the dwelling securing the mortgage loan, or requiring the servicer to cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book; or
    - The consumer files with the court overseeing the bankruptcy case a statement of intention pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 521(a) identifying an intent to surrender the dwelling securing the mortgage loan and a consumer has not made any partial or periodic payment on the mortgage loan after the commencement of the consumer's bankruptcy case.

A servicer ceases to qualify for the exemption pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5)(i) with respect to a mortgage loan if the consumer reaffirms personal liability for the loan or any consumer on the loan requests in writing that the servicer provide a periodic statement or coupon book, unless a court enters an order in the bankruptcy case requiring the servicer to cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5)(ii)).

5. If the servicer has ceased providing periodic statements for charged-off mortgage loans, determine whether the following exemption requirements of 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(i) are met:

    a. The servicer charged off the loan in accordance with loan-loss provisions and has not charged any additional fees or interest on the account; and

    b. The servicer provided, within 30 days of charge-off or the most recent periodic statement, a periodic statement, clearly and conspicuously labeled “Suspension of Statements & Notice of Charge Off—Retain This Copy for Your Records.” The periodic statement clearly and conspicuously explained the following (as applicable):

        i. The mortgage loan was charged off and the servicer will not charge any additional fees or interest on the account;

        ii. The servicer will no longer provide the consumer a periodic statement for each billing cycle;

        iii. The lien on the property remains in place and the consumer remains liable for the mortgage loan obligation and any obligations arising from or related to the property, which may include property taxes;

        iv. The consumer may be required to pay the balance on the account in the future, for example, upon sale of the property;

        v. The balance on the account is not being canceled or forgiven; and

        vi. The loan may be purchased, assigned, or transferred.

NOTE:

If a servicer fails at any time to treat a mortgage loan that is exempt under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(i) as charged off or charges any additional fees or interest on the account, the servicer must resume providing a periodic statement. (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(ii)(A)). A servicer may not retroactively assess fees or interest on the account for the period of time during which the exemption in paragraph 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(i) applied (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(ii)(B)).

6. For high-cost mortgages, ensure the creditor or servicer does not charge any fee to modify, renew, extend, or amend a high-cost mortgage, or to defer any payment due under the terms of the mortgage (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(7)).
7. For high-cost mortgages, determine whether the creditor or servicer charged a late payment greater than four percent of the payment past due (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)(i)).
8. For high-cost mortgages, determine that the creditor or servicer did not impose any late fee or delinquency charge in connection with a payment, when the only delinquency was attributable to late fees or delinquency charges assessed on an earlier payment, and the payment is otherwise a full payment for the applicable period and is paid on its due date or within any applicable grace period (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)(iii)).
9. For high-cost mortgages, determine whether the creditor or servicer assessed any fees for providing consumers with a payoff statement related to the high-cost mortgage (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(9)).

   NOTE: Creditors or servicers are permitted to assess a processing fee if the payoff statement is provided by courier or by fax, the fee is comparable to fees for similar services provided for non-high-cost mortgages, and the creditor or servicer discloses that payoff statements are available by an alternative method free of charge. Additionally, within a calendar year, if the creditor or servicer has already provided four payoff statements in compliance with 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(9), it may assess fees for additional statements.
10. For high-cost mortgages, determine that the creditor or servicer is providing payoff statements within five business days after receiving a request from the consumer (or consumer's authorized representative) (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(9)(v)).
11. For higher-priced mortgage loans that are subject to the escrow account requirements, ensure the creditor or servicer maintains the consumer's escrow account for a minimum of five years after consummation of the loan, unless (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3)):
    a. The creditor or servicer terminated the escrow account upon termination of the underlying debt obligation (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3)(i)(A)); or
    b. The creditor or servicer terminated the escrow account upon request from the consumer, no earlier than five years after consummation of the loan (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3)(i)(B)).

    NOTE: Upon request from the consumer, the creditor or servicer must verify that the unpaid principal balance of the higher-priced mortgage loan is less than 80 percent of the original value of the property securing the loan and that the consumer is not delinquent or in default on the loan, prior to cancelling the escrow account (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3)(ii)).
12. For consumer credit transactions secured by a consumer's principal dwelling, determine that the creditor or servicer credited consumer's periodic payments as of the date the payment was received or ensured that any delay in crediting did not result in any charge to the consumer or in the reporting of any negative information to a consumer reporting agency 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)-(9) and (1026.36(c)(1)(i)).

13. For consumers performing under a permanent loan modification of a consumer credit transaction secured by a consumer's principal dwelling, determine whether the creditor or servicer credited the payments according to the terms of the modified loan contract (Comment 36(c)(1)(i)-5).

    NOTE: For consumers performing under temporary loss mitigation programs, a creditor must continue to credit payments according to the loan contract and could, if appropriate, credit the payments as partial payments (Comment 36(c)(1)(i)-4).

14. For consumer credit transactions secured by a consumer's principal dwelling, determine whether the creditor or servicer uses a suspense or unapplied payment account for partial payments.

    a. For creditors or servicers that use suspense or unapplied payment accounts for consumers' partial payments, verify that the creditor or servicer discloses to consumers that amount held in the suspense account on the periodic statement required by 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(3) if one is required (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(ii)(A)); and

    b. Verify that creditors or servicers credit a periodic payment to the consumer's account once the amount in the suspense account equals a periodic payment (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(ii)(B)).

15. For consumer credit transactions secured by a consumer's principal dwelling, and for creditors or servicers that accept non-conforming payments from consumers, verify that the creditor or servicer credited the non-conforming payment to the consumer's account as of five days after receipt of the payment (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(iii)).

16. Determine whether there were any of the following prohibited acts or practices in connection with credit secured by a consumer's principal dwelling (12 CFR 1026.36(c)):

    a. Imposing on the consumer any late fee or delinquency charge in connection with a payment, when the only delinquency was attributable to late fees or delinquency charges assessed on an earlier payment, and the payment is otherwise a periodic payment for the applicable period and is received on its due date or within any applicable courtesy period (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(2)); or

17. For consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by a dwelling), verify that the creditor, assignee, or servicer provided, within a reasonable time, but no later than seven business days after receiving a written request from the consumer or person acting on behalf of the consumer, an accurate statement of the total outstanding balance that would be required to pay the consumer's obligation in full as of a specific date except when a delay is because a loan is in bankruptcy or foreclosure, the loan is a reverse or shared appreciation mortgage, or because of a natural disaster, in which case the payoff statement must be provided within a reasonable period of time (12 CFR 1026.36(b) and (c)(3)).

Valuation Independence

1. Determine that the covered person did not attempt to directly or indirectly cause the value assigned to the consumer's principal dwelling to be based on any factor other than the independent judgment of a person that prepares valuations. Examples of such attempts include (12 CFR 1026.42(c)):

    a. Seeking to influence a person that prepares a valuation to report a minimum or maximum value for the consumer's principal dwelling;

    b. Withholding or threatening to withhold timely payment to a person that prepares a valuation or performs valuation management functions because the person does not value the consumer's principal dwelling at or above a certain amount;

    c. Implying to a person that prepares valuations that current or future retention of the person depends on the amount at which the person estimates the value of the consumer's principal dwelling;

    d. Excluding a person that prepares a valuation from consideration for future engagement because the person reports a value for the consumer's principal dwelling that does not meet or exceed a predetermined threshold; and

    e. Conditioning the compensation paid to a person that prepares a valuation on consummation of the covered transaction.

2. Determine that the valuation does not materially misrepresent the value of the consumer's principal dwelling (12 CFR 1026.42(c)(2)(i)).

    NOTE: A misrepresentation is material if it is likely to significantly affect the value assigned to the consumer's principal dwelling. A bona fide error shall not be a misrepresentation.

3. Determine that a valuation was not falsified or materially altered (12 CFR 1026.42(c)(2)(ii)).

    NOTE: An alteration is material if it is likely to significantly affect the value assigned to the consumer's principal dwelling.

4. Determine that the covered person does not induce a person to materially misrepresent or falsify the value of a consumer's principal dwelling (in violation of 12 CFR 1026.42(c)(2)(i) or (ii) (12 CFR 1026.42(c)(2)(iii))

5. Prohibition on conflicts of interest. To the extent applicable, determine that the person who prepared the valuations or performed the valuation management functions for a covered transaction did not have a direct or indirect interest, financial or otherwise, in the property or transaction for which the valuation is or will be performed (12 CFR 1026.42(d)(1)(i)).

NOTE: No person violates this section solely because that the person is an employee or affiliate of the creditor, or provides a settlement service in addition to preparing valuations or performing valuation management functions, or based solely on the fact that the person's affiliate performs another settlement service, as long as the conditions discussed below ((f), (g), and (h)) are met. If they are not met, whether the conflicts of interest provisions are violated by the above persons or entities depends on all of the facts and circumstances. In other words, the conditions in (f), (g), and (h) are a safe harbor, but not required.

6. For any consumer credit transaction secured by the consumer's principal dwelling in which the creditor had assets of more than $250 million as of December 31 for both of the past two calendar years, determine that a person subject to 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(1)(i) who is employed by or affiliated with the creditor does not have a conflict of interest in violation of 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(1)(i) based solely on the person's employment or affiliate relationship with the creditor if (12 CFR 1026.42(d)(2)):

    a. The compensation of the person preparing a valuation or performing valuation management functions is not based on the value arrived at in any valuation;

    b. The person preparing a valuation or performing valuation management functions reports to a person who is not part of the creditor's loan production function, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(5)(i), and whose compensation is not based on the closing of the transaction to which the valuation relates; and

    c. No employee, officer or director in the creditor's loan production function, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(5)(i), is directly or indirectly involved in selecting, retaining, recommending or influencing the selection of the person to prepare a valuation or perform valuation management functions, or to be included in or excluded from a list of approved persons who prepare valuations or perform valuation management functions.

7. For any covered transaction in which the creditor had assets of $250 million or less as of December 31st for either of the past two calendar years, determine that a person subject to 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(1)(i) who is employed by or affiliated with the creditor does not have a conflict of interest in violation of 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(1)(i) based solely on the person's employment or affiliate relationship with the creditor if (12 CFR 1026.42(d)(3)):

    a. The compensation of the person preparing a valuation or performing valuation management functions is not based the value arrived at in any valuation; and

    b. The creditor requires that any employee, officer or director of the creditor who orders, performs, or reviews a valuation for a covered transaction abstain from participating in any decision to approve, not approve, or set the terms of that transaction.

8. For any covered transaction, determine that a person who prepares a valuation or performs valuation management functions in addition to performing another settlement service for the transaction, or whose affiliate performs another settlement service for the transaction, does not have a conflict of interest in violation of 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(1)(i) as a result of the person or the person's affiliate performing another settlement service for the transaction if (12 CFR 1026.42(d)(4)):

    a. The creditor had assets of more than $250 million as of December 31 for both of the past two calendar years and the conditions in paragraph (d)(2)(i)-(iii) are met; or

    b. The creditor had assets of $250 million or less as of December 31 for either of the past two calendar years and the conditions in paragraph (d)(3)(i)-(ii) are met.

9. If the creditor did know at or before consummation of a violation of 12 CFR 1026.42(c) or (d) in connection with a valuation, determine that the creditor did not extend credit based on the valuation, unless the creditor documented that it acted with reasonable diligence to determine that the valuation did not materially misstate or misrepresent the value of the consumer's principal dwelling (12 CFR 1026.42(e)).

    NOTE: For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.42(e), a valuation materially misstates or misrepresents the value of the consumer's principal dwelling if the valuation contains a misstatement or misrepresentation that affects the credit decision or the terms on which credit is extended.

10. Customary and reasonable compensation. For any covered transaction, determine that the creditor and its agents compensated a fee appraiser (as defined in 12 CFR 1026.42(f)(4)(i) for performing appraisal services at a rate that is customary and reasonable for comparable appraisal services performed in the geographic market of the property being appraised (12 CFR 1026.42(f)(1)).

NOTE: Voluntary donation of appraisal services by a fee appraiser (as defined in 15 U.S.C. 1639e(i)(2)) to an organization eligible to receive tax-deductible charitable contributions meets the requirement to be customary-and-reasonable for purposes of 15 U.S.C. 1639e(i)(1) (15 U.S.C. 1639e(i)(2)(B)).

For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.42(f), "agents" of the creditor do not include any fee appraiser as defined in (12 CFR 1026.42(f)(4)(i)). An "agent" could be an appraisal management company to which the creditor has outsourced the valuation function.

11. If the creditor reasonably believes an appraiser has not complied with the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice or ethical or professional requirements for appraisers under applicable state or federal statutes or regulations, determine that the creditor referred the matter within a reasonable period of time to the appropriate state agency if the failure to comply is material (12 CFR 1026.42(g)(1)).

    NOTE: For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.42(g), a failure to comply is material if it is likely to significantly affect the value assigned to the consumer's principal dwelling.

Open-End Credit Transactional Testing Procedures

1. For each open-end credit product tested, determine the accuracy of the disclosures by comparing the disclosure with the contract and other financial institution documents (12 CFR 1026.5(c)).
2. Review the financial institution's policies, procedures, and practices to determine whether it provides appropriate disclosures for creditor-initiated direct mail applications and solicitations to open charge card accounts, telephone applications and solicitations to open charge card accounts, and applications and solicitations made available to the general public to open charge card accounts (12 CFR 1026.60(b), (c), and (d)).
3. Determine for all home-equity plans with a variable rate that the APR is based on an independent index. Further, ensure home-equity plans are terminated or terms changed only if certain conditions exist (12 CFR 1026.40(f)).
4. Determine that, if any consumer rejected a home-equity plan because a disclosed term changed before the plan was opened, all fees were refunded. Verify that non-refundable fees were not imposed until three business days after the consumer received the required disclosures and brochure (12 CFR 1026.40(g) and (h)).
5. Review consecutive periodic billing statements for each major type of open-end credit activity offered (overdraft and home-equity lines of credit, credit card programs, etc.). Determine whether disclosures were calculated accurately and are consistent with the initial disclosure statement furnished in connection with the accounts (or any subsequent change in terms notice) and the underlying contractual terms governing the plan(s).
6. Determine whether the consumer was given notice of the right to reject the significant change, with the exception of:
    a. An increase in the required minimum periodic payment (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B));
    b. A change in the APR (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B));
    c. A change in the balance computation method necessary to comply with 12 CFR 1026.54, which sets forth certain limitations on the imposition of finance charges as a result of a loss of a grace period;
    d. Increase in fee pursuant to evaluation under 12 CFR 1026.52 or adjustment to safe harbors;
    e. Increase in fees previously reduced under Servicemembers Civil Relief Act; or
    f. When the change results from the creditor not receiving the required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date for that payment (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B)).

7. Determine that the creditor did not increase the rate applicable to the consumer's account to the penalty rate if the outstanding balance did not exceed the credit limit on the date set forth in the notice (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)).

8. Determine, for each type of open-end rescindable loan being tested, the appropriate number of copies of the rescission notice are provided to each person whose ownership interest is or will be subject to the security interest and perform the procedures 12, 13, and 14 under Closed-End Credit section (12 CFR 1026.15(b), (c) and (e)).

9. Additional variable-rate testing: Verify that when accounts were opened or loans were consummated that loan contract terms were recorded correctly in the financial institution's calculation systems (e.g., its computer). Determine the accuracy of the following recorded information:

    a. Index value,

    b. Margin and method of calculating rate changes,

    c. Rounding method, and

    d. Adjustment caps (periodic and lifetime).

10. Using a sample of periodic disclosures for open-end variable-rate accounts (e.g., home equity accounts) and closed-end rate change notices for adjustable rate mortgage loans:

    a. Compare the rate-change date and rate on the credit obligation to the actual rate-change date and rate imposed.

    b. Determine that the index disclosed and imposed is based on the terms of the contract (example: the weekly average of one-year Treasury constant maturities, taken as of 45 days before the change date) (12 CFR 1026.7(a) and 1026.20(c)(2)).

    c. Determine that the new interest rate is correctly disclosed by adding the correct index value with the margin stated in the note, plus or minus any contractual fractional adjustment (12 CFR 1026.7(g) and 1026.20 (c)(1)).

    d. Determine that the new payment disclosed 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(4) was based on an interest rate and loan balance in effect at least 25 days before the payment change date (consistent with the contract) (12 CFR 1026.20(c)).

Crediting a Consumer's Account – 12 CFR 1026.10

1. Ensure that the creditor credits payment to a consumer's account as of the date of receipt, except when a delay in crediting does not result in a finance charge or other charge (12 CFR 1026.10(a)).

2. If a creditor specifies requirements for payments, determine that they are reasonable and enable most consumers to make conforming payments (12 CFR 1026.10(b)).

3. Except as provided by 12 CFR 1026.10(b)(4)(ii), if a creditor specifies, on or with the periodic statement, requirements for the consumer to follow in making payments as permitted under 12 CFR 1026.10, but accepts a payment that does not conform to the requirements, determine that the payment is credited within five days of receipt (12 CFR 1026.10(b)(4)(i)).

4. If the creditor promotes a method for making payments, determine that the creditor considers such payments conforming payments in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.10(b) and that they are credited to the consumer's account as of the date of receipt, except when a delay in crediting does not result in a finance charge or other charge (12 CFR 1026.10(b)(4)(ii)).

5. If the creditor sets a cut-off time for payments to be received by mail, by electronic means, by telephone, or in person, verify that the cut-off time is 5 p.m. or later on the payment due date at the location specified by the creditor for the receipt of such payments (12 CFR 1026.10(b)(2)(ii)).

6. For in-person payments on a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan at a financial institution branch or office that accepts such payments, a card issuer shall not impose a cut-off time earlier than the close of business for any such payments made in person at any branch or office of the card issuer at which such payments are accepted. However, a card issuer may impose a cut-off time earlier than 5 p.m. for such payments, if the close of business of the branch or office is earlier than 5 p.m. (12 CFR 1026.10(b)(3)(i)).

7. If a creditor fails to credit a payment as required and imposes a finance or other charge, ensure that the creditor credits the charge(s) to the consumer's account during the next billing cycle (12 CFR 1026.10(c)).

8. If (due to a weekend or holiday, for example) a creditor does not receive or accept payments by mail on the due date for payments, determine that the creditor treats as timely a payment received on the next business day (12 CFR 1026.10(d)(1)).

   NOTE: If a creditor accepts or receives payments made on the due date by a method other than mail, such as electronic or telephone payments, the creditor is not required to treat a payment made by that method on the next business day as timely.

9. For credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, determine that the creditor does not impose a separate fee to allow consumers to make a payment by any method, such as mail, electronic, or telephone payments, unless such payment method involves an expedited service by a customer service representative of the creditor (12 CFR 1026.10(e)).

   NOTE: For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.10(e), the term "creditor" includes a third party that collects, receives, or processes payments on behalf of a creditor.

10. If a card issuer makes a material change in the address for receiving payments or procedures for handling payments, and such change causes a material delay in the crediting of a payment to a consumer's account during the 60-day period following the date on which such change took effect, ensure that the card issuer does not impose any late fee or finance charge for a late payment on the credit card account during the 60-day period following the date on which the change took effect (12 CFR 1026.10(f)).

Treatment of Credit Balances, Account Termination – 12 CFR 1026.11

1. Determine institution's treatment of credit balances. Specifically, if the account's credit balance is in excess of one dollar, the institution must take the actions listed below (12 CFR 1026.11):
    a. Credit the amount to the consumer's account; and
    b. Either:
        i. Refund any part of the remaining credit balance within seven business days from receiving a written request from the consumer; or
        ii. If no written request is received and the credit remains for more than six months, make a good faith effort to refund the amount of the credit to the consumer by cash, check, money order, or credit to a deposit account of the consumer. No further action is required if the consumer's current location is not known to the creditor and cannot be traced through the consumer's last known address or telephone number.
2. Determine that institution has not terminated an account prior to its expiration date solely because the consumer did not incur a finance charge. However, a creditor is not prohibited from closing an account that, for three consecutive months, no credit has been extended (such as by purchase, cash advance, or balance transfer) and the account has had no outstanding balance (12 CFR 1026.11(b)).
3. Determine that, for credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, the card issuer has adopted reasonable written policies and procedures designed to ensure that an administrator of an estate of a deceased account holder can determine the amount of and pay any balance on the account in a timely manner (12 CFR 1026.11(c)(1)(i)).

    NOTE: This does not apply to the account of a deceased consumer if a joint account holder remains on the account.
4. Ensure that, upon request by the administrator of an estate, the card issuer provides the administrator with the amount of the balance on a deceased consumer's account in a timely manner (12 CFR 1026.11(c)(2)(i)).

NOTE: Providing the amount of the balance on the account within 30 days of receiving the request is deemed to be timely.

5. Verify that, after receiving a request from the administrator of an estate for the amount of the balance on a deceased consumer's account, the card issuer does not impose any fees on the account (such as a late fee, annual fee, or over the-limit fee) or increase any annual percentage rate, except as provided by 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(2) (i.e., due to the operation of an index) (12 CFR 1026.11(c)(3)(i)).

6. Determine that, if payment in full of the disclosed balance, pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.11(c)(2), is received within 30 days after disclosure, the card issuer waives or rebates any additional finance charge due to a periodic interest rate (12 CFR 1026.11(c)(3)(ii)).

Billing Error Resolution – 12 CFR 1026.13 (Open-End Credit)

1. Determine whether the creditor mailed or delivered a written acknowledgment to the consumer within 30 days of receiving a billing error notice in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.13(c)(1) if it has not complied with the appropriate resolution procedures provided in 12 CFR 1026.13(e) and (f), as applicable.

2. Determine whether the creditor complied with the appropriate resolution procedures provided in 12 CFR 1026.13(e) and (f), as applicable, within two complete billing cycles (but in no event later than 90 days) after receiving a billing error notice.

3. Determine if the institution engaged in any of the prohibited conduct provided in 12 CFR 1026.13(d) while a billing error resolution was pending.

4. If the creditor determined that a consumer owed all or part of the disputed amount and related finance or other charges, determine whether the creditor complied with the requirements provided in (12 CFR 1026.13(g)).

Special Credit Card Provisions and Billing Error Resolution – 12 CFR 1026.12 and 13

1. Review a sample of billing error resolution files and a sample of consumers who have asserted a claim or defense against the financial institution for a credit card dispute regarding property or services. Verify the following (12 CFR 1026.12 and 1026.13):

    a. Credit cards are issued only upon request;

    b. Liability for unauthorized credit card use is limited to $50;

    c. Disputed amounts are not reported delinquent unless remaining unpaid after the dispute has been settled;

    d. Offsetting credit card indebtedness is prohibited; and

    e. Errors are resolved within two complete billing cycles.

Ability to Make the Required Minimum Payments – 12 CFR 1026.51

1. Determine that the card issuer does not open a credit card account for a consumer under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, or increase any credit limit applicable to such account, unless the card issuer considers the ability of the consumer to make the required minimum periodic payments under the terms of the account based on the consumer's income or assets and current obligations (12 CFR 1026.51(a)(1)(i)).

2. Verify that the card issuer establishes and maintains reasonable written policies and procedures to consider a consumer's income or assets and current obligations. Reasonable policies and procedures to consider a consumer's ability to make the required payments include a consideration of at least one of the following (12 CFR 1026.51(a)(1)(ii)):

    a. The ratio of debt obligations to income,

    b. The ratio of debt obligations to assets, or

    c. The income the consumer will have after paying debt obligations.

    NOTE: Reasonable written policies and procedures may include treating any income and assets to which the consumer has a reasonable expectation of access as the consumer's income or assets or may be limited to consideration to the consumer's independent income and assets.

3. Confirm that the card issuer does not issue a credit card to a consumer who does not have any income or assets, and that the credit does not issue a credit card without reviewing any information about a consumer's income, assets, or current obligations (12 CFR 1026.51(a)(1)(ii)).

    NOTE: A card issuer may consider the consumer's income or assets based on information provided by the consumer, in connection with the credit card account or any other financial relationship the card issuer or its affiliates has with the consumer, subject to any applicable information-sharing rules, and information obtained through third parties, subject to any applicable information-sharing rules. A card issuer may also consider information obtained through any empirically derived, demonstrably, and statistically sound model that reasonably estimates a consumer's income or assets (Comment 51(a)-5).

4. Determine that the card issuer uses a reasonable method for estimating the minimum periodic payments the consumer would be required to pay under the terms of the account (12 CFR 1026.51(a)(2)(i)).

5. A card issuer's estimate of the minimum periodic payment is compliant (i.e., receives the benefit of a safe harbor) if it uses the following method (12 CFR 1026.51(a)(2)(ii)):

    a. The card issuer assumes utilization, from the first day of the billing cycle, of the full credit line that the issuer is considering offering to the consumer; and

b. The card issuer uses a minimum payment formula employed by the issuer for the product the issuer is considering offering to the consumer or, in the case of an existing account, the minimum payment formula that currently applies to that account, provided that:

i. If the applicable minimum payment formula includes interest charges, the card issuer estimates those charges using an interest rate that the issuer is considering offering to the consumer for purchases or, in the case of an existing account, the interest rate that currently applies to purchases; and

ii. If the applicable minimum payment formula includes mandatory fees, the card issuer must assume that such fees have been charged to the account.

6. Rules affecting young consumers: If the card issuer opens a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan for a consumer less than 21 years old, verify that the issuer requires that such consumers:

a. Submit a written application; and

b. Either possess an independent ability to make the required minimum periodic payments on the proposed extension of credit in connection with the account under 12 CFR 1026.51(b)(1)(i) or provide a signed agreement of a cosigner, guarantor, or joint applicant who is at least 21 years old who has the ability to make the required minimum periodic payments on such debts, and be either jointly liable with the consumer for any debt on the account, or secondarily liable for any debt on the account incurred by the consumer before the consumer has attained the age of 21 pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.51(b)(1)(ii)(A) and (B)).

7. If a credit card account was opened for such consumer without a cosigner, guarantor, or joint applicant pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.51(b)(1), determine that the issuer does not increase the credit limit on the account before the consumer turns 21 unless:

a. At the time of the contemplated increase, the consumer has an independent ability to make the required minimum periodic payments; or

b. A cosigner, guarantor, or joint accountholder who is at least 21 years old and has the ability to make the required minimum periodic payments agrees in writing to assume liability for any debt incurred on the account (12 CFR 1026.51(b)(2)(i)).

8. If a credit card account was opened for such a consumer with a cosigner, guarantor, or joint applicant pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.51(b)(1)(ii), determine that the issuer does not increase the credit limit on such account before the consumer attains the age of 21 unless the cosigner, guarantor, or joint accountholder who assumed liability at account opening agrees in writing to assume liability on the increase (12 CFR 1026.51(b)(2)).

Limitations on Fees – 12 CFR 1026.52

1. During the first year after the opening of a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, determine whether the card issuer required the consumer to pay covered fees in excess of the 25 percent of the credit limit in effect when the account is opened (12 CFR 1026.52(a)(1)).

   NOTES:

   - The 25 percent limitation on fees does not apply to fees assessed prior to opening the account.
   - An account is considered opened no earlier than the date on which the account may first be used by the consumer to engage in transactions.

Covered fees include fees (Comment 52(a)(2)-1):

a. For the issuance or availability of credit, including any fees based on account activity or inactivity;

b. For insurance, debt cancellation or debt suspension coverage, if the insurance or debt cancellation or suspension coverage is required by the terms of the account;

c. The consumer is required to pay to engage in transactions using the account, such as:

   i. Cash advance fees,

   ii. Balance transfer fees,

   iii. Foreign transaction fees, and

   iv. Fees for using the account for purchases.

d. The consumer is required to pay for violating the terms of the account, except to the extent they are specifically excluded (see below);

e. Fixed finance charges; and

f. Minimum charges imposed if a charge would otherwise have been determined by applying a periodic interest rate to a balance except for the fact that such charge is smaller than the minimum.

g. Prepaid Cards: For fees in connection with a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature of the prepaid card account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, except as provided in (12 CFR 1026.52(a)(2)):

   i. Any fee or charge imposed on the covered separate credit feature, other than a charge attributable to a periodic interest rate, during the first year after account opening that the card issuer will or may require the consumer to pay in connection with the credit feature; and

ii. Any fee or charge imposed on the asset feature of the prepaid account, other than a charge attributable to a periodic interest rate, during the first year after account opening that the card issuer will or may require the consumer to pay where that fee or charge is imposed as part of the plan under (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3)).

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.52(a) does not authorize the imposition or payment of fees or charges otherwise prohibited by law (12 CFR 1026.52(a)(3)).

2. Fees not covered by this limitation include (12 CFR 1026.52(a)(2)(i)):

   a. Late payment fees, over-the-limit fees, and returned-payment fees; or

   b. Fees that the consumer is not required to pay with respect to the account, such as:

      i. An expedited payment fee,

      ii. Fees for optional services like travel insurance,

      iii. Fees for reissuing a lost or stolen card, or

      iv. Statement reproduction fees.

3. Review penetration rates of various optional services to determine if they are truly optional and therefore not covered by the 25 percent limitation.

4. Ensure that the card issuer does not impose a fee for violating the terms or other requirements of a credit card account, regardless of where the fee is imposed, under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan unless the dollar amount of the fee is consistent with 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1) and (b)(2) (12 CFR 1026.52(b)).

5. Determine that a card issuer imposes a fee for violating the terms or other requirements of a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan only if the dollar amount of the fee is consistent with either 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(i) or 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(ii) (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)).

6. Cost determination. A card issuer may impose a fee for a particular violation (e.g., late payment) if the card issuer has determined that the fee represents a reasonable proportion of the total costs incurred by the issuer as a result of that type of violation. If a card issuer is relying on a cost determination instead of the safe harbors (see below), review (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(i)):

   a. The number of violations of a particular type experienced by the card issuer during a prior period of reasonable length (e.g., a 12-month period).

b. The costs incurred by the card issuer during that period as a result of those violations. Losses and associated costs (including the cost of holding reserves against potential losses and the cost of funding delinquent accounts) must be excluded from this analysis.

c. If used by the card issuer when making its determination:

  i. The number of fees imposed by the card issuer as a result of the type of violation during the period that the issuer reasonably estimates it will be unable to collect.

  ii. Reasonable estimates for an upcoming period of changes in the number of violations of the relevant type, the resulting costs, and the number of fees that the card issuer will be unable to collect.

d. If applicable, whether the items in 1–3 above have been reevaluated by the card issuer at least once during the prior 12 months. If as a result of the reevaluation the card issuer determines that a lower fee represents a reasonable proportion of the total costs incurred by the card issuer as a result of that type of violation, determine that the card issuer begins imposing the lower fee within 45 days after completing the reevaluation.

NOTE: If as a result of the reevaluation the card issuer determines that a higher fee represents a reasonable proportion of the total costs incurred by the card issuer as a result of that type of violation, the card issuer may begin imposing the higher fee after complying with the notice requirements in 12 CFR 1026.9 (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(i)) .

7. Safe harbors. A card issuer may impose a fee for violating the terms or other requirements of the account if the dollar amount of the fee does not exceed, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(ii)(A)-(C)):

  a. $28.00,

  b. $39.00 if the card issuer previously imposed a fee pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(ii)(A) for a violation of the same type that occurred during the same billing cycle or one of the next six billing cycles, or

  c. Three percent of the delinquent balance on a charge card account that requires payment of outstanding balances in full at the end of each billing cycle if the card issuer has not received the required payment for two or more consecutive billing cycles.

  NOTE: The dollar amounts in the subparagraphs above may be adjusted annually by the CFPB to the extent that changes in the Consumer Price Index warrant an increase or decrease of a whole dollar. The amounts were increased to $28 and $39, respectively, effective January 1, 2019, as reflected here. Further adjustments may be made in subsequent years

8. Determine that the card issuer does not impose a fee for violating the terms or other requirements of a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan that exceeds the dollar amount associated with the violation (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(2)(i)(A)).

9. Determine that a card issuer does not impose a fee for violating the terms or other requirements of a credit card account under an open end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan when there is no dollar amount associated with the violation. For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(2)(i), there is no dollar amount associated with the following violations (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(2)(i)(B)):

    a. Transactions that the card issuer declines to authorize,

    b. Account inactivity, and

    c. The closure or termination of an account.

10. Determine that the card issuer does not impose more than one fee for violating the terms or other requirements of a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan based on a single event or transaction (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(2)(ii)).

Allocation of Payments – 12 CFR 1026.53

1. Determine whether, when a consumer makes a payment in excess of the required minimum periodic payment, the card issuer allocates the excess amount:

    a. First to the balance with the highest APR, and

    b. Any remaining portion to the other balances in descending order based on the applicable APR (12 CFR 1026.53(a)).

2. For balances on a credit card account subject to a deferred interest or similar program, determine whether the card issuer allocated any amount paid by the consumer in excess of the required minimum periodic payment:

    a. Consistent with the general requirement discussed in (a) above, except that, during the two billing cycles immediately preceding expiration of the deferred interest period, the excess amount must have been allocated first to the balance subject to the deferred interest or similar program and any remaining portion allocated to any other balances consistent with 12 CFR 1026.53(a) (12 CFR 1026.53(b)(1)(i)), or

    b. In the manner requested by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.53(b)(1)(ii)).

3. When a balance on a credit card account is secured, the card issuer may at its option allocate any amount paid by the consumer in excess of the required minimum periodic payment to that balance if requested by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.53(b)(2)).

Loss of a Grace Period – 12 CFR 1026.54

1. Determine whether the card issuer imposed finance charges as a result of the loss of a grace period on a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan based on:

    a. Balances for days in billing cycles that precede the most recent billing cycle, a prohibited practice; or

    b. Any portion of a balance subject to a grace period that was repaid prior to the expiration of the grace period (12 CFR 1026.54).

2. With respect to the prohibition above, issuers are not required to follow any specific methodology, but an issuer is in compliance if it applies the consumer's payment to the balance subject to the grace period and calculates interest charges on the amount of the balance that remains unpaid (Comment 54(a)(1)-5).

    Exceptions: This rule does not apply to adjustments to the finance charge as a result of:

    a. The resolution of a dispute under 12 CFR 1026.12, unauthorized use, or 12 CFR 1026.13, billing error; or

    b. The return of a payment.

Limitations on Increasing Annual Percentage Rates, Fees, and Charges – 12 CFR 1026.55

1. With respect to a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, determine that the card issuer did not increase an APR or fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii) (fee for issuance or availability (e.g., an annual fee)), (b)(2)(iii) (fixed finance charge or minimum interest charge), or (b)(2)(xii) (fee for required insurance, debt cancellation, or debt suspension coverage), unless as permitted by one of the six exceptions:

    a. Temporary rate, fee, or charge exception;

    b. Variable rate exception;

    c. Advance notice exception;

    d. Delinquency exception;

    e. Workout and temporary hardship arrangement; and

    f. Servicemembers Civil Relief Act exception (12 CFR 1026.55(a)-(b)).

2. To assess whether the temporary rate, fee, or charge exception applies 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(1), determine whether:

a. The card issuer increased the APR, fee, or charge upon the expiration of a specified period of six months or longer and

b. Prior to the commencement of that period, the card issuer disclosed in writing to the consumer, in a clear and conspicuous manner, the length of the period and the APR, fee, or charge that would apply after expiration of the period.

3. If the temporary rate exception applies, determine that the card issuer:

   a. Did not apply an APR, fee, or charge to transactions that occurred prior to the period that exceeds the APR, fee, or charge that applied to those transactions prior to the period;

   b. Provided the required notice, but did not apply an APR, fee, or charge (to transactions that occurred within 14 days after provision of the notice) that exceeds the APR, fee, or charge that applied to that category of transactions prior to provision of the notice; and

   c. Did not apply an annual percentage rate to transactions that occurred during the period that exceeds the increased APR, fee, or charge.

4. If the variable-rate exception applies 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(2), determine that the card issuer did not increase an APR unless:

   a. The increase in the APR is due to an increase in the index; and

   b. The annual percentage rate varies according to an index that is not under the card issuer's control and is available to the general public.

   NOTE: For purposes of qualifying under this exception, an index is considered under the card issuer's control if the card issuer applies a minimum rate or floor below which the rate cannot decrease. However, because there is no disadvantage to consumers, issuers are not prevented from setting a maximum rate or ceiling (Comment 1026.55(b)(2)-2(ii)).

5. If the advance notice exception applies 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(3), determine that the card issuer:

   a. Did not apply that increased APR, fee, or charge to transactions that occurred prior to provision of the notice;

   b. Did not apply the increased APR, fee, or charge to transactions that occurred prior to or within 14 days after provision of the notice; and

   c. Did not increase the APR, fee, or charge during the first year after the account is opened.

6. If the delinquency exception applies 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(4), determine that the card issuer:

a. Disclosed in a clear and conspicuous manner in the required notice a statement of the reason for the increase, and

b. Will cease the increase if the card issuer receives six consecutive required minimum periodic payments on or before the payment due date, beginning with the first payment due following the effective date of the increase.

7. If the delinquency exception applies and the card issuer received six consecutive required minimum periodic payments on or before the payment due date beginning with the first payment due following the effective date of the increase, determine that the card issuer reduces any APR, fee, or charge (increased pursuant to the delinquency exception) to the original APR, fee, or charge that applied prior to the increase with respect to transactions that occurred prior to or within 14 days after provision of the required notice 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(4)(ii)).

8. If the workout and temporary hardship arrangement exception applies 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(5), determine that:

   a. Prior to commencement of the arrangement (except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(D)) the card issuer provided the consumer with a clear and conspicuous written disclosure of the terms of the arrangement (including any increases due to the completion or failure of the arrangement); and

   b. Upon the completion or failure of the arrangement, the card issuer did not apply to any transactions that occurred prior to commencement of the arrangement an APR, fee, or charge that exceeds the APR, fee, or charge that applied to those transactions prior to commencement of the arrangement.

9. If the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act exception applies 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(6), determine that the card issuer increased the APR, fee, or charge only after 50 U.S.C. 3937, or a similar federal or state statute or regulation no longer applied. Further, determine that the issuer did not apply to any transactions that occurred prior to the decrease an APR, fee, or charge that exceeded the APR, fee, or charge that applied to those transactions prior to the decrease.

10. For protected balances 12 CFR 1026.55(c), determine that the card issuer did not require repayment using a method that is less beneficial to the consumer than one of the following methods:

    a. The method of repayment for the account before the effective date of the increase;

    b. An amortization period of not less than five years, beginning no earlier than the effective date of the increase; or

    c. A required minimum periodic payment that includes a percentage of the balance that is equal to no more than twice the percentage required before the effective date of the increase.

11. If a card issuer promotes the waiver or rebate of finance charges due to a periodic interest rate or fees or charges 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii)) and applies the waiver or rebate to a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, any cessation of the waiver or rebate on that account constitutes an increase in an annual percentage rate, fee, or charge for purposes of (12 CFR 1026.55).

Requirements for Over-the-Limit Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.56

1. Joint Relationships. Determine that, if two or more consumers are jointly liable on a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, the card issuer treats the affirmative consent of any of the joint consumers as affirmative consent for that account. Similarly, determine that the card issuer treats a revocation of consent by any of the joint consumers as revocation of consent for that account (12 CFR 1026.56(f)).

2. Notwithstanding a consumer's affirmative consent to a card issuer's payment of over-the-limit transactions, determine that the card issuer does not (12 CFR 1026.56(j)):

    a. Impose more than one over-the-limit fee or charge on a consumer's credit card account per billing cycle, and, in any event, only if the credit limit was exceeded during the billing cycle. In addition, the card issuer may not impose an over-the-limit fee or charge on the consumer's credit card account for more than three billing cycles for the same over-the-limit transaction where the consumer has not reduced the account balance below the credit limit by the payment due date for either of the last two billing cycles.

    NOTE: There is an exception to the latter prohibition if another over-the-limit transaction occurred in the last two billing cycles.

    b. Impose an over-the-limit fee or charge solely because of the card issuer's failure to promptly replenish the consumer's available credit following the crediting of the consumer's payment following the crediting of the consumer's payment under (12 CFR 1026.10).

    c. Condition the amount of a consumer's credit limit on the consumer affirmatively consenting to the card issuer's payment of over-the-limit transactions if the card issuer assesses a fee or charge for such service.

    d. Impose an over-the-limit fee or charge for a billing cycle if a consumer exceeds a credit limit solely because of fees or interest charged by the card issuer (defined as charges imposed as part of the plan under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) to the consumer's account during that billing cycle.

Reevaluation of Rate Increases – 12 CFR 1026.59

1. If a card issuer increases an APR that applies to a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, based on the credit risk of the consumer, market conditions, or other factors, or increased such a rate on or after January 1, 2009, and 45 days' advance notice of the rate increase is required pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2) or (g), determine that the card issuer (12 CFR 1026.59(a)(1)):

    a. Evaluates the factors described in 12 CFR 1026.59(d); and

    b. Based on its review of such factors, reduces the APR applicable to the consumer's account, as appropriate.

2. If a card issuer is required to reduce the rate applicable to an account pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.59(a)(1), determine that the card issuer reduces the rate not later than 45 days after completion of the evaluation described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a)(1) 12 CFR 1026.59(a)(2)(i)).

    NOTE: Any reduction in an APR required pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.59(a)(1) shall apply to (12 CFR 1026.59(a)(2)(ii)):

    a. Any outstanding balances to which the increased rate described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a)(1) has been applied; and

    b. New transactions that occur after the effective date of the rate reduction that would otherwise have been subject to the increased rate.

3. Determine that the card issuer has reasonable written policies and procedures in place to conduct the review described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a) (12 CFR 1026.59(b)).

4. Determine that a card issuer that is subject to 12 CFR 1026.59(a) conducts the review described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a)(1) not less frequently than once every six months after the rate increase 12 CFR 1026.59(c)).

5. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.59(d)(2), determine that the card issuer reviews either (12 CFR 1026.59(d)(1)):

    a. The factors on which the increase in an APR was originally based; or

    b. The factors that the card issuer currently considers when determining the APRs applicable to similar new credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan.

6. For rate increases imposed between January 1, 2009, and February 21, 2010, determine that an issuer considered the factors described in 12 CFR 1026.59(d)(1)(ii) when conducting the first two reviews required under 12 CFR 1026.59(a), unless the rate increase subject to 12 CFR 1026.59(a) was based solely upon factors specific to the consumer, such as a decline in the consumer's credit risk, the consumer's delinquency or default, or a violation of the terms of the account (12 CFR 1026.59(d)(2)).

7. If an issuer increases a rate applicable to a consumer's account pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(4) based on the card issuer not receiving the consumer's required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date, note that the issuer is not required to perform the review described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a) prior to the sixth payment due date after the effective date of the increase. However, if the APR applicable to the consumer's account is not reduced pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(4)(ii), determine that the card issuer performs the review described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a). Determine that the first such review occurs no later than six months after the sixth payment due following the effective date of the rate increase (12 CFR 1026.59(e)).

8. The obligation to review factors described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a) and (d) ceases to apply (12 CFR 1026.59(f)):

    a. If the issuer reduces the APR applicable to a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan to the rate applicable immediately prior to the increase, or, if the rate applicable immediately prior to the increase was a variable rate, to a variable rate determined by the same formula (index and margin) that was used to calculate the rate applicable immediately prior to the increase; or

    b. If the issuer reduces the APR to a rate that is lower than the rate described in 12 CFR 1026.59(f)(1) of this section.

9. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.59(g)(2), 12 CFR 1026.59 applies to credit card accounts that have been acquired by the card issuer from another card issuer (12 CFR 1026.59(g)).

10. Determine that a card issuer that complies with this section by reviewing the factors described in 12 CFR 1026.59(d)(1)(i) reviews the factors considered by the card issuer from which it acquired the accounts in connection with the rate increase (12 CFR 1026.59(g)(1)).

11. If, not later than six months after the acquisition of such accounts, a card issuer reviews all of the credit card accounts it acquires in accordance with the factors that it currently considers in determining the rates applicable to its similar new credit card accounts (12 CFR 1026.59(g)(2)):

    a. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.59(g)(2)(iii), determine that the card issuer conducts reviews described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a) for rate increases that are imposed as a result of its review under this paragraph.

    b. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.59(g)(2)(iii), note that the card issuer is not required to conduct reviews in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.59(a) for any rate increases made prior to the card issuer's acquisition of such accounts.

c. Note that if as a result of the card issuer's review, an account is subject to, or continues to be subject to, an increased rate as a penalty, or due to the consumer's delinquency or default, the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.59(a) apply.

Servicemembers Civil Relief Act exception: Note that the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.59 do not apply to increases in an APR that was previously decreased pursuant to the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (50 U.S.C. 3937,), provided that such a rate increase is made in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(6) (12 CFR 1026.59(h)(1)).

Charged off accounts exception: Note that the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.59 do not apply to accounts that the card issuer has charged off in accordance with loan-loss provisions (12 CFR 1026.59(h)(2)).

NOTE: Appendix G to Part 1026 is amended by revising Forms G-10(B), G-10(C), G-10(E), G-17(B), G-17(C), G-18(B), G-18(D), G-18(F), G-18(G), G-20, G-21, G-22, G- 25(A), and G-25(B).

Administrative Enforcement

1. If there is non-compliance involving understated finance charges or understated APRs subject to reimbursement under TILA Section 108:
    a. Determine the date of the preceding examination.
    b. If the non-compliance involves indirect (third-party paper) disclosure errors and affected consumers have not been reimbursed:
        i. Prepare comments, discussing the need for improved internal controls to be included in the report of examination.
        ii. Notify your supervisory office for follow up with the regulator that has primary responsibility for the original creditor.
    c. If the non-compliance involves direct credit:
        i. Make an initial determination whether the violation is a pattern or practice.
        ii. Calculate the reimbursement for the loans or accounts in an expanded sample of the identified population.
        iii. Estimate the total impact on the population based on the expanded sample.
        iv. Inform management that reimbursement may be necessary under TILA Section 108, and discuss all substantive facts including the sample loans and calculations.
        v. Inform management of the financial institution's options under Section 130 of TILA for avoiding civil liability and of its option under Section 108 (e)(6) of TILA for avoiding a regulatory agency's order to reimburse affected customers.

HIGH-COST MORTGAGE (12 CFR 1026.32) WORKSHEET

COVERAGE
	Yes	No
Is the transaction secured by the consumer's principal dwelling? [12 CFR 1026.2(a)(19), 12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)]
If the answer is No, STOP HERE. The transaction is not a high-cost mortgage.
Is the transaction:
1. A reverse mortgage transaction [12 CFR 1026.32(a)(2)(i)] 2. A transaction to finance the initial construction of a dwelling [12 CFR 1026.32(a)(2)(ii)] 3. A transaction originated and financed by a Housing Finance Agency [12 CFR 1026.32(a)(2)(iii)] 4. A transaction originated under the USDA's rural development Section 502 direct loan program [12 CFR 1026.32(a)(2)(iv)]
If the answer is Yes to Box 1, 2, 3 or 4, STOP HERE. If No, continue to Test 1, APR.

TEST 1 – APR
A. Determine the APR for testing high-cost mortgage coverage: 1. For fixed-rate transactions, calculate the APR using the interest rate in effect on the date the interest rate for the transaction was set. 2. For transactions where the interest rate varies with an index, use the greater of the introductory interest rate (if any) or the fully-indexed rate (i.e., the interest rate that results from adding the maximum margin permitted at any time during the term of the transaction to the value of the index rate in effect on the date the interest rate for the transaction was set). 3. For transactions where the interest rate may or will vary other than in accordance with an index, such as in a step-rate loan, use the maximum rate that the applicant may pay during the term of the transaction. [12 CFR 1026.32(a)(3)]
B. Determine the Average Prime Offer Rate (APOR): Determine the APOR for a comparable transaction as of the last rate lock on the transaction. Determine the APOR for a HELOC by identifying the most closely comparable closed-end transaction. APOR tables are published at http://www.ffiec.gov/ratespread/aportables.htm. [12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)(i) and comments 32(a)(1)(i)-1 through -3]
C. Add one of the following amounts to APOR (Box B), as applicable: 1. 6.5 percentage points for most first-lien transactions; 2. 8.5 percentage points for first-lien transactions secured by personal property (e.g., manufactured housing titled as personal property, RVs, houseboats) where the loan amount is less than $50,000; or 3. 8.5 percentage points for subordinate-lien transactions [12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)(i)(A)-(C)]
	Yes	No
D. Is Box A greater than Box C?
If Yes, the transaction is a high-cost mortgage. If No, continue to Test 2, Points and Fees.

HIGH-COST MORTGAGE (12 CFR 1026.32) WORKSHEET

TEST 2 – POINTS AND FEES[78]

STEP 1: Identify all charges payable in connection with the transaction and known at or before consummation or account opening.

A. Items included in the finance charge (12 CFR 1026.4(a) and (b)), except for the following:

- Interest, including per-diem interest, and time-price differential;
- All federal or state government-sponsored MIPs, e.g., up-front and annual FHA premiums, VA funding fees, and USDA guarantee fees;
- All monthly or annual PMI premiums;
- Up-front PMI premiums if the premiums are refundable on a prorated basis and the refund is automatically issued upon loan satisfaction. However, include any portion of the PMI premium that exceeds the up-front MIP for FHA loans;
- Bona fide third-party charges not retained by the creditor, loan originator, or an affiliate of either, unless specifically required to be included under Boxes A-H[79]; and
- Up to 1 or 2 bona fide discount points, if eligible.[80]

Finance Charge Items	Amount	Subtotals
Origination Charge/Points (unless excluded as bona fide) Mortgage Broker Fee
Application Fee (if not charged to all applicants)
Loan Administration Fee
Rate-Lock Fee

[78] Test 2, Step 1, Boxes A-F and I (i.e., calculating points and fees for closed-end transactions) and Test 2, Step 2, Box A (i.e., calculating total loan amount for closed-end transactions) are the same tests used for the points and fees calculation for qualified mortgages.

[79] Bona fide third-party charges not retained by creditor or loan originator, or an affiliate of either are excluded, unless these charges are included as PMI premiums, real estate-related fees, or credit-related insurance premiums. (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)(i)(D))

[80] Discount points are bona fide if two conditions are met: 1) They must buy down the interest rate from the pre-discount rate, and 2) they must do so by an amount consistent with industry norms. The number of bona fide discount points that may be excluded depends on the pre-discount rate on the loan. Up to two bona fide discount points may be excluded if the interest rate before payment of those discount points did not exceed APOR by more than one percentage point. Up to one bona fide discount point may be excluded if the interest rate before payment of the discount point did not exceed APOR by more than two percentage points. (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)(i)(E)-(F); 1026.32(b)(3).)

A. Closed-End Transaction 1. Determine the Amount Financed (12 CFR 1026.18(b)) o The full amount of principal repayable under the terms of the note or other loan contract o Minus: Prepaid finance charges (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(23)) o Equals: Amount Financed 2. Deduct from the Amount Financed costs that are included in points and fees under Step 1, Boxes C, D, or F 3. Total Loan Amount (1 minus 2)
B. Open-End Transaction 1. Credit limit for the plan when the account is opened

TEST 2 – POINTS AND FEES (continued)
STEP 3: Perform High-Cost Fee Calculation
Determine which points and fees threshold applies according to the note amount (threshold cut-offs are adjusted annually for inflation) (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)(ii)(A)-(B)) (use the dollar amount corresponding to the year of origination or account opening)
Transactions for $20,000 or more (2014)
A. Calculate 5 percent of the total loan amount (Step 2, Box A (closed-end) or Box B (open-end))
B. Total Points & Fees (Step 1, Box I)
C. Does Box B exceed Box A?	Yes	No
Transactions for less than $20,000 (2014)
A. A. Calculate 8 percent of the total loan amount (Step 2, Box A (closed-end) or Box B (open-end))
B. Annually adjusted dollar amount (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)(ii)(B)) 2014: $1,000 (use the dollar amount corresponding to the year of origination or account opening)
C. Total Points & Fees (Step 1, Box I)
D. Does Box C exceed the lesser of Box A or Box B?	Yes	No

If Yes, the transcaction is a high-cost mortgage. If No, continue to Test 3, Prepayment Penalty.
TEST 3 – Prepayment Penalty
STEP 1: Determine whether the transaction has a prepayment penalty (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(6)(i)-(ii))	Yes	No
If No, STOP HERE, the transaction is not a high-cost mortgage. If Yes, continue to Step 2.
STEP 2: Determine the amount and duration of any prepayment penalty[81]
A. Can prepayment penalties be imposed for longer than 36 months after consummation or account opening?
B. Can prepayment penalties exceed two percent of the amount prepaid?
If Yes, the transaction is a high-cost mortgage and is in violation of the prohibition against prepayment penalties for high-cost mortgages (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(6)). If No, the transaction is not a high-cost mortgage.

[81] If the creditor used an accounting method whereby it kept unearned interest charged for any period between payoff and the end of the month, this would be a prepayment penalty under the rule. In this case, the maximum prepayment penalty would be the maximum amount of interest that could be charged for the "phantom" (post-payoff) accrual period. For this purpose, the examiner would need to assume that the consumer makes the final payoff on the day of the month that yields the longest period of post-payoff interest that could be charged under the terms of the credit contract and is charged interest for the entire month, and that amount would be the maximum unearned interest prepayment penalty.

Truth in Savings Act[1]

Regulation DD (12 CFR Part 1030), which implements the Truth in Savings Act (TISA), became effective in June 1993. An official staff commentary interprets the requirements of Regulation DD (12 CFR 1030 (Supplement I)). Since then, several amendments have been made to Regulation DD and the Staff Commentary, including changes effective January 1, 2010, concerning disclosures of aggregate overdraft and returned item fees on periodic statements and balance disclosures provided to consumers through automated systems. In addition, effective July 6, 2010, clarifications were made to the provisions related to overdraft services (NOTE: The effective date for the clarification to 12 CFR 1030.11(a)(1)(i), requiring the term “Total Overdraft Fees” to be used, was October 1, 2010) (75Fed. Reg. 31673).

The Dodd-Frank Act granted rulemaking authority under the Truth in Savings Act to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) and, with respect to entities under its jurisdiction, granted authority to the CFPB to supervise for and enforce compliance with the Truth in Savings Act and its implementing regulations.[2] In December 2011, the CFPB restated the Federal Reserve’s implementing regulation at 12 CFR Part 1030 (76 Fed. Reg. 79276) (December 21, 2011).

The purpose of Regulation DD is to enable consumers to make informed decisions about their accounts at depository institutions through the use of uniform disclosures. The disclosures aid comparison shopping by informing consumers about the fees, annual percentage yield, interest rate, and other terms for deposit accounts. A consumer is entitled to receive disclosures under all of the following circumstances:

- When an account is opened.
- Upon request.
- When the terms of the account are changed.
- When a periodic statement is sent.
- For most time accounts, before the account matures.

[2] Dodd-Frank Act Secs. 1002(12)(P), 1024(b)-(c), and 1025(b)-(c); 12 U.S.C. Secs. 5481(12)(P), 5514(b)-(c), and 5515(b)-(c). Section 1100B of the Dodd-Frank Act did not grant the CFPB Truth in Savings Act rulemaking authority over credit unions or repeal the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA)’s rulemaking authority over credit unions under 12 U.S.C. 4311. The NCUA’s rule can be found at 12 CFR Part 707.

The regulation also includes requirements on the payment of interest, the methods of calculating the balance on which interest is paid, the calculation of the annual-percentage yield, and advertising.

Coverage – 12 CFR 1030.1

Regulation DD applies to all depository institutions, except credit unions, that offer deposit accounts to residents of any state. Branches of foreign institutions located in the United States are subject to Regulation DD if they offer deposit accounts to consumers. Edge Act and agreement corporations, and agencies of foreign institutions, are not depository institutions for purposes of Regulation DD.

In addition, persons who advertise accounts are subject to the advertising rules. For example, if a deposit broker places an advertisement offering consumers an account at a depository institution, the advertising rules apply to the advertisement, whether the account is to be held by the broker or directly by the consumer.

Definitions – 12 CFR 1030.2

Section 1030.2 defines key terms used in Regulation DD. Among those definitions are the following:

Account – 12 CFR 1030.2(a)

An account is a deposit account at a depository institution that is held by or offered to a consumer. It includes time, demand, savings, and negotiable order of withdrawal accounts. Regulation DD covers interest-bearing as well as noninterest-bearing accounts.

Advertisement – 12 CFR 1030.2(b)

An advertisement is a commercial message, appearing in any medium, that promotes directly or indirectly

- the availability or terms of, or a deposit in, a new account; and
- for purposes of 12 CFR 1030.8(a) (misleading or inaccurate advertisements) and 1030.11 (additional disclosure requirements for institutions advertising the payment of overdrafts), the terms of, or a deposit in, a new or existing account.

An advertisement includes a commercial message in visual, oral, or print media that invites, offers, or otherwise announces generally to prospective customers the availability or terms of, or a deposit in, a consumer account. Examples of advertisements include telephone solicitations and messages on automated teller machine screens.

Annual Percentage Yield – 12 CFR 1030.2(c)

An annual percentage yield is a percentage rate reflecting the total amount of interest paid on an account, based on the interest rate and the frequency of compounding for a 365-day period, or 366-day period during leap years, and calculated according to the rules in Appendix A of Regulation DD. Interest or other earnings are not to be included in the annual percentage yield if the circumstances for determining the interest and other earnings may or may not occur in the future (see Appendix A, footnote 1).

Average Daily Balance Method – 12 CFR 1030.2(d)

The average daily balance method is the application of a periodic rate to the average daily balance in the account for the period. The average daily balance is determined by adding the full amount of principal in the account for each day of the period and dividing that figure by the number of days in the period.

Bonus – 12 CFR 1030.2(f)

A bonus is a premium, gift, award, or other consideration worth more than $10 (whether in the form of cash, credit, merchandise, or any equivalent) given or offered to a consumer during a year in exchange for opening, maintaining, renewing, or increasing an account balance. The term does not include interest, other consideration worth $10 or less given during a year, the waiver or reduction of a fee, or the absorption of expenses.

Business Day – 12 CFR 1030.2(g)

A business day is a calendar day other than a Saturday, a Sunday, or any of the legal public holidays specified in 5 U.S.C. Section 6103(a).

Consumer – 12 CFR 1030.2(h)

A consumer is a natural person who holds an account primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, or to whom such an account is offered. The term does not include accounts held by a natural person on behalf of another in a professional capacity or accounts held by individuals as sole proprietors.

Daily Balance Method – 12 CFR 1030.2(i)

The daily balance method is the application of a daily periodic rate to the full amount of principal in the account each day.

Depository Institution – 12 CFR 1030.2(j)

The terms depository institution and institution are defined in Section 19(b)(1)(A)(i)-(vi) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. Section 461). Credit unions are defined in Section 19(b)(1)(A)(iv). Branches of foreign institutions located in the United States are subject to the regulation if they offer deposit accounts to consumers. Edge Act and agreement corporations, and agencies of foreign institutions, are not depository institutions for purposes of this regulation.

Deposit Broker – 12 CFR 1030.2(k)

A deposit broker is a person who is in the business of placing or facilitating the placement of deposits in an institution, as defined by Section 29(g) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. Section 1831f(g)).

Fixed-Rate Account – 12 CFR 1030.2(l)

A fixed-rate account is an account for which the institution contracts to give at least 30 calendar days' advance written notice of decreases in the interest rate.

Grace Period – 12 CFR 1030.2(m)

A grace period is a period following the maturity of an automatically renewing time account during which the consumer may withdraw funds without being assessed a penalty.

Interest – 12 CFR 1030.2(n)

Interest is any payment to a consumer or to an account for the use of funds in an account, calculated by applying a periodic rate to the balance. Interest does not include the payment of a bonus or other consideration worth $10 or less during a year, the waiver or reduction of a fee, or the absorption of expenses.

Interest Rate – 12 CFR 1030.2(o)

An interest rate is the annual rate of interest paid on an account and does not reflect compounding. For purposes of the account disclosures in 12 CFR 1030.4(b)(1)(i), the interest rate may, but need not, be referred to as the "annual percentage rate" in addition to being referred to as the "interest rate."

Passbook Savings Account – 12 CFR 1030.2(p)

A passbook savings account is a savings account in which the consumer retains a book or other document in which the institution records transactions on the account. Passbook savings accounts include accounts accessed by preauthorized electronic fund transfers to the account. As defined in Regulation E, a preauthorized electronic fund transfer is an electronic fund transfer authorized in advance to recur at substantially regular intervals. Examples include an account that receives direct deposit of Social Security payments. Accounts permitting access by other electronic means are not passbook savings accounts and must comply with the requirements of 12 CFR 1030.6 if statements are sent four or more times a year.

Periodic Statement – 12 CFR 1030.2(q)

A periodic statement is a statement setting forth information about an account (other than a time account or passbook savings account) that is provided to a consumer on a regular basis four or more times a year.

State – 12 CFR 1030.2(r)

A state is a state, the District of Columbia, the commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.

Stepped-Rate Account – 12 CFR 1030.2(s)

A stepped-rate account is an account that has two or more interest rates that take effect in succeeding periods and are known when the account is opened.

Tiered-Rate Account – 12 CFR 1030.2(t)

A tiered-rate account is an account that has two or more interest rates that are applicable to specified balance levels. A requirement to maintain a minimum balance to earn interest does not make an account a tiered-rate account.

Time Account – 12 CFR 1030.2(u)

A time account is an account with a maturity of at least seven days in which the consumer generally does not have a right to make withdrawals for six days after the account is opened, unless the deposit is subject to an early withdrawal penalty of at least seven days' interest on the amount withdrawn.

Variable-Rate Account – 12 CFR 1030.2(v)

A variable-rate account is an account in which the interest rate may change after the account is opened, unless the institution contracts to give at least 30 calendar days' advance written notice of rate decreases.

General Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1030.3

General Requirements – 12 CFR 1030.3(a) and (b)

Section 1030.3 outlines the general requirements for account disclosures and periodic-statement disclosures. Such disclosures are required to be:

- Clear and conspicuous;
- In writing;

- In a form the consumer may keep;
- Clearly identifiable for different accounts, if disclosures for different accounts are combined;
- Reflective of the terms of the legal obligation of the account agreement between the consumer and the depository institution;
- Available in English upon request if the disclosures are made in languages other than English; and
- Consistent in terminology when describing terms or features that are required to be disclosed.

Electronic Disclosures

Regulation DD disclosures may be provided to the consumer in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign Act) (15 U.S.C. Section 7001 et seq.).

The E-Sign Act does not mandate that institutions or consumers use or accept electronic records or signatures. It does, however, permit institutions to satisfy any statutory or regulatory requirements that information, such as Regulation DD disclosures, be provided in writing to a consumer by providing the information electronically after obtaining the consumer’s affirmative consent.

But before the consumer can give consent, the institution must provide the consumer with a clear and conspicuous statement, informing the consumer of:

- Any right or option to have the information provided in paper or non-electronic form.
- The right to withdraw the consent to receive information electronically and the consequences, including fees, of doing so.
- The scope of the consent (whether the consent applies only to a particular transaction or to identified categories of records that may be provided during the course of the parties’ relationship).
- The procedures to withdraw consent and to update information needed to contact the consumer electronically.
- The methods by which a consumer may obtain, upon request, a paper copy of an electronic record after having given consent to receive the information electronically and whether any fee will be charged.

Prior to consenting, the institution must provide the consumer with a statement of the hardware and software requirements for access to and retention of the electronic information. The consumer must consent electronically or confirm consent electronically in a manner that "reasonably demonstrates that the consumer can access information in the electronic form that will be used to provide the information that is the subject of the consent."

After the consent, if an institution changes the hardware or software requirements such that a consumer may be prevented from accessing and retaining information electronically, the institution must notify the consumer of the new requirements and must allow the consumer to withdraw consent without charge.

Under 12 CFR 1030.3(a), the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1030.4(a)(2) (Disclosures Upon Request) and 1030.8 (Advertising) may be provided to the consumer in electronic form without regard to the consumer consent or other provisions of the E-Sign Act, as set forth in those sections of Regulation DD. For example, under 12 CFR 1030.4(a)(2) (Disclosures Upon Request), if a consumer who is not present at the institution makes a request for disclosures, the institution may provide the disclosures electronically if the consumer agrees without regard to the consumer consent or other provisions of the E-Sign Act.

Relation to Regulation E – 12 CFR 1030.3(c)

Disclosures required by and provided in accordance with the Electronic Fund Transfer Act (15 U.S.C. Section 1693 et seq.) and its implementing Regulation E (12 CFR Part 1005), that are also required by Regulation DD, may be substituted for the disclosures required by this regulation. Compliance with Regulation E is deemed to satisfy the disclosure requirements of Regulation DD, such as when:

- An institution changes a term that triggers a notice under Regulation E, and uses the timing and disclosure rules of Regulation E for sending change-in-term notices.
- Consumers add an ATM access feature to an account, and the institution provides disclosures pursuant to Regulation E, including disclosure of fees (see 12 CFR 1005.7).
- An institution, complying with the timing rules of Regulation E, discloses at the same time fees for electronic services (such as for balance inquiry fees at ATMs) required to be disclosed by this regulation but not by Regulation E.
- An institution relies on Regulation E's rules regarding disclosure of limitations on the frequency and amount of electronic fund transfers, including security-related exceptions. But any limitations on intra-institutional transfers to or from the consumer's other accounts during a given time period must be disclosed, even though intra-institutional transfers are exempt from Regulation E.

Other general disclosure requirements include the following:

Multiple Consumers – 12 CFR 1030.3(d)

If an account is held by more than one consumer, the institution may make disclosures to any one of the consumers.

Oral Response to Inquiries – 12 CFR 1030.3(e)

If an institution chooses to provide rate information orally, it must state the annual percentage yield and may state the interest rate. However, the institution may not state any other rate. The advertising rules do not cover an oral response to a rate inquiry.

Rounding and Accuracy Rules for Rates and Yields – 12 CFR 1030.3(f)

The rounding and accuracy requirements are as follows:

- Rounding – The annual percentage yield, the annual percentage yield earned, and the interest rate must be rounded to the nearest one-hundredth of one percentage point (.01%) and expressed to two decimal places. (For account disclosures, the interest rate may be expressed to more than two decimal places.) For example, if an annual percentage yield is calculated at 5.644 percent, it must be rounded down and disclosed as 5.64 percent, or if annual percentage yield is calculated at 5.645 percent, it must be rounded up and disclosed as 5.65 percent.

- Accuracy – The annual percentage yield (and the annual percentage yield earned) will be considered accurate if it is not more that one-twentieth of one percentage point (.05 percent) above or below the annual percentage yield (and the annual percentage yield earned) that are calculated in accordance with Appendix A of Regulation DD.

Account Disclosures – 12 CFR 1030.4

Section 1030.4 covers the delivery and content of account disclosures both at the time an account is open and when requested by a consumer.

Delivery of Account Disclosures – 12 CFR 1030.4(a)

Disclosures at Account Opening – 12 CFR 1030.4(a)(1)

A depository institution must provide account disclosures to a consumer before an account is opened or a service is provided, whichever is earlier. (An institution is deemed to have provided a service when a fee, required to be disclosed, is assessed.) An institution must mail or deliver the account opening disclosures no later than ten business days after the account is opened or the service is provided, whichever is earlier, if the consumer:

- Is not present when the account is opened or the service is provided, and

- Has not received the disclosures.

If a consumer who is not present at the institution uses electronic means (for example, an Internet website) to apply to open an account or to request a service, the institutions must provide the disclosures before opening the account or providing the service.

Disclosures Upon Request – 12 CFR 1030.4(a)(2)

A depository institution must provide full account disclosures, including complete fee schedules, to a consumer upon request. Institutions must comply with all requests for this information, whether or not the requester is an existing customer or a prospective customer. A response to an oral inquiry (by telephone or in person) about rates and yields or fees does not trigger the duty to provide account disclosures. However, when consumers ask for written information about an account (whether by telephone, in person, or by other means), the institution must provide disclosures, unless the account is no longer offered to the public.

If the consumer makes the request in person, the institution must provide the disclosures at that time. If a consumer is not present when the request is made, the institution must mail or deliver the disclosures within a reasonable time after it receives the request. Ten business days is considered a reasonable time for responding to requests for account information that a consumer does not make in person, including requests made by electronic means (such as by electronic mail).

If a consumer who is not present at the institution makes a request for account disclosures, including a request made by telephone, email, or via the institution's website, the institution may send the disclosures in paper form or, if the consumer agrees, may provide the disclosures electronically, such as to an email address that the consumer provides for that purpose, or on the institution's website, without regard to the consumer consent or other provisions of the E-Sign Act. The institution is not required to provide, nor is the consumer required to agree to receive, the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1030.4(a)(2) in electronic form.

When providing disclosures upon the request of a consumer, the institution has several choices of how to specify the interest rate and annual percentage yield. The institution may disclose the rate and yield offered:

- Within the most recent seven calendar days;
- As of an identified date; or
- Currently by providing a telephone number for consumers to call.

Further, when providing disclosures upon the request of a consumer, the institution may state the maturity of a time account as a term rather than a date. Describing the maturity of a time account as "1 year" or "6 months," for example, illustrates a statement of the maturity as a term rather than a date ("January 10, 2010").

Content of Account Disclosures – 12 CFR 1030.4(b)

Account disclosures must include, as applicable, information on the following (see Appendix A and B of Regulation DD for information on the annual percentage yield calculation and for model clauses for account disclosures and sample forms):

Rate Information – 12 CFR 1030.4(b)(1)

An institution must disclose both the "annual percentage yield" and the "interest rate," using those terms.

For fixed-rate accounts, an institution must disclose the period of time that the interest rate will be in effect.

For variable-rate accounts, an institution must disclose all of the following:

- The fact that the interest rate and annual percentage yield may change.
- How the interest rate is determined.
- The frequency with which the interest rate may change.
- Any limitation on the amount the interest rate may change.

Compounding and Crediting – 12 CFR 1030.4(b)(2)

An institution must disclose the frequency with which interest is compounded and credited. In cases where consumers will forfeit interest if they close an account before accrued interest is credited, an institution must state that interest will not be paid.

Balance Information – 12 CFR 1030.4(b)(3)

An institution must disclose the following information about account balances:

- Minimum balance requirements – An institution must disclose any minimum balance requirement to:
  - Open the account;
  - Avoid the imposition of a fee; or
  - Obtain the annual percentage yield disclosed.

  In addition, the institution must disclose how the balance is determined to avoid the imposition of a fee or to obtain the annual percentage yield.

- Balance computation method – An explanation of the balance-computation method, specified in 12 CFR 1030.7 of Regulation DD, that is used to calculate interest on the account. An institution may use different methods or periods to calculate minimum balances for purposes of imposing a fee and accruing interest. The institution must disclose each method and corresponding period.

- When interest begins to accrue – An institution must state when interest begins to accrue on noncash deposits.

Fees – 12 CFR 1030.4(b)(4)

An institution must disclose the amount of any fee that may be imposed in connection with the account (or an explanation of how the fee will be determined) and the conditions under which the fee may be imposed. Examples of fees that must be disclosed are:

- Maintenance fees, such as monthly service fees.

- Fees to open or to close an account.

- Fees related to deposits or withdrawals, such as fees for use of the institution's ATMs.

- Fees for special services, such as stop-payment fees.

Institutions must state if fees that may be assessed against an account are tied to other accounts at the institution. For example, if an institution ties the fees payable on a NOW account to balances held in the NOW account and a savings account, the NOW account disclosures must state that fact and explain how the fee is determined.

An institution must specify the categories of transactions for which an overdraft fee may be imposed. For example, it is sufficient to state that the fee applies to overdrafts "created by check, in-person withdrawal, ATM withdrawal, or other electronic means." However, it is insufficient to state that a fee applies "for overdraft items."

Transaction Limitations – 12 CFR 1030.4(b)(5)

An institution must disclose any limitations on the number or dollar amount of withdrawals or deposits. Examples of such limitations include:

- Limits on the number of checks that may be written on an account within a given time period.

- Limits on withdrawals or deposits during the term of a time account.

- Limits under Regulation D (Reserve Requirements on Depository Institutions) on the number of withdrawals permitted from money market deposit accounts by check to third parties each month.

Features of Time Accounts – 12 CFR 1030.4(b)(6)

For time accounts, an institution must disclose information about the following features:

- Time requirements – An institution must state the maturity date and, for "callable" time accounts, the date or circumstances under which an institution may redeem a time account at the institution's option.

- Early withdrawal penalties – An institution must state the following:

  - If a penalty will or may be imposed for early withdrawal.

  - How it is calculated.

  - The conditions for its assessment.

  An institution may, but does not need to, use the term "penalty" to describe the loss of interest that consumers may incur for early withdrawal of funds from an account.

  Examples of early withdrawal penalties include:

  - Monetary penalties, such as "$10.00" or "seven days' interest plus accrued but uncredited interest."

  - Adverse changes to terms such as a lowering of the interest rate, annual percentage yield, or compounding frequency for funds remaining on deposit.

  - Reclamation of bonuses.

- Withdrawal of interest prior to maturity – An institution must disclose the following, as applicable:

  - A statement that the annual percentage yield assumes interest remains on deposit until maturity and that a withdrawal will reduce earnings for accounts where:

    - Compounding occurs during the term; and

    - Interest may be withdrawn prior to maturity; or

  - A statement that interest cannot remain on deposit and that payout of interest is mandatory for accounts where:

  - The stated maturity is greater than one year;
  - Interest is not compounded on an annual or more frequent basis;
  - Interest is required to be paid out at least annually; and
  - The annual percentage yield is determined in accordance with Section E of Appendix A of Regulation DD.

- Renewal policies – An institution must state whether an account will, or will not, renew automatically at maturity. If it will, the statement must indicate whether a grace period will be provided and, if so, must indicate the length of that period. For accounts that do not renew automatically, the statement must indicate whether interest will be paid after maturity if the consumer does not renew the account.

Bonuses – 12 CFR 1030.4(b)(7)

For bonuses, an institution must disclose:

- The amount or type of any bonus.
- When the bonus will be provided.
- Any minimum balance and time requirements to obtain the bonus.

Subsequent Disclosures – 12 CFR 1030.5

Section 1030.5 covers the required disclosures when the terms of an account change, resulting in a negative effect on the consumer. In addition, this section covers the required disclosures for both time accounts that automatically renew and have a maturity longer than one month and time accounts that do not renew automatically and have a maturity of longer than one year.

Change in Terms – 12 CFR 1030.5(a)

Advance Notice Required – 12 CFR 1030.5(a)(1)

An institution must give advance notice to affected consumers of any change in a term that is required to be disclosed if the change may reduce the annual percentage yield or adversely affect the consumer. The notice must include the effective date of the change and must be mailed or delivered at least 30 calendar days before the effective date of the change.

No Notice Required – 12 CFR 1030.5(a)(2)

An institution is not required to provide a notice for any of the following changes:

- For variable-rate accounts, any change in the interest rate and corresponding changes in the annual percentage yield.
- Any changes in fees assessed for check printing.
- For short-term time accounts, any changes in any term for accounts with maturities of one month or less.
- The imposition of account maintenance or activity fees that previously had been waived for a consumer when the consumer was employed by the depository institution, but who is no longer employed there.
- The expiration of a one-year period that was part of a promotion, described in the account opening disclosures, for example, to "waive $4.00 monthly service charges for one year."

Notice for Time Accounts Longer Than One Month That Renew Automatically – 12 CFR 1030.5(b)

For automatically renewing time accounts with maturities longer than one month, an institution must provide different disclosures depending on whether the maturity is longer than one year or whether the maturity is one year or less. The institution must provide all disclosures before maturity. The requirements are summarized in the following pages, including in Table 1.

Table 1

Subsequent Notice Requirements for Time Accounts
Maturity	Automatically Renewable (Rollover)	Non-automatically Renewable (Non-rollover)
> One Year	Timing (a) 30 calendar days before maturity, or (b) 20 calendar days before end of grace period, if a grace period is at least 5 calendar days Content (a) Date existing account matures (b) Disclosures for a new account (12 CFR 1030.4(b)) If terms have not been determined, indicate this fact, state the date when they will be determined, and provide a telephone number to obtain the terms (12 CFR 1030.5(b)(1)).	Timing 10 calendar days before maturity Content Maturity date, and whether or not interest will be paid after maturity (12 CFR 1030.5(c))
> One Month and < One Year	Timing (a) 30 calendar days before maturity, or (b) 20 calendar days before end of grace period, if a grace period is at least 5 calendar days Content (a) Disclosures required under 12 CFR 1030.5(b)(1), or (b) Date of maturities of existing and new account, any change in terms, and a difference in terms between new account and ones of existing account. If terms have not been determined, indicate this fact, state the date when they will be determined, and provide a telephone number to obtain the terms (12 CFR 1030.5(b)(2)).	No subsequent notice required

Maturities Longer Than One Year – 12 CFR 1030.5(b)(1)

If the maturity is longer than one year, the institution must provide the date the existing account matures and the required account disclosures for a new account, as described in 12 CFR 1030.4(b). If the interest rate and annual percentage yield that will be paid for the new account are unknown when disclosures are provided, the institution must state the following:

- That those rates have not yet been determined.
- The date when they will be determined.
- A telephone number for consumers to call to obtain the interest rate and the annual percentage yield for the new account.

Maturities Longer Than One Month but No More Than One Year – 12 CFR 1030.5(b)(2)

If the maturity is longer than one month but less than or equal to one year, the institution must either:

- Provide the disclosures required in 12 CFR 1030.5(b)(1) for accounts longer than one year; or
- Disclose to the consumer:
    - The date the existing account matures and the new maturity date if the account is renewed;
    - The interest rate and the annual percentage yield for the new account if they are known. If the rates have not yet been determined, the institution must disclose:
        - The date when they will be determined; and
        - A telephone number the consumer may call to obtain the interest rate and the annual percentage yield for the new account; and
    - Any difference in the terms of the new account as compared to the terms required to be disclosed for the existing account.

Delivery – 12 CFR 1030.5(b)

The institution must mail or deliver all disclosures at least 30 calendar days before maturity of the existing account. Alternatively, the institution may mail or deliver the disclosures at least 20 calendar days before the end of the grace period on the existing account, provided a grace period of at least five calendar days is allowed.

Notice for Time Accounts Longer Than One Year That Do Not Renew Automatically – 12 CFR 1030.5(c)

For time accounts with maturity longer than one year that do not renew automatically at maturity, an institution must disclose to consumers the maturity date and whether interest will be paid after maturity. The institution must mail or deliver the disclosures at least 10 calendar days before maturity of the existing account. The requirements are summarized in Table 1.

Periodic Statement Disclosures – 12 CFR 1030.6

Regulation DD does not require institutions to provide periodic statements. However, for institutions that mail or deliver periodic statements, 12 CFR 1030.6 sets forth specific information that must be included in a periodic statement.

General Requirements – 12 CFR 1030.6(a)

The statement must include the following disclosures:

Annual Percentage Yield Earned – 12 CFR 1030.6(a)(1)

An institution must state the annual percentage yield earned during the statement period, using that term, and calculated according to Appendix A of Regulation DD.

Amount of Interest – 12 CFR 1030.6(a)(2)

An institution must state the dollar amount of interest earned during the statement period, whether or not it was credited. In disclosing interest earned for the period, an institution must use the term "interest" or terminology such as:

- "Interest paid," to describe interest that has been credited; or
- "Interest accrued" or "interest earned," to indicate that interest is not yet credited.

Fees Imposed – 12 CFR 1030.6(a)(3)

An institution must report any fees that are required to be disclosed and that were debited to the account during the statement period, even if assessed for an earlier period. The fees must be itemized by type and dollar amounts. When fees of the same type are imposed more than once in a statement period, an institution may itemize each fee separately or group the fees together and disclose a total dollar amount for all fees of that type. When fees of the same type are grouped together, the description must make clear that the dollar figure represents more than a single fee, for example, "total fees for checks written this period." The Staff Commentary provides examples of fees that may not be grouped together. For example, an institution must separately identify whether a fee was for the payment of an overdraft or for returning the item unpaid.

Total overdraft and returned item fees, if any, must also be disclosed on the periodic statement. An institution must provide totals for fees for the payment of overdrafts and totals for items returned unpaid, both for the statement period and for the calendar year to date. See 12 CFR 1030.11(a)(1) and (2). (The institution may, however, continue to itemize overdraft and returned item fees.)

Length of Period – 12 CFR 1030.6(a)(4)

An institution must indicate the total number of days in the statement period, or the beginning and ending dates of the period. Institutions providing the beginning and ending dates of the period must make clear whether both dates are included in the period.

Combined Statements (Staff Commentary 12 CFR 1030.6(a)-3)

Institutions may provide information about an account (for example, a Money Market Deposit Account) on the periodic statement for another account (such as a Negotiable Order of Withdrawal account) without triggering the disclosures required by this section, as long as:

- The information is limited to the account number, the type of account, or balance information; and
- The institution also provides a periodic statement complying with this section for each account.

Aggregate Fee Disclosure – 12 CFR 1030.6(a)(5)

- If an institution charges a consumer overdraft and returned item fees, it must disclose them on the consumer's periodic statement as required by 12 CFR 1030.11(a).

Special Rule for Average Daily Balance Method – 12 CFR 1030.6(b)

Section 1030.6 has special periodic statement requirements for an institution using the average daily balance method and calculating interest for a period other than the statement period. In these situations, an institution must calculate and disclose the annual percentage yield earned and amount of interest earned based on the time period used rather than the statement period. In addition, when disclosing the length of period requirement on the periodic statement, an institution must state this information for the statement period as well as the interest-calculation period. See Staff Commentary for examples.

Payment of Interest – 12 CFR 1030.7

Section 1030.7 covers the payment of interest, including how to determine the balance on which to pay interest, the daily periodic rate to use, and the date interest begins to accrue.

Permissible Methods to Determine Balance to Calculate Interest – 12 CFR 1030.7(a)(1)

An institution must calculate interest on the full amount of principal in an account for each day by using one of the following methods:

- Daily balance method, where the daily periodic rate is applied to the full amount of principal in the account each day.

- Average daily balance method, where a periodic rate is applied to the average daily balance in the account for the period. The average daily balance is determined by adding the full amount of principal in the account for each day of the period and dividing that figure by the number of days in the period.

The following are prohibited calculation methods:

- Ending-balance method, where interest is paid on the balance in the account at the end of the period.

- Low-balance method, where interest is paid based on the lowest balance in the account for any day in that period.

- Investable-balance method, where interest is paid on a percentage of the balance, excluding the amount set aside for reserve requirements.

Use of 365-day basis (Staff Commentary 12 CFR 1030.7(a)(1)-2)

Institutions may apply a daily periodic rate greater than 1/365 of the interest rate – such as 1/360 of the interest rate – as long as it is applied 365 days a year.

Leap Year (Staff Commentary 12 CFR 1030.7(a)(1)-4)

Institutions may apply a daily rate of 1/366 or 1/365 of the interest rate for 366 days in a leap year, if the account will earn interest for February 29.

Maturity of Time Accounts (Staff Commentary 12 CFR 1030.7(a)(1)-5)

Institutions are not required to pay interest after time accounts mature.

Dormant Accounts (Staff Commentary 12 CFR 1030.7(a)(1)-6)

Institutions must pay interest on funds in an account, even if inactivity or the infrequency of transactions would permit the institution to consider the account to be “inactive” or “dormant” (or similar status) as defined by state, other laws, or the account contract.

Permissible Methods to Determine Minimum Balance to Earn Interest – 12 CFR 1030.7(a)(2)

If an institution requires a minimum balance to earn interest, it must use the same method to determine the required minimum balance as it uses to determine the balance on which interest is calculated. For example, if an institution requires a $300 minimum balance that would be determined by using the average daily balance method, then it must calculate interest based on the average daily balance method. Further, an institution may use an additional method that is unequivocally beneficial to the consumer.

Balances Below the Minimum (Staff Commentary 12 CFR 1030.7(a)(2)-1 and 2)

An institution that requires a minimum balance may choose not to pay interest for days or period when the balance drops below the required minimum, whether they use the daily-balance method or the average daily balance method to calculate interest.

Paying on Full Balance (Staff Commentary 12 CFR 1030.7(a)(2)-4)

Institutions must pay interest on the full balance in the account that meets the required minimum balance. For example, if $300 is the minimum daily balance required to earn interest, and a consumer deposits $500, the institution must pay the stated interest rate on the full $500 and not just on $200.

Minimum Balance Not Affecting Interest (Staff Commentary 12 CFR 1030.7(a)(2)-7)

Institutions may use the daily balance, average daily balance, or any other computation method to calculate minimum-balance requirements that do not involve the payment of interest. For example, an institution may use any computation method to compute minimum balances for assessing fees.

Compounding and Crediting Policies – 12 CFR 1030.7(b)

This section does not require institutions to compound or credit interest at any particular frequency. Institutions choosing to compound interest may compound or credit interest annually, semi-annually, quarterly, monthly, daily, continuously, or on any other basis.

An institution may choose not to pay accrued interest if consumers close an account prior to the date accrued interest is credited, as long as the institution has disclosed this practice in the initial account disclosures.

Date Interest Begins to Accrue – 12 CFR 1030.7(c)

Interest shall begin to accrue not later than the business day specified for interest-bearing accounts in Section 606 of the Expedited Funds Availability Act, which states:

> "… interest shall accrue on funds deposited in an interest-bearing account at a depository institution beginning not later than the business day on which the depository institution receives provisional credit for such funds."

Interest shall accrue until the day funds are withdrawn.

Advertising – 12 CFR 1030.8

Section 1030.8 contains account advertising requirements, including overall general rules and rules for special account features. In addition, the section describes advertising involving certain types of media and in-house posters that are exempt from Regulation DD's advertising requirements.

General Advertising Rules – 12 CFR 1030.8(a) and (b)

Misleading or Inaccurate Advertising – 12 CFR 1030.8(a)

An institution may not advertise in a way that is misleading or inaccurate or misrepresents its deposit contract. In addition, an advertisement may not use the word "profit" in referring to interest paid on an account.

An institution's advertisement may not refer to or describe an account as "free" or "no cost" (or contain a similar term such as "fees waived") if a maintenance or activity fee may be imposed on the account. Examples of such maintenance or activity fees include:

- Any fee imposed when a minimum-balance requirement is not met, or when consumers exceed a specified number of transactions.
- Transaction and service fees that consumers reasonably expect to be imposed on a regular basis.
- A flat fee, such as a monthly service fee.
- Fees imposed to deposit, withdraw, or transfer funds, including per-check or per-transaction charges (for example, 25 cents for each withdrawal, whether by check or in person).

Examples of fees that are not maintenance or activity fees include:

- Fees not required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1030.4(b)(4).
- Check-printing fees.
- Balance-inquiry fees.
- Stop-payment fees and fees associated with checks returned unpaid.

- Fees assessed against a dormant account.

- Fees for ATM or electronic transfer services (such as preauthorized transfers or home banking services) not required to obtain an account.

If an account (or a specific account service) is free only for a limited period of time (for example, for one year following the account opening) the account (or service) may be advertised as free if the time period is also stated.

If an electronic advertisement (such as an advertisement appearing on a website) displays a triggering term (such as a bonus or annual percentage yield), described elsewhere in 12 CFR 1030.8, the advertisement must clearly refer the consumer to the location where the additional required information begins. For example, an advertisement that includes a bonus or annual percentage yield may be accompanied by a link that directly takes the consumer to the additional information. As discussed in 12 CFR 1030.3(a), electronic advertising disclosures may be provided to the consumer in electronic form without regard to the consumer consent or other provisions of the E-Sign Act.

The Staff Commentary provides the following examples of advertisements that would ordinarily be misleading, inaccurate, or misrepresent the deposit contract:

- Representing an overdraft service as a “line of credit,” unless the service is subject to Regulation Z, 12 CFR Part 1026.

- Representing that the institution will honor all checks or authorize payment of all transactions that overdraw an account, with or without a specified dollar limit, when the institution retains discretion at any time not to honor checks or authorize transactions.

- Representing that consumers with an overdrawn account are allowed to maintain a negative balance when the terms of the account’s overdraft service require consumers promptly to return the deposit account to a positive balance.

- Describing an institution’s overdraft service solely as protection against bounced checks when the institution also permits overdrafts for a fee for overdrawing accounts by other means, such as ATM withdrawals, debit card transactions, or other electronic fund transfers.

- Advertising an account-related service for which the institution charges a fee in an advertisement that also uses the word “free” or “no cost” (or a similar term) to describe the account, unless the advertisement clearly and conspicuously indicates that there is a cost associated with the service. If the fee is a maintenance or activity fee under 12 CFR 1030.8(a)(2), however, an advertisement may not describe the account as “free” or “no cost” (or contain a similar term) even if the fee is disclosed in the advertisement.

Advertising Rate Information – 12 CFR 1030.8(b)

When an institution states a rate of return in an advertisement, it must do the following:

- State the rate as an "annual percentage yield," using that term.
- If the advertisement uses the abbreviation "APY," state the term "annual percentage yield" at least once in the advertisement.
- If the advertisement uses the term "interest rate," use the term in conjunction with, but not more conspicuously than, the related annual percentage yield.
- It may not state any other rate except "annual percentage yield" or "interest rate".
- Round the annual percentage yield, the annual percentage yield earned, and the interest rate to the nearest one-hundredth of one percentage point (.01%) and express them to two decimal places.

An advertisement for a tiered-rate account that states an annual percentage yield must also state the annual percentage yield for each tier, along with corresponding minimum-balance requirements.

An advertisement for a stepped-rate account that states an interest rate must state all the interest rates and the time period that each rate is in effect.

Required Advertising for Special Account Features – 12 CFR 1030.8(c)

If an institution advertises an annual percentage yield for a product and the product includes one of the features listed in 12 CFR 1030.8(c)(1)-(6), then the institution must clearly and conspicuously disclose the information outlined in 12 CFR 1030.8(c)(1)-(6) as noted below. However, these requirements do not necessarily apply if the situation falls under the exemptions of 12 CFR 1030.8(e).

Variable Rates – 12 CFR 1030.8(c)(1)

For variable-rate accounts, the advertisement must state that the rate may change after the account is opened.

Time Annual Percentage Yield (APY) is Offered – 12 CFR 1030.8(c)(2)

The advertisement must include the period of time during which the annual percentage yield will be offered. Alternatively, the advertisement may state that the annual percentage yield is accurate as of a specified date. The date must be recent in relation to the publication or media broadcast used for the advertisement, taking into account the particular circumstances or production deadlines involved. An advertisement may refer to the annual percentage yield as being accurate as of the date of publication, if the date is on the publication itself.

Minimum Balance – 12 CFR 1030.8(c)(3)

For accounts that have a required minimum balance, the advertisement must state the minimum balance required to obtain the advertised annual percentage yield. For tiered-rate accounts, the advertisement must state the minimum balance required for each tier in close proximity and with equal prominence to the applicable annual percentage yield.

Minimum Opening Deposit – 12 CFR 1030.8(c)(4)

For an account that requires a minimum deposit to open the account, the advertisement must state the minimum deposit required to open the account, if it is greater than the minimum balance necessary to obtain the advertised annual percentage yield.

Effect of Fees – 12 CFR 1030.8(c)(5)

An advertisement must state that fees could reduce the earnings on the account. This requirement only applies to maintenance or activity fees.

Features of Time Accounts – 12 CFR 1030.8(c)(6)

For time accounts, the advertisement must include:

- Term of the account.
- Early withdrawal penalties – a statement that a penalty will or may be imposed for early withdrawal.
- Required interest payouts – a statement that interest cannot remain on deposit and that payout of interest is mandatory for non-compounding time accounts with the following features:
  - The stated maturity is greater than one year.
  - Interest is not compounded on an annual or more frequent basis.
  - Interest is required to be paid out at least annually.
  - The annual percentage yield is determined in accordance with Section E of Appendix A of Regulation DD.

Bonuses – 12 CFR 1030.8(d)

If an institution states a bonus in an advertisement, the advertisement must state clearly and conspicuously the following information, if applicable to the advertised product:

- "Annual percentage yield," using that term.
- Time requirement to obtain the bonus.
- Minimum balance required to obtain the bonus.
- Minimum balance required to open the account, if it is greater than the minimum balance necessary to obtain the bonus.
- Time when the bonus will be provided.

However, these requirements do not necessarily apply if the situation falls under the exemptions of 12 CFR 1030.8(e). In addition, general statements such as "bonus checking" or "get a bonus when you open a checking account" do not trigger the bonus disclosures.

Exemption for Certain Advertisements – 12 CFR 1030.8(e)

Section 1030.8(e) exempts certain types of media and certain indoor signs from some of the section's advertising rules.

Media Exemptions – 12 CFR 1030.8(e)(1)

If an institution advertises through one of the following media, the advertisement does not need to include information required under certain 12 CFR 1030.8 rules, as outlined below:

- Exempted media
  - Broadcast or electronic media, such as television or radio. However, the exemption does not extend to Internet and email advertisements.
  - Outdoor media, such as billboards.
  - Telephone response machines. However, solicitations for a tiered-rate account made through telephone-response machines must provide the annual percentage yields and the balance requirements applicable to each tier.
- Exempted advertising requirements
  - Information required for special account features involving variable rates, time an annual percentage yield is offered, minimum opening deposit, effect of fees, and early withdrawal penalties for time accounts.
  - When bonuses are advertised, information required related to a minimum balance to open an account (if it is greater than the minimum balance necessary to obtain the bonus) and related to when a time the bonus will be provided.

Indoor Signs – 12 CFR 1030.8(e)(2)

If an institution posts account information on signs inside its premises (or the premises of a deposit broker), the postings are exempt from the advertising requirements for:

- Permissible rates;
- When additional disclosures are required;
- Bonuses; and
- Certain media exemption.

If a sign, falling under this exemption, states a rate of return, it must:

- State the rate as an "annual percentage yield," using that term or the term "APY." The sign must not state any other rate, although the related interest rate may be stated.
- Contain a statement advising consumers to contact an employee for further information about applicable fees and terms.

Indoor signs include advertisements displayed on computer screens, banners, preprinted posters, and chalk or peg boards. Any advertisement inside the premises that can be retained by a consumer (such as a brochure or a printout from a computer) is not an indoor sign.

Additional Disclosures in Connection With the Payment of Overdrafts – 12 CFR 1030.8(f)

In addition to the general requirement that advertisements not be misleading, an institution that promotes the payment of overdrafts in an advertisement must also include in the advertisement the disclosures required under 12 CFR 1030.11(b).

Record Retention – 12 CFR 1030.9(c)

Section 1030.9(c) covers the record retention requirements in order for an institution to demonstrate compliance with Regulation DD, including rate information, advertising, and providing disclosures to consumers at the appropriate time (including upon a consumer's request).

Timing

Under Regulation DD, an institution must retain records that evidence compliance for a minimum of two years after the date that disclosures are required to be made or an action is required to be taken. In addition, if required by its supervising agency, an institution may need to retain records for a longer time period.

An institution may demonstrate its compliance by:

- Establishing and maintaining procedures for paying interest and providing timely disclosures.
- Retaining sample disclosures for each type of account offered to consumers such as account-opening disclosures, copies of advertisements, and change-in-term notices; and information regarding the interest rates and annual percentage yields offered.

Methods of Retaining Evidence

An institution must be able to reconstruct the required disclosures and other required actions, but does not need to maintain hard copies of disclosures and other records. It may keep records evidencing compliance in microfilm, microfiche, or other methods that reproduce records accurately (including computer files).

Payment of Interest

An institution must retain sufficient rate and balance information to permit the verification of interest paid on an account, including the payment of interest on the full principal balance.

12 CFR 1030.10 – [Reserved]

Additional Disclosure Requirements for Overdraft Services – 12 CFR 1030.11

Section 1030.11 contains periodic statement and advertising requirements for certain discretionary overdraft services. The requirements address concerns about the uniformity and adequacy of information provided to consumers when they overdraw their deposit accounts. Specifically, they address certain types of services – sometimes referred to as “bounced-check protection” or “courtesy overdraft protection” – which institutions offer to pay consumers’ checks and other items when there are insufficient funds in the account. The requirements apply to all depository institutions, regardless of whether they promote their overdraft services.

Periodic Statement Disclosures – 12 CFR 1030.11(a)

Disclosure of Total Fees – 12 CFR 1030.11(a)(1)

The institution must disclose on its periodic statements (if it provides periodic statements) separate totals for the statement period and for the calendar year to date for:

- The total dollar amount for all fees or charges imposed on the account for paying checks or other items when there are insufficient or unavailable funds and the account becomes overdrawn, using the term “Total Overdraft Fees” (the requirement to use the term “Total Overdraft Fees” is effective October 1, 2010); and

- The total dollar amount for all fees or charges imposed on the account for returning items unpaid.

The aggregate fee disclosures must be placed in close proximity to the disclosure of any fee(s) that may be imposed in connection with the account and must use a substantially similar format as shown below: (see Appendix B of the regulation). The table must contain lines (or similar markings such as asterisks) inside the table to divide the columns and rows.

	Total for this period	Total year-to-date
Total Overdraft Fees	$60.00	$150.00
Total Returned Item Fees	0.00	30.00

The total dollar amount for paying overdrafts includes per-item fees as well as interest charges, daily or other periodic fees, or fees charged for maintaining an account in overdraft status, whether the overdraft is by check, debit card transaction, or by other transaction type. It also includes fees charged when there are insufficient funds because previously deposited funds are subject to a hold or are uncollected. It does not include fees for transferring funds from another account of the consumer to avoid an overdraft, or fees charged under a service subject to Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.

The total dollar amount for all fees for returning items unpaid must include all fees charged to the account for dishonoring or returning checks or other items drawn on the account. The institution must disclose separate totals for the statement period and for the calendar year-to-date. Fees imposed when deposited items are returned are not included. Institutions may use terminology such as ‘‘returned item fee’’ or ‘‘NSF fee’’ to describe fees for returning items unpaid.

In the case of waived fees, an institution may provide a statement for the current period reflecting that fees imposed during a previous period were waived and credited to the account. Institutions may, but are not required to, reflect the adjustment in the total for the calendar year-to-date and in the applicable statement period. For example, if an institution assesses a fee in January and refunds the fee in February, the institution could disclose a year-to-date total reflecting the amount credited, but it should not affect the total disclosed for the February statement period, because the fee was not assessed in the February statement period. If an institution assesses and then waives and credits a fee within the same cycle, the institution may, at its option, reflect the adjustment in the total disclosed for fees imposed during the current statement period and for the total for the calendar year-to-date. Thus, if the institution assesses and waives the fee in the February statement period, the February fee total could reflect a total net of the waived fee.

The disclosures under this section must be included on periodic statements provided by an institution starting the first statement period that began after January 1, 2010. For example, if a consumer’s statement period typically closes on the 15th of each month, an institution must provide the disclosures required by this section on subsequent periodic statements for that consumer beginning with the statement reflecting the period from January 16, 2010, to February 15, 2010.

Advertising Disclosures for Overdraft Services – 12 CFR 1030.11(b)

Disclosures – 12 CFR 1030.11(b)(1)

Unless an exception in 12 CFR 1030.11(b)(2)-(4) applies, any advertisement promoting the payment of overdrafts must disclose in a clear and conspicuous manner all of the following:

- The fee(s) for the payment of each overdraft.
- The categories of transactions for which a fee may be imposed for paying an overdraft.
- The time period by which the consumer must repay or cover any overdraft.
- The circumstances under which the institution will not pay an overdraft. It is sufficient to state, as applicable, "Whether your overdrafts will be paid is discretionary, and we reserve the right not to pay. For example, we typically do not pay overdrafts if your account is not in good standing, or you are not making regular deposits, or you have too many overdrafts."

Communications Not Subject to Additional Advertising Disclosures – 12 CFR 1030.11(b)(2)

The advertising disclosure rules for overdraft services do not apply in the following circumstances:

- An advertisement promoting a service where the institution's payment of overdrafts would be agreed upon in writing and subject to Regulation Z (12 CFR Part 1026).
- A communication by an institution about the payment of overdrafts in response to a consumer-initiated inquiry about deposit accounts or overdrafts. However, providing information about the payment of overdrafts in response to a balance inquiry made through an automated system, such as a telephone response machine, ATM, or an institution's Internet site, is not a response to a consumer-initiated inquiry that is exempt from the advertising disclosures.
- An advertisement made through broadcast or electronic media, such as television or radio. However, this exception does not apply to advertisements posted on an institution's Internet site, on an ATM screen, provided on telephone-response machines, or sent by electronic mail.
- An advertisement made on outdoor media, such as billboards.
- An ATM receipt.

- An in-person discussion with a consumer.
- Disclosures required by federal or other applicable law.
- Information included on a periodic statement or on a notice informing a consumer about a specific overdrawn item or the amount the account is overdrawn.
- A term in a deposit account agreement discussing the institution’s right to pay overdrafts.
- A notice provided to a consumer, such as at an ATM, that completing a requested transaction may trigger a fee for overdrawing an account, or a general notice that items overdrawing an account may trigger a fee.
- Informational or educational materials concerning the payment of overdrafts if the materials do not specifically describe the institution’s overdraft service.
- An opt-out or opt-in notice regarding the institution’s payment of overdrafts or provision of discretionary overdraft services.

Exception for ATM Screens and Telephone Response Machines – 12 CFR 1030.11(b)(3)

Any advertisement made on an ATM screen or using a telephone response machine is not required to include the following:

- The categories of transactions for which a fee may be imposed for paying an overdraft.
- The circumstances under which the institution will not pay an overdraft.

Exception for Indoor Signs – 12 CFR 1030.11(b)(4)

The advertising requirement to disclose fees for the payment of each overdraft does not apply to advertisements for the payment of overdrafts on indoor signs, if the indoor sign contains a clear and conspicuous statement that:

- Fees may apply; and
- Consumers should contact an employee for further information about applicable fees and terms.

An indoor sign covered under this exception is one described in 12 CFR 1030.8(e)(2) and the accompanying Staff Commentary. In addition to the Staff Commentary’s examples of advertisements that are not considered indoor signs, an ATM screen is not considered an indoor sign for purposes of the overdraft disclosure requirements.

Account Balance Disclosures – 12 CFR 1030.11(c)

In general, 12 CFR 1030.11(c) covers how an institution displays a consumer's account balance information on automated systems, such as an ATM, when the institution will advance additional funds to cover insufficient or unavailable funds in a consumer's account. Specifically, if an institution discloses balance information to a consumer through an automated system, the disclosed balance may not include additional amounts that the institution may provide to cover an item when there are insufficient or unavailable funds in the consumer's account. This requirement covers additional funds that an institution may provide under a service provided at the institution's own discretion, a service subject to Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026), or a service to transfer funds from another account of the consumer. However, the institution may, at its option, disclose an additional, second account balance that would include funds provided by the institution, if the institution prominently states that any such second balance includes funds that the institution may provide to cover insufficient or unavailable funds in the consumer's account and, if applicable, that additional funds are not available for all transactions.

Additional amounts that may be included in balance. The balance may, but need not, include funds that are deposited in the consumer's account, such as from a check, that are not yet made available for withdrawal in accordance with the funds availability rules under Regulation CC (12 CFR 229). In addition, the balance may, but need not, include funds that are held by the institution to satisfy a prior obligation of the consumer (for example, to cover a hold for an ATM or debit card transaction that has been authorized but for which the bank has not settled).

Retail sweep programs. When disclosing a transaction account balance, an institution is not required to exclude funds from the consumer's balance that may be transferred from another account pursuant to a retail sweep account. In a retail sweep program, an institution establishes two legally distinct subaccounts, a transaction subaccount and a savings subaccount. These two accounts together make up the consumer's account. Retail sweep account programs typically:

- Comply with the Federal Reserve Board's Regulation D,
- Prevent direct access by the consumer to the non-transaction subaccount that is part of the retail sweep program, and
- Document on the consumer's periodic statements the account balance as the combined balance in the subaccounts.

Disclosure of second balance. If an institution discloses additional balances that include funds that may be provided to cover an overdraft, the institution must prominently state that the additional balance(s) includes additional overdraft funds. The institution may not simply state, for instance, that the second balance is the consumer's ''available balance,'' or contains ''available funds.'' Rather, the institution should provide enough information to convey that the second balance includes funds that the institution may provide to cover insufficient or unavailable funds. For example, the institution may state that the balance includes ''overdraft funds.'' Where a consumer has not opted into (or as applicable, has opted out of) the institution's discretionary overdraft service, any additional balance disclosed should not include funds that otherwise might be available under that service. Where a consumer has not opted into (or as applicable, has opted out of) the institution's discretionary overdraft service for some, but not all transactions (e.g., the consumer has not opted into overdraft services for ATM and one-time debit card transactions), an institution that includes funds from its discretionary overdraft service in the balance should convey that the overdraft funds are not available for all transactions. For example, the institution could state that overdraft funds are not available for ATM and one-time debit card transactions. Similarly, if funds are not available for all transactions pursuant to a service subject to Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026) or a service that transfers funds from another account, a second balance that includes such funds should also indicate this fact.

Automated systems. The balance disclosure requirement applies to any automated system through which the consumer requests a balance, including, but not limited to, a telephone response system, the institution's Internet site, or an ATM. The requirement applies whether the institution discloses a balance through an ATM owned or operated by the institution or through an ATM not owned or operated by the institution (including an ATM operated by a non-depository institution). If the balance is obtained at an ATM, the requirement also applies whether the balance is disclosed on the ATM screen or on a paper receipt.

Effect on State Laws (Regulation DD - Appendix C)

Regulation DD preempts state law requirements that are inconsistent with the requirements of the Truth in Savings Act (TISA) or Regulation DD. A state law is inconsistent if it contradicts the definitions, disclosure requirements, or interest-calculation methods outlined in the act or the regulation. The regulation also provides that interested parties may request the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau to determine whether a state law is inconsistent with the TISA.

Examination Objectives

- To determine the institution's compliance with Regulation DD, including the requirements to provide full account disclosures (for example, fee schedules) to consumers to open an account and upon request and including the requirements covering overdraft payment disclosures and advertising.
- To assess the quality of the institution's compliance risk management systems and its policies and procedures for implementing Regulation DD.
- To determine the reliance that can be placed on the institution's internal controls and procedures for monitoring the institution's compliance with Regulation DD.
- To direct corrective action when violations of law are identified or when the institution's policies or internal controls are deficient.

Management- and Policy-Related Examination Procedures

1. Determine the types of deposit accounts offered by the institution to consumers (including accounts usually offered to commercial customers that may occasionally be offered to consumers) as well as the characteristics of each type of deposit account (for example, bonuses offered, minimum balances, balance-computation method, frequency of interest crediting, fixed or variable rates, fees imposed, and frequency of periodic statements).

   [Click&type]

2. Review relevant written policies and procedures, management's self-assessments, consumer complaints, and any compliance audit material including work papers and reports to determine whether:
   - The scope of the audit addresses all provisions as applicable.
   - Management has taken corrective actions to followup on previously identified deficiencies.
   - The testing includes samples covering all product types and decision centers.
   - The work performed is accurate.

[1] These reflect FFIEC-approved procedures.

[2] The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's implementing regulation is cited in these procedures. However, if examiners cite violations by a credit union, examiners should cite violations of the National Credit Union Administration's implementing regulation, 12 CFR Part 707.

- Significant deficiencies and their causes are included in reports to management and to the Board of Directors, as appropriate.
- The frequency of review is appropriate.

[Click&type]

3. Through discussions with management and review of available information, determine whether the institution's internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance in Regulation DD area under review. Consider the following:
   - Organization charts;
   - Process flowcharts;
   - Policies and procedures;
   - Account documentation;
   - Checklists; and
   - Computer program documentation.

   [Click&type]

4. Through a review of the institution's training materials, determine whether:
   - The institution provides appropriate training to individuals responsible for Regulation DD compliance and operational procedures.
   - The training is comprehensive and covers the various aspects of Regulation DD that apply to the individual institution's product offerings and operations.
   - The training includes the timing requirements of 12 CFR 1030.4(a)(2) to provide disclosure information (e.g., terms, conditions, and fees) to a consumer upon a request, whether or not the consumer is an existing or a prospective customer. Review whether the training instructs all employees, including branch employees, to provide such disclosures at the time of the request if the consumer makes the request in person or within ten business days if the consumer is not present when making the request.

5. Determine the extent and adequacy of the institution's policies, procedures, and practices for ensuring compliance with the regulation. In particular, verify that:
   - Account disclosure information is available to be provided to all consumers within the appropriate time frames. This requirement pertains to all consumer requesters whether or not the consumer is an existing customer or a prospective customer.

- Advance notice is given for any changes in terms required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1030.4 and that exceptions to the advance notice requirements are limited to those set forth in 12 CFR 1030.5(a)(2).
- If periodic statements are given, the statements disclose the required information, including the annual percentage yield earned, the amount of interest, fees imposed, and the statement's covered time period.
- The institution's methods of paying interest are permissible. Review the dates on which interest begins to accrue on deposits to accounts, and determine whether hold times comply with the Expedited Funds Availability Act.
- The institution's advertising policies are consistent with the requirements of the regulation, including advertising requirements for overdraft services.
- Evidence of compliance is retained for a minimum of two years after the date disclosures are required to be made or action is required to be taken.
- The periodic statements separately disclose the total fees and charges for payment of items that overdraw the account and for returning items unpaid.These disclosures must be provided for the statement period and the calendar year-to-date.

Transaction-Related Examination Procedures

If upon conclusion of the management and policy-related examination procedures, procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, conduct the transaction testing, as necessary, using the following examination procedures. Use examiner judgment in deciding the size of each sample of deposit account disclosures, notices, and advertisements. Increase the sample size until you are confident that all aspects of the institution's activities and policies that are subject to the regulation are reviewed.

Fees for paying overdrafts and for returning items unpaid are not fees of the same type and must be separately distinguished (Staff Commentary 12 CFR 1030.6(a)(3)-2(iv)).
    - The total number of days in the statement period or the beginning and ending dates of the period (12 CFR 1030.6(a)(4)).

[Click&type]

32. For deposit accounts that require a minimum balance to earn interest, determine whether the institution is using the same method to determine the minimum balance as it uses to determine the balance on which interest is calculated 12 CFR 1030.7(a)(2)).

NOTE: An institution may use an additional method that is unequivocally beneficial to the consumer 12 CFR 1030.7(a)(2)).

[Click&type]

33. If an institution chooses not to pay accrued interest if the consumer closes an account prior to the date accrued interest is credited, determine whether the institution disclosed this practice in the initial account disclosures (Staff Commentary 12 CFR 1030.7(b)-3).

NOTE: An institution is not required to compound or credit interest at any particular frequency but, if it does, it may compound or credit interest annually, semi-annually, quarterly, monthly, daily, continuously, or on any other basis (12 CFR 1030.7(b) and Staff Commentary 12 CFR 1030.7(b)-1).

    - If the advertisement uses the abbreviation “APY,” the term “annual percentage yield” is stated at least once in the advertisement.
    - If the advertisement states the interest rate, it uses the term “interest rate” in conjunction with, but not be more conspicuous than, the annual percentage yield to which it relates.

- Rates are rounded to the nearest one-hundredth of one percentage point (.01%) and expressed to two decimal places.

[Click&type]

Required Additional Disclosures

44. With the exception of broadcast, electronic, or outdoor media, telephone-response machines, and indoor signs, if the annual percentage yield is stated in the advertisement, determine whether it includes the following information, as applicable, clearly and conspicuously:

- Interest is not compounded annually or more frequently.
- Interest is required to be paid out at least annually.
- The APY is determined in accordance with Section E of Appendix A of Regulation DD.

Bonuses

45. For advertisements that state a bonus (a premium, gift, award or other consideration worth more than $10), determine whether they state all of the following:
    - The “annual percentage yield,” using that term (12 CFR 1030.8(d)(1)).
    - The time requirement to obtain the bonus (12 CFR 1030.8(d)(2)).
    - The minimum balance required to obtain the bonus (12 CFR 1030.8(d)(3)).

Exemptions for certain advertisements

46. Advertisements made through broadcast, electronic, or outdoor media, and telephone-response machines are exempted from some of the Regulation DD advertising requirements and are only required to contain certain information. (This exemption does not apply to Internet or email advertisements.) Determine whether advertisements made in these media contain the following information as applicable, clearly and conspicuously (12 CFR 1030.8(e)(1) and Staff Commentary 12 CFR 1030.8(e)(1)(i)-1):

Unfair, Deceptive, or Abusive Acts or Practices

Unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts and practices (UDAAPs) can cause significant financial injury to consumers, erode consumer confidence, and undermine the financial marketplace. Under the Dodd-Frank Act, it is unlawful for any provider of consumer financial products or services or a service provider to engage in any unfair, deceptive or abusive act or practice.[1] The Act also provides CFPB with rule-making authority and, with respect to entities within its jurisdiction, enforcement authority to prevent unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices in connection with any transaction with a consumer for a consumer financial product or service, or the offering of a consumer financial product or service.[2] In addition, CFPB has supervisory authority for detecting and assessing risks to consumers and to markets for consumer financial products and services.[3]

As examiners review products or services, such as deposit products or lending activities, they generally should identify the risks of harm to consumers that are particular to those activities. Examiners also should review products that combine features and terms in a manner that can increase the difficulty of consumer understanding of the overall costs or risks of the product and the potential harm to the consumer associated with the product.

These examination procedures provide general guidance on:

- The principles of unfairness, deception, and abuse in the context of offering and providing consumer financial products and services;
- Assessing the risk that an institution's practices may be unfair, deceptive, or abusive;
- Identifying unfair, deceptive or abusive acts or practices (including by providing examples of potentially unfair or deceptive acts and practices); and
- Understanding the interplay between unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices and other consumer protection and antidiscrimination statutes.

Unfair Acts or Practices

The standard for unfairness in the Dodd-Frank Act is that an act or practice is unfair when:

(1) It causes or is likely to cause substantial injury to consumers;

(2) The injury is not reasonably avoidable by consumers; and

1 Dodd-Frank Act, Title X, Subtitle C, Sec. 1036; PL 111-203 (July 21, 2010).

2 Sec. 1031 of the Dodd-Frank Act. The principles of "unfair" and "deceptive" practices in the Act are similar to those under Sec. 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (FTC Act). The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) and federal banking regulators have applied these standards through case law, official policy statements, guidance, examination procedures, and enforcement actions that may inform CFPB.

3 Dodd-Frank Act, Secs. 1024; 1025(b)(1); 1026(b) of the Act.

(3) The injury is not outweighed by countervailing benefits to consumers or to competition.[4]

- The act or practice must cause or be likely to cause substantial injury to consumers. Substantial injury usually involves monetary harm. Monetary harm includes, for example, costs or fees paid by consumers as a result of an unfair practice.[5] An act or practice that causes a small amount of harm to a large number of people may be deemed to cause substantial injury. Foregone monetary benefits or denial of access to products or services, like that which may result from discriminatory behavior, may also cause substantial injury.

  Actual injury is not required in every case. A significant risk of concrete harm is also sufficient. However, trivial or merely speculative harms are typically insufficient for a finding of substantial injury. Emotional impact and other more subjective types of harm also will not ordinarily amount to substantial injury. Nevertheless, in certain circumstances, such as unreasonable debt collection harassment or discriminatory conduct, emotional impacts or dignitary harms may amount to or contribute to substantial injury.

- Consumers must not be reasonably able to avoid the injury. An act or practice is not considered unfair if consumers may reasonably avoid injury. Consumers cannot reasonably avoid injury if the act or practice interferes with their ability to effectively make decisions or to take action to avoid injury. Normally the marketplace is self-correcting; it is governed by consumer choice and the ability of individual consumers to make their own private decisions without regulatory intervention. If material information about a product, such as pricing, is modified after the consumer has committed to purchasing the product, or withheld, the consumer cannot reasonably avoid the injury. Moreover, consumers cannot avoid injury if they are coerced into purchasing unwanted products or services or if a transaction occurs without their knowledge or consent. Consumers cannot reasonably avoid discrimination.

  A key question is not whether a consumer could have made a better choice. Rather, the question is whether an act or practice hinders a consumer's decision-making. For example, not having access to important information could prevent consumers from comparing available alternatives, choosing those that are most desirable to them, and avoiding those that are inadequate or unsatisfactory. In addition, if almost all market participants engage in a practice, a consumer's incentive to search elsewhere for better terms is reduced, and the practice may not be reasonably avoidable.[6]

[4] The standard for unfairness in the Dodd-Frank Act has the same three-part test as the FTC Act. This standard was first stated in the FTC Policy Statement on Unfairness (Dec. 17, 1980), available at: http://www.ftc.gov/bcp/policystmt/ad-unfair.htm. Congress later amended the FTC Act to include this specific standard in the Act itself. 15 U.S.C. § 45(n).

[5] FTC Policy Statement on Unfairness, at p. 3.

[6] See Credit Practices Rule, 49 Fed. Reg. 7740, 7746 (1984).

For an injury to be reasonably avoidable, consumers must have practical means to avoid it, and the actions that a consumer is expected to take to avoid injury must be reasonable. While a consumer might avoid harm by hiring independent experts to test products in advance or by bringing legal claims for damages in every case of harm, these actions generally would be too expensive to be practical for individual consumers and, therefore, are not reasonable. There are many instances where consumers simply have no mechanism to avoid the injury. For example, consumers typically cannot avoid the harms of discrimination.

- The injury must not be outweighed by countervailing benefits to consumers or competition.

  To be unfair, the act or practice must be injurious in its net effects — that is, the injury must not be outweighed by any offsetting consumer or competitive benefits that also are produced by the act or practice. Offsetting consumer or competitive benefits of an act or practice may include lower prices to the consumer or a wider availability of products and services resulting from competition.

  Costs that would be incurred for measures to prevent the injury also are taken into account in determining whether an act or practice is unfair. These costs may include the costs to the institution in taking preventive measures and the costs to society as a whole of any increased burden and similar matters.

Public policy, as established by statute, regulation, judicial decision, or agency determination, may be considered with all other evidence to determine whether an act or practice is unfair. However, public policy considerations by themselves may not serve as the primary basis for determining that an act or practice is unfair.

Examples

The examples described below stem from federal enforcement actions. They provide insight into practices that have been alleged to be unfair by other regulators and may inform CFPB's determinations. However, the particular facts in a case are crucial to a determination of unfairness. It is important to bear in mind that a change in facts could change the appropriate determination. Moreover, the brief summaries below do not present all of the material facts relevant to the determinations in each case. The examples show how the unfairness standard may be applied.

Refusing to release lien after consumer makes final payment on a mortgage.[7] The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) brought an enforcement action against a mortgage company based on allegations, described below, that the company repeatedly failed to release liens after consumers fully paid the amount due on their mortgages.

[7] FTC v. Capital City Mortgage Corp., Civil No. 98 CV-237 (D.D.C. Feb. 2005), available at http://www.ftc.gov/opa/2005/02/capitalcity.shtm.

- Substantial injury. Consumers sustained economic injury when the mortgage servicer did not release the liens on their properties after the consumers had repaid the total amount due on the mortgages.

- Not outweighed by benefits. Countervailing benefits to competition or consumers did not result from the servicer's alleged failure to appropriately service the mortgage loan and release the lien promptly.

- Not reasonably avoidable. Consumers had no way to know in advance of obtaining the loan that the mortgage servicer would not release the lien after full payment. Moreover, consumers generally cannot avoid the harm caused by an improper practice of a mortgage servicer because the servicer is chosen by the owner of the loan, not the borrower. Thus, consumers cannot choose their loan servicer and cannot change loan servicers when they are dissatisfied with the quality of the loan servicing.

Dishonoring credit card convenience checks without notice.[8] The Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS) and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) brought enforcement actions against a credit card issuer that sent convenience checks with stated credit limits and expiration dates to customers. For a significant percentage of consumers, the issuer reduced credit lines after the checks were presented, and then the issuer dishonored the consumers' checks.

- Substantial injury. Consumers paid returned-check fees and may have experienced a negative impact on credit history.

- Not outweighed by benefits. The card issuer later reduced credit limits based on credit reviews. Based on the particular facts involved in the case, the harm to consumers from the dishonored convenience checks outweighed any benefit of using new credit reviews.

- Not reasonably avoidable. Consumers reasonably relied on their existing credit limits and expiration dates on the checks when deciding to use them for a payment. Consumers had received no notice that the checks they used were being dishonored until they learned from the payees. Thus, consumers could not reasonably have avoided the injury.

Processing payments for companies engaged in fraudulent activities.[9] The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) brought an enforcement action in a case involving a bank that maintained deposit account relations with telemarketers and payment processors, based on the following allegations. The telemarketers regularly deposited large numbers of remotely created checks drawn against consumers' accounts. A large percentage of the checks were not authorized by consumers. The bank failed to establish appropriate policies and procedures to prevent, detect, or remedy such activities.

[9] In re Wachovia Bank, National Association, available at http://www.occ.treas.gov

- Substantial injury. Consumers lost money from fraudulent checks created remotely and drawn against their accounts.

- Not outweighed by benefits. The cost to the bank of establishing a minimum level of due diligence, monitoring, and response procedures sufficient to remedy the problem would have been far less than the amount of injury to consumers that resulted from the bank's avoiding those costs.

- Not reasonably avoidable. Consumers could not avoid the harm because the harm resulted principally from transactions to which the consumers had not consented.

Deceptive Acts or Practices

A representation, omission, act, or practice is deceptive when

(1) The representation, omission, act, or practice misleads or is likely to mislead the consumer;

(2) The consumer's interpretation of the representation, omission, act, or practice is reasonable under the circumstances; and

(3) The misleading representation, omission, act, or practice is material.[10]

- There must be a representation, omission, act, or practice that misleads or is likely to mislead the consumer.

  Deception is not limited to situations in which a consumer has already been misled. Instead, an act or practice may be deceptive if it is likely to mislead consumers.

  It is necessary to evaluate an individual statement, representation, or omission not in isolation, but rather in the context of the entire advertisement, transaction, or course of dealing, to determine whether the overall net impression is misleading or deceptive. A representation may be an express or implied claim or promise, and it may be written or oral. If material information is necessary to prevent a consumer from being misled, it may be deceptive to omit that information.

  Written disclosures may be insufficient to correct a misleading statement or representation, particularly where the consumer is directed away from qualifying limitations in the text or is counseled that reading the disclosures is unnecessary. Likewise, oral or fine print disclosures or contract disclosures may be insufficient to cure a misleading headline or a prominent written representation. Similarly, a deceptive act or practice may not be cured by subsequent truthful disclosures.

  Acts or practices that may be deceptive include: making misleading cost or price claims; offering to provide a product or service that is not in fact available; using bait-and-switch techniques; omitting material limitations or conditions from an offer; or failing to provide the promised services.

[10] See FTC Policy Statement on Deception, available at http://www.ftc.gov/bcp/policystmt/ad-decept.htm. Examiners should be informed by the FTC's standard for deception.

The FTC's "four Ps" test can assist in the evaluation of whether a representation, omission, act, or practice is likely to mislead:

- o Is the statement prominent enough for the consumer to notice?
- o Is the information presented in an easy-to-understand format that does not contradict other information in the package and at a time when the consumer's attention is not distracted elsewhere?
- o Is the placement of the information in a location where consumers can be expected to look or hear?
- o Finally, is the information in close proximity to the claim it qualifies?[11]

- The representation, omission, act, or practice must be considered from the perspective of the reasonable consumer.

  In determining whether an act or practice is misleading, one also must consider whether the consumer's interpretation of or reaction to the representation, omission, act, or practice is reasonable under the circumstances. In other words, whether an act or practice is deceptive depends on how a reasonable member of the target audience would interpret the representation. When representations or marketing practices target a specific audience, such as older Americans, young people, or financially distressed consumers, the communication must be reviewed from the point of view of a reasonable member of that group.

  Moreover, a representation may be deceptive if the majority of consumers in the target class do not share the consumer's interpretation, so long as a significant minority of such consumers is misled. When a seller's representation conveys more than one meaning to reasonable consumers, one of which is false, the seller is liable for the misleading interpretation.

  Exaggerated claims or "puffery," however, are not deceptive if the claims would not be taken seriously by a reasonable consumer.

- The representation, omission, or practice must be material.

  A representation, omission, act, or practice is material if it is likely to affect a consumer's choice of, or conduct regarding, the product or service. Information that is important to consumers is material.

  Certain categories of information are presumed to be material. In general, information about the central characteristics of a product or service – such as costs, benefits, or restrictions on the use or availability – is presumed to be material. Express claims made with respect to a financial product or service are presumed material. Implied claims are presumed to be material when evidence shows that the institution intended to make the claim (even though intent to deceive is not necessary for deception to exist).

Claims made with knowledge that they are false are presumed to be material. Omissions will be presumed to be material when the financial institution knew or should have known that the consumer needed the omitted information to evaluate the product or service.

If a representation or claim is not presumed to be material, it still would be considered material if there is evidence that it is likely to be considered important by consumers.

Examples

The examples described below stem from federal enforcement actions. They provide insight into practices that have been alleged to be deceptive by other regulators and may inform CFPB's determinations. However, as with unfairness, the particular facts in a case are crucial to a determination of deception. It is important to bear in mind that a change in facts could change the appropriate determination. Moreover, the brief summaries below do not present all of the material facts relevant to the determinations in each case. The examples show how the deception standard may be applied.

Inadequate disclosure of material lease terms in television advertising.[12] The FTC brought actions against vehicle leasing companies alleging that their television advertisements represented that consumers could lease vehicles for "$0 down" when advertising a monthly lease payment. However, the FTC alleged that the "blur" of "unreadable fine print" that flashed on the screen at the end of the advertisement disclosed costs of at least $1,000. The settlements prohibited the vehicle leasing companies from misrepresenting the amount consumers must pay when signing the lease.

In addition, the FTC required that if the companies make any representation about the amounts due at lease signing, or that there is "no down payment," the companies must make an equally prominent (readable and audible) disclosure of the total amount of all fees due when consumers sign the lease.

- Representation or omission likely to mislead. The television advertisements featured prominent statements of "no money down" or "$0 down" at lease signing. The advertisement also contained, at the bottom of the screen, a "blur" of small print in which disclosures of various costs required by Regulation M (the Consumer Leasing Act) were made. The FTC alleged that the disclosures were inadequate because they were not clear, prominent, or audible to consumers.

[12] In the matters of Mazda Motor of America, Inc.; Mitsubishi Motor Sales of America, Inc.; American Honda Motor Company, Inc.; General Motors Corporation; American Isuzu Motors, Inc., available at http://www.ftc.gov/opa/1997/02/petapp09.shtm.

- Reasonable consumer perspective. A reasonable consumer would believe that he did not have to put any money down and that all he owed was the regular monthly payment.
- Material representation. The stated "no money down" or "$0 down" plus the low monthly lease payment were material representations to consumers. The fact that the additional, material costs were disclosed at signing of the lease did not cure the deceptive failure to disclose in the television advertising, the FTC claimed.

Misrepresentation about loan terms.[13] In 2004, the FTC sued a mortgage broker advertising mortgage refinance loans at "3.5% fixed payment 30-year loan" or "3.5% fixed payment for 30 years," implying that the offer was for a 30-year loan with a 3.5% fixed interest rate. Instead, the FTC claimed that the broker offered adjustable rate mortgages (ARMs) with an option to pay various amounts, including a minimum monthly payment that represented only a portion of the required interest. As a result, unpaid interest was added to the principal of the loan, resulting in negative amortization.[14]

- Practice likely to mislead. The FTC claimed that the advertisements were misleading because they compared payments on a mortgage that fully amortized to payments on a non-amortizing loan with payments that increased after the first year. In addition, the FTC claimed that after application, the broker provided Truth in Lending Act (TILA) disclosures that misstated the annual percentage rate (APR) and that failed to state that the loan was a variable rate loan.
- Reasonable consumer perspective. It was reasonable for consumers to believe that they would obtain fixed-rate mortgages, based on the representations.
- Material representation. The representations were material because consumers relied on them when making the decision to refinance their fully amortizing 30-year fixed loans. As a result, the consumers ended up with adjustable rate mortgages that would negatively amortize if they made payments at the stated 3.5% payment rate.

[13] FTC v. Chase Financial Funding, Inc., No. SACV04-549 (C.D.Cal. 2004), Stipulated Preliminary Injunction, available at http://www.ftc.gov/os/caselist/0223287/0223287.shtm.

[14] In 2008, amendments to the Truth in Lending Act's Regulation Z were adopted to prohibit certain advertising practices, such as misleading advertising of fixed rates and payments, for credit secured by a dwelling. Similar practices could be identified as deceptive in other product lines. See 73 Fed. Reg. 44522 (July 30, 2008) (promulgating 12 CFR 226.24), which has since been recodified as 12 CFR 1026.24.

Abusive Acts or Practices

The Dodd-Frank Act makes it unlawful for any covered person or service provider to engage in an "abusive act or practice."[15] An abusive act or practice:

- Materially interferes with the ability of a consumer to understand a term or condition of a consumer financial product or service or

- Takes unreasonable advantage of:

  - A lack of understanding on the part of the consumer of the material risks, costs, or conditions of the product or service;

  - The inability of the consumer to protect its interests in selecting or using a consumer financial product or service; or

  - The reasonable reliance by the consumer on a covered person to act in the interests of the consumer.

Although abusive acts also may be unfair or deceptive, examiners should be aware that the legal standards for abusive, unfair, and deceptive each are separate.

The Role of Consumer Complaints in Identifying Unfair, Deceptive, or Abusive Acts or Practices

Consumer complaints play a key role in the detection of unfair, deceptive, or abusive practices. Consumer complaints have been an essential source of information for examinations, enforcement, and rule-making for regulators. As a general matter, consumer complaints can indicate weaknesses in elements of the institution's compliance management system, such as training, internal controls, or monitoring.

While the absence of complaints does not ensure that unfair, deceptive, or abusive practices are not occurring, complaints may be one indication of UDAAPs. For example, the presence of complaints alleging that consumers did not understand the terms of a product or service may be a red flag indicating that examiners should conduct a detailed review of the relevant practice. This is especially true when numerous consumers make similar complaints about the same product or service. Because the perspective of a reasonable consumer is one of the tests for evaluating whether a representation, omission, act, or practice is potentially deceptive, consumer complaints alleging misrepresentations or misunderstanding may provide a window into the perspective of the reasonable consumer.

When reviewing complaints against an institution, examiners should consider complaints lodged against subsidiaries, affiliates, and third parties regarding the products and services offered through the institution or using the institution's name. In particular, examiners should determine whether an institution itself receives, monitors, and responds to complaints filed against subsidiaries, affiliates, and third parties. Consumers can file complaints at a number of entities: the institution itself, the Better Business Bureau, State Attorneys General, the FTC's Consumer Sentinel, the CFPB Consumer Response Center, other Federal and State agencies, or on-line consumer complaint boards such as www.ripoffreport.com or www.complaints.com.

Analyzing Complaints

Analysis of consumer complaints may assist in the identification of potential unfair, deceptive, or abusive practices. Examiners should consider the context and reliability of complaints; every complaint does not indicate violation of law. When consumers repeatedly complain about an institution's product or service, however, examiners should flag the issue for possible further review. Moreover, even a single substantive complaint may raise serious concerns that would warrant further review. Complaints that allege, for example, misleading or false statements, or missing disclosure information, may indicate possible unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices needing review.

Another area that could indicate potential unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices is a high volume of charge-backs or refunds for a product or service. While this information is relevant to the consumer complaint analysis, it may not appear in the institution's complaint records.

Relationship to Other Laws

An unfair, deceptive, or abusive act or practice may also violate other federal or state laws. For example, pursuant to the TILA, creditors must "clearly and conspicuously" disclose the costs and terms of credit. An act or practice that does not comply with these provisions of TILA may also be unfair, deceptive, or abusive. Similarly, a discriminatory act or practice that is unfair, deceptive, or abusive may also violate other antidiscrimination laws, such as ECOA.

Conversely, a transaction that is in technical compliance with other federal or state laws may nevertheless violate the prohibition against UDAAPs. For example, an advertisement may comply with TILA's requirements, but contain additional statements that are untrue or misleading, and compliance with TILA's disclosure requirements does not insulate the rest of the advertisement from the possibility of being deceptive. A discriminatory act or practice is not shielded from the possibility of being unfair, deceptive or abusive even when fair lending laws do not apply to the conduct. For example, not allowing African-American consumers to open deposit accounts, or subjecting African-American consumers to different requirements to open deposit accounts, may be an unfair practice even in those instances when ECOA does not apply to this type of transaction.

Examination Objectives

- To assess the quality of the regulated entity's compliance risk management systems, including internal controls and policies and procedures, for avoiding unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices (UDAAP).
- To identify acts or practices that materially increase the risk of consumers being treated in an unfair, deceptive, or abusive manner, including discriminatory acts or practices.
- To gather facts that help determine whether a regulated entity engages in acts or practices when offering or providing consumer financial products or services that are likely to be unfair, deceptive, or abusive.
- To determine, in consultation with Headquarters, whether an unfair, deceptive or abusive act or practice has occurred and whether further supervisory or enforcement actions are appropriate.

General Guidance

Based on the results of the risk assessment of the entity, examiners should review for potential unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices, taking into account an entity's marketing programs, product and service mix, customer base, and other factors, as appropriate. Even if the risk assessment has not identified potential unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices, examiners should be alert throughout an examination for situations that warrant review.

1. Document Review

To initially identify potential areas of UDAAP concerns, obtain and review copies of the following to the extent relevant to the examination

a. Training materials.

b. Lists of products and services, including descriptions, fee structure, disclosures, notices, agreements, and periodic and account statements.

c. Procedure manuals and written policies, including those for servicing and collections.

d. Minutes of the meetings of the Board of Directors and of management committees, including those related to compliance.

e. Internal control monitoring and auditing materials.

f. Compensation arrangements, including incentive programs for employees and third parties.

g. Documentation related to new product development, including relevant meeting minutes of Board of Directors, and of compliance and new product committees.

h. Marketing programs, advertisements, and other promotional material in all forms of media (including print, radio, television, telephone, Internet, or social media advertising).

i. Scripts and recorded calls for telemarketing and collections.

j. Organizational charts, including those related to affiliate relationships and work processes.

k. Agreements with affiliates and third parties that interact with consumers on behalf of the entity.

l. Consumer complaint files.

m. Documentation related to software development and testing, as applicable.

n. Documentation regarding the use of models, algorithms, and decision-making processes used in connection with consumer financial products and services.

o. Information collected, retained or used regarding customer demographics, including the demographics of customers using various products or services, and the breakdown of consumer demographics for various product uses, fees, revenue sources and costs, or the impacts of various products and services on specific demographics.

p. Any demographic research or analysis relating to marketing or advertising of consumer financial products or services.

Management and Policy-Related Examination Procedures

1. Identify potential UDAAP concerns by reviewing all relevant written policies and procedures, customer complaints received by the entity or by the CFPB, internal and external audit reports, statistical and management reports, and examination reports. Determine whether:

a. The scope of the entity's compliance audit includes a review of potential unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices.

b. The compliance audit work is performed consistent with the audit plan and scope.

c. The frequency and depth of audit review is appropriate to the nature of the activities and size of the entity.

d. Management and the Board of Directors are made aware of and review significant deficiencies and their causes.

e. Management has taken corrective actions to follow up on any identified deficiencies.

f. The entity's compliance programs ensure that policies are being followed through its sampling of relevant product types and decision centers, including sales, processing, and underwriting.

g. The entity has a process to respond to consumer complaints in a timely manner and determine whether consumer complaints raise potential UDAAP concerns.

h. The entity has been subject to any enforcement actions or has been investigated by a regulatory or law enforcement agency for violations of consumer protection laws or regulations that may indicate potential UDAAP concerns.

i. The entity has a process to prevent discrimination in relation to all aspects of consumer financial products or services the entity offers or provides, which includes the evaluation of all policies, procedures and processes for discrimination prior to implementation or making changes, and continued monitoring for discrimination after implementation.

j. The entity's compliance program includes an established process for periodic analysis and monitoring of all decision-making processes used in connection with consumer financial products or services, and a process to take corrective action to address any potential UDAAP concerns related to their use, including discrimination.

2. Through discussions with management and a review of available information, determine whether the entity's internal controls are adequate to prevent unfair, deceptive or abusive acts or practices. Consider whether:

a. The compliance management program includes measures aimed at avoiding unfair, deceptive, or abusive practices, including:

- Organization charts and process flowcharts;
- Policies and procedures; and
- Monitoring and audit procedures.

b. The entity conducts prior UDAAP reviews of advertising and promotional materials, including promotional materials and marketing scripts for new products.

a. The entity does not underwrite a given credit product on the basis of ability to repay.

b. A product's profitability depends significantly on penalty fees or "back-end" rather than upfront fees.

Transaction-Related Examination Procedures

If upon conclusion of the management and policy-related examination procedures, procedural weaknesses, or other UDAAP risks require further investigation, conduct transaction testing, as necessary, using the following examination procedures. Use judgment in deciding to what extent to sample individual products, services, or marketing programs. Increase the sample size to achieve confidence that all aspects of the entity's products and services are reviewed sufficiently. Consult with Headquarters to obtain assistance with the sampling process.

1. Marketing and Disclosures

Through a review of marketing materials, customer agreements, and other disclosures, determine whether, before the consumer chooses to obtain the product or service:

a. All representations are factually based.

b. All materials describe clearly, prominently, and accurately:

- costs, benefits, and other material terms of the products or services being offered;
- related products or services being offered either as an option or required to obtained certain terms; and

  - material limitations or conditions on the terms or availability of products and services, such as time limitations for favorable rates, promotional features, expiration dates, prerequisites for obtaining particular products or services, or conditions for canceling services.

c. The customer's attention is drawn to key terms, including limitations and conditions, that are important to enable the consumer to make an informed decision.

d. All materials clearly and prominently disclose the fees, penalties, and other charges that may be imposed and the reason for the imposition.

e. Contracts clearly inform customers of contract provisions that permit changes in terms and conditions of the product or service.

f. All materials clearly communicate the costs, benefits, availability, and other terms in language that can be understood when products are targeted to particular populations, such as reverse mortgage loans for the elderly.

g. Materials do not misrepresent costs, conditions, limitations, or other terms either affirmatively or by omission.

h. The entity avoids advertising terms that are generally not available to the typical targeted consumer.

i. Marketing or advertising do not improperly target or exclude consumers on a discriminatory basis, including through digital advertising.

2. Availability of Terms or Services as Advertised

Evaluate whether product(s) and service(s) that consumers are receiving are consistent with the disclosures and policies. For each product and service being reviewed, select a sample that:

a. Is sufficient in size to reach a supportable conclusion about such consistency;

b. Includes, as appropriate, transactions from different origination and underwriting channels — for example, different geographical areas or different sectors of the entity's organization structure;

c. Includes approved and/or denied accounts; and

d. Identifies the decision-making processes used to determine approval or denial for a product and the terms of the offer, as well as the corresponding inputs used in the decision-making processes for each account in the sample.

Determine whether:

a. Consumers are reasonably able to obtain the products and services, including interest rates or rewards, as represented by the entity.

b. The entity offers products and services to consumers in a manner that prevents discrimination.

c. Consumers receive the specific product or service that they request.

d. Counter-offers clearly, prominently, and accurately explain the difference between the original product or services requested and the one being offered.

e. Actual practices are consistent with stated policies, procedures, or account disclosures.

3. Availability of Actual Credit to the Consumer

Evaluate whether the entity represents the amount of useable credit that the consumer will receive in a truthful way. Consider whether:

a. The available credit is sufficient to allow the consumer to use the product as advertised and disclosed to the consumer.

b. The fees and charges, typically imposed on the average targeted customer, both initially and throughout the term of the loan, remain in a range that does not prevent the availability of credit.

c. The entity honors convenience checks when used by the customer in a manner consistent with introductory or promotional materials and disclosures.

4. Employees and Third Parties Interacting with Consumers

Evaluate how the entity monitors the activities of employees and third-party contractors, marketing sales personnel, vendors, and service providers to ensure they do not engage in unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices with respect to consumer interactions. Interview employees and third parties, as appropriate. Specifically, consider whether:

a. The entity ensures that employees and third parties who market or promote products or services are adequately trained so that they do not engage in unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices, including discrimination.

b. The entity conducts periodic evaluations or audits to check whether employees or third parties follow the entity's training and procedures and has a disciplinary policy in place to deal with any deficiencies.

c. The entity reviews compensation arrangements for employees, third-party contractors, and service providers to ensure that they do not create unintended incentives to engage in unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices, particularly with respect to product sales, loan originations, and collections.

d. Performance evaluation criteria do not create unintended incentives to engage in unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices, including criteria for sales personnel based on sales volume, size, terms of sale, or account performance.

e. The entity implements and maintains effective risk and supervisory controls to select and manage third-party contractors and service providers.

f. The entity has a process to take prompt corrective action if the decision-making processes it uses produce deficiencies or discriminatory results.

5. Servicing and Collections

Evaluate whether servicing and collections practices raise potential UDAAP concerns, by considering whether:

a. The entity has policies detailing servicing and collections practices and has monitoring systems to prevent unfair, deceptive or abusive acts or practices.

b. Call centers, either operated by the entity itself or by third parties, effectively respond to consumers' calls, including calls from consumers with limited English proficiency.

c. The entity ensures that employees and third party contractors:

- represent fees or charges on periodic statements in a manner that is not misleading;
- post and credit consumer payments in a timely manner;
- apply payments in a manner that does not unnecessarily increase customer payments, without clear justification;
- only charge customers for products and services, such as insurance or credit protection programs, that are specifically agreed to;
- mail periodic statements in time to provide the consumer ample opportunity to avoid late payments; and
- do not represent to consumers that they may pay less than the minimum amount without clearly and prominently disclosing any fees for paying the reduced amount.

d. The entity ensures that employees and third party contractors refrain from engaging in servicing or collection practices that lead to differential treatment or disproportionately adverse impacts on a discriminatory basis.

e. The entity has policies to ensure compliance with the standards under the Fair Debt Collections Practices Act to prevent abusive, deceptive, or unfair debt collection practices.

f. Employees and third party contractors clearly indicate to consumers that they are calling about the collection of a debt.

g. Employees and third party contractors do not disclose the existence of a consumer's debt to the public without the consent of the consumer, except as permitted by law.

h. The entity avoids repeated telephone calls to consumers that annoy, abuse, or harass any person at the number called.

6. Interviews with Consumers

If potential UDAAP issues are identified that would necessitate interviews with consumers, consult with regional management who will confer with Headquarters.

Entity Name: Prepared by:
Docket Number: Date:

Consumer Risk Assessment

CFPB's Risk Assessment process is designed to evaluate on a consistent basis the extent of risk to consumers arising from the activities of a particular supervised entity and to identify the sources of that risk. "Risk to consumers" for the purpose of the CFPB Risk Assessment is the potential for consumers to suffer economic loss or other legally-cognizable injury as a result of a violation of Federal consumer financial law. To determine risk to consumers, the Risk Assessment considers the interaction of two broad sets of factors: the inherent risks in a particular line of business or the entity as a whole and the quality of controls implemented by the entity to manage and mitigate those risks. As noted below, the Risk Assessment will be used during CFPB's supervision planning process to set priorities and focus examination and supervision activities.

Inherent risk includes factors that increase the potential for unfair, deceptive or abusive acts or practices, for discrimination, or for violations of other Federal consumer financial laws. It also includes factors that increase the compliance management challenges of a business and thereby increase the risk of such violations. The quality of risk controls includes factors related to both managing and mitigating specific inherent risks as well as the strength of an entity's overall system of compliance management.

The questions and considerations in this template may be used to conduct risk assessments of individual lines of business, supervised entities as a whole, and groups of affiliated entities when feasible and applicable. Assessments of individual lines of business in large complex entities may be considered together to reach conclusions about the entity as a whole.

The risk assessment is not a determination of whether a violation of law exists.

Using the Risk Assessment Template

The template provides a series of factors that bear on inherent risk and relevant risk controls. Examiners conducting the assessment should rate each relevant factor (low, moderate, or high inherent risk; strong, adequate, or weak risk controls and mitigation), and comment briefly on the basis for each rating and issues to consider during the examination. The factor ratings, taken as a whole, result in the Risk Summary, which is a conclusion about whether the overall risk to consumers is low, moderate, or high. The Risk Summary also includes a judgment about the expected change in the overall risk (decreasing, increasing, or stable/unchanged), and when that direction last changed. The Risk Summary, and the basis for it, will be included with the Examination Report.

The factor ratings and comments should be used to inform the Examination Scope. For example, if the nature and structure of certain products point to high inherent risk and the quality of risk controls is only adequate, then the examination scope should likely include a review of those products and the related compliance controls. The magnitude and severity of potential consumer harm arising from particular risks should be considered when setting priorities for review.

There may be other institution or industry-specific risk factors beyond those included in the template that should be considered when assessing risk to consumers. Examiners should use their knowledge and judgment to identify risks that are unique to a particular entity or its specialized business focus.

Entity Name: Prepared by:
Docket Number: Date:

The sections below include (1) factors that specifically increase the risk that unfair, deceptive, abusive acts or practices, discrimination, or other violations of Federal consumer financial law will occur and (2) factors that generally increase the difficulty of managing compliance in an organization.

Inherent Risk
Comments in each section should identify any specific factors present in the line of business or entity being assessed, note the potential UDAAP, discrimination, or other regulatory issues to review during an examination, and comment briefly on the basis for the rating assigned to that factor. The rating should reflect the degree of risk.

Nature and Structure of Products	Comments
The profitability of a product is dependent upon penalty fees (e.g., fees for a late payment, for exceeding a credit limit, or for overdrawing deposited funds).	[Click&type]
The terms of the product are subject to change at the discretion of the entity, and the entity has frequently made changes in the terms.
The entity reverses fees at a significantly higher rate than other entities of similar size offering similar products.
Pricing structure (interest rate, points, fees) and other features and terms are combined in a manner that is likely to make the total costs of the product difficult for consumers to understand.
Products are bundled in a way that may obscure relative costs.
Consumers pay penalties to terminate a relationship, including forgoing money or benefits they would otherwise earn.

Consumers face barriers to information, such as costs to access customer service or information about their account.
Credit decision-makers have wide discretion over setting terms and features of products with inadequate policies and procedures addressing appropriate exercise of that discretion.
Credit products are not underwritten based upon the likely ability of the consumer to make the required (or, in the case of adjustable rate products, potentially required) payments over the term of the loan.

Incentives and Compensation	[Click&type]
Incentives encourage the sale of high-cost products regardless of consumer's request or situation.

Person-to-person sales staff has discretion to set prices (interest rate, points, fees) with inadequate policies and procedures addressing exercise of that discretion.
Person-to-person sales staff is not accountable for product outcomes or performance (default rates, attrition rates, etc.).
Marketing and Advertising
Marketing materials are not written in a language or at a level understandable by targeted consumers.
Key product terms or features are not readily available to consumers.
Targeted consumers would not likely qualify for advertised products or terms.

The following chart is a general guide to assessing the overall risk to consumers. Examiners must apply their judgment in making this determination; however, a risk controls conclusion of "Weak" should result in an overall risk conclusion that is no more favorable than "Moderate," even if the degree of risk is concluded to be "Low."
